Other speakers were Billy Quirk, president of the Screen Club; Samuel H. Trigger of New York, King Baggot, Representative George E. Curran, Marion Howard Brazier, Rose Tapley and George Blaisdell.

Mr. Trigger brought greetings from the exhibitors of New York State and from the national organization. "I want to assure you that we desire the friendship to be closer," he said. "We desire that the friendship between the manufacturer, exchange man and exhibitor be closer than heretofore. We want that friendship to be so strong that no person on the outside can break it." Mr. Trigger closed by inviting all present to attend the New York ball.

The officers of the 1916 executive committee of the ball were Samuel Grant, chairman, who has untiringly disregarded the sun in the time he has devoted to the function; H. I. Wasserman, secretary; I. E. Jones, financial secretary; H. A. Gillman, treasurer; A. F. Washburn, assistant treasurer; Joseph Di Pesa, press representative; Denis Shea, assistant press representative. Mr. Grant was especially strong in praise of his press department. He said it had been remarkably efficient. Mrs. Frank J. Howard was chairman of the ladies' reception committee, assisted by Marion Howard Brazier, Mrs. Brackett and Mrs. Frost of the Film Club; Mrs. A. E. Lord, Mrs. R. W. Drown and Miss Harrison of the Dadmun company.

Berst Reviews Year

Says "Nineteen-Sixteen" Has Established the Pathe Policy—Large Plans for "Nineteen-Seventeen."

NINETEEN sixteen has been a year of great accomplishments for the House of Pathe. A successful one-a-week program of Gold Rooster features was inaugurated and more successful serials and series were released than have ever before been put out by any company. But it is with even greater pride that J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, surveys the situation for the new year, for already plans have been completed for all releases well into the summer of 1917.

Probably the most notable achievement of the old year has been the steady and rapid growth of the program. Seven reels were being released a week when Mr. Berst accepted the call to return to the management of the Pathe Company.

Today the weekly program consists of sixteen reels of quality pictures. It is expected that Pathe's program, now generally considered one of the strongest and most varied in the industry, will be further strengthened as a result of important negotiations now under way.

Of utmost importance, in the eyes of Mr. Berst, is the new sales organization that has been built up by C. R. Seelye, business manager, trained to serve the needs of the exhibitor to the fullest possible extent. Every week has seen a material increase in the business of all of the thirty branches, and Mr. Berst is confident that 1917 will even surpass the success of this great year in Pathe's history in America.

"Many extravagant claims are being made these days about the best pictures, the best sales organization, etc.," says Mr. Berst. "Pathe makes no claims. But we do consider it significant that within the past few months some of the largest producing companies have approached us with propositions to handle their pictures. Several of these propositions are now under consideration."

Mr. Berst's views of the 1917 situation are of unusual interest because of his long connection with the motion picture industry and his deep insight into all of its branches.

"Everywhere," says Mr. Berst, "we hear talk about the uncertainty of the future. Companies come and go. We have combinations and dissolutions. New distributing organizations are formed and unformed. There are signs of unrest.

"But Pathe has builded on the solid rock of most careful organization and ample financial resources, and we stand secure. We are committed to a definite, fixed policy of quality pictures at prices that assure a fair profit to exhibitors. We have no fear.

"With the great number of features now on the market we have been greatly gratified with the success of our one-a-week Gold Rooster program, which now includes six distinct series of features, assuring a wide variety. In a few short months the Gold Rooster features have been firmly established in the minds of the public and exhibitors as a dependable program of strong stories, powerful casts and high-class production. These features are now being produced by Astra, Thanhouser, Arrow and Balboa. We have some ambitious plans for the new year, which will be announced in a short time. I consider some of our new features, such as 'Her New York,' 'Arms and the Woman' and 'The Hunting of the Hawk,' among the greatest pictures that have ever been produced.

"It is now generally recognized that in the serial field Pathe stands supreme. Our $5,000,000 serial program for 1916 was a big success for Pathe and for the exhibitors. Our 1917 program will be a greater success. Two new serials for 1917 have been completed—'The Neglected Wife,' founded on the famous stories of Mabel Herbert Urner, and 'The Double Cross,' the famous mystery story by Gilson Willet. 'Pearl of the Army,' our new military serial, released December 3, is also included in the 1917 serial program. We have two other serials in course of production and we are negotiating for the other two serials that will complete the 1917 program of seven serials."

All of the advertising and publicity departments have been greatly strengthened by Mr. Berst and exhibitors have expressed great satisfaction with the service.

PICKFORD PLAYERS RETURN TO MARBLEHEAD.

After two week's activities at the Fort Lee studios, Mary Pickford and her supporting cast in "The Pride of the Clan," the forthcoming Artcraft release, have again returned to Marblehead, Mass., to retake several exteriors as a result of the recent accident which befell the company when the old fishing schoonr sunk on which a scene was being taken. Two cameras were lost in the wreck together with many feet of film containing several important scenes.

N. A. M. P. I. Acts on Important Matters

Questions Concerning Film Transportation and Fire Prevention to be Considered at Length—Committees Now Working Out Details

A MEETING has been called for December of the Committee on Transportation appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The committee consists of William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; J. Stuart Blackton, Vitagraph Company of America; George Brophy, Oklahoma City; M. A. Corey, J. G. Graham, Chicago, Ills.; Whitman Bennett, New York; J. J. Eisenberg, Mississippi, Mo.; Alfred Hamberger, Chicago, Ills.; Mr. Hanlon, New York; Peter J. Jeup, Detroit, Mich.; Aaron J. Jones, Chicago; Mr. Markowitz, William Oldknow, Atlanta, Ga.; Mr. Pierson, Kansas City; Davis Reed, Dallas, Texas; E. M. Saunders, New York; Arthur S. Sawyer, Samuel H. Trigger, New York; A. P. Tugwell, San Francisco, Cal., and John Ward, New York.

Several specific cases of trouble with transportation companies will be up for discussion and the form of procedure with a view to securing not only improved rates but also better conditions will be discussed.

The problems at issue include a complaint from one company over the holding up of C. O. D. shipments of film for six or eight weeks, with resultant losses at both ends of the line, the question of discrimination in the matter of annoying small "excess" charges for checking film cases as baggage and the New York City ordinances against carrying perfectly protected film in the subway and elsewhere.

The plan of the committee is both to take up the specific questions and settle them and to get the National Association's power organized to correct the discrimination and overcharges now in vogue.

It would be impossible for this work to be completed in time to be submitted to the meeting of the Board of Directors, on Wednesday, Nov. 29th, even if the transportation committee should meet before that date. It was therefore decided to hold the committee meeting afterwards, and then to continue its work so that its results might be ready to submit to the Directors at the December board meeting.

Fire Prevention Committee.

The National Association has appointed a committee for the adoption of rules of fire prevention for motion picture studios, exchanges and theaters. The plan is to make these regulations the basis of state and city fire laws. While of course the proposed rules will not be drawn up at this session it is expected that exceptionally important information will be brought out. The committee of which Jesse D. Lasky is chairman is to meet shortly at the offices of the Association.

Charles M. Biscay, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Fire Prevention Regulation and Insurance Committee will present a plan for getting together a vast mass of information to aid in its work. Through the National Board of Fire Underwriters and similar organizations, the committee will have access to the official figures of the companies, showing the total losses paid by the insurance companies to motion picture exhibitors, manufacturers and exchanges, and also the total of the premiums received in corresponding periods. These figures will give a very plain indication of just how fair or unfair the present insurance rates are.

The committee can also get full information on existing fire prevention regulation and laws from all over the country, as a basis from which to work on plans for standardization. Mr. Biscay says that the National Association will have the united support of all the insurance companies and of the national bodies of that business. The insurance companies will be only too glad to have a great national body to which it can bring its suggestions and point out the hazards of the film industry. The committee consists of the following members: J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films, New York; William L. Sherrill, President of Frohman Amusement Corporation; Samuel H. Trigger, Tremont Theater, New York; Louis L. Levine, Regent Theater, Brooklyn; Alfred Hamberger, Chicago, Illinois; A. S. Le Vine, Iroquois, New York; Maurice Choynski, M. P. E. L., Chicago; Judge A. P. Tugwell, Los Angeles; Thomas Furniss, Duluth, Minn.; A. D. Flintom, Manager Kansas City Paramount Pictures Company, Kansas City; D. A. Lynch, of Atlanta, Ga., and Ashville, N. C.; Ernest H. Horstmann, Boston, Mass.; Stanley Mastbaum, Philadelphia; Guy Wonders, Baltimore, Maryland; G. W. Deming, John A. Eckert Company; J. H. Hallberg, New York; Charles Martyne Biscay, Sec'y and Treas. of the Insurance Press; A. C. Carruthers, Second Vice-President of the Safety Engineering Society, New York; J. F. Skerrett, General Manager Nicholas Power Company, New York; J. F. Ancona, Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, New York; William Sistrom, Universal Film Mfg. Co., New York.

One of the most important and interesting contributions to the information of the committee will come from J. F. Ancona, the expert of the Eastman Kodak Co.; which is an active member of the National Association and has been working, largely through Mr. Ancona, on the basic principles of fire prevention regulations in the productive distribution and exhibiting phases of the motion picture business. Mr. Ancona is a member of the sub-committee on Laboratories. These sub-committees appointed by Charles M. Biscay, Chairman of the Executive Committee, which will report to the general committee on Tuesday morning, are made up as follows:

Theaters, Sam'l H. Trigger, Judge A. P. Tugwell, J. K. Skerrett, L. L. Levine.

Studios, William L. Sherrill, A. S. LeVine, Arthur James.

Laboratories, William Sistrom, J. H. Brulatour, J. P. Ancona.

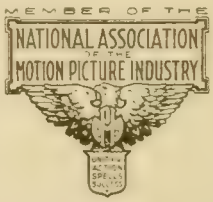
Film Exchanges, William Sistrom, J. M. Brulatour, J. F. Skerrett.

Transportation, J. F. Skerrett, J. E. Brulatour, Judge A. P. Tugwell.

The importance of the work of establishing fire prevention regulations and securing their adoption by members of the National Association and as city ordinances over the entire country, is evidenced by many interesting figures, and by the willingness of insurance companies to reduce rates where similar fire prevention work has been done.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION EMBLEM.

The new emblem of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, adopted at the last meeting of the executive committee, is about to get into active circulation.



Three sizes of cuts have been made of it, and are to be furnished free to members of the National Association and at the luncheon Thursday of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers a resolution was passed unanimously approving the use of the emblem wherever possible. The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers include in its membership the advertising and publicity men of most of the big companies, and these men plan to use the emblem wherever possible in advertising, on letterheads and especially on posters. They will also take up for discussion with the heads of their companies the use of the emblem as part of the leaders on the films produced by their companies, where in advertising, the use of the emblem tends to become confused with the trade-marks of the companies, they will use, instead, a line reading "Member of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry."

N. A. M. P. I. APPEALS TO PRESS.

A special meeting of the executive committee of the National Association was held immediately upon the news of the decision in the Third Department affecting Sunday exhibitions of motion pictures. There were present William A. Brady, Walter W. Irwin, Adolph Zukor, Benjamin B. Hampton, W. L. Sherrill, Louis L. Levine, Lee A. Ochs, William M. Seabury; Counsel, John R. Miller. A resolution was passed to send to every newspaper in the state an appeal to favor Sunday exhibitions. The appeal was sent by wire and signed by both the Exhibitors' League and the National Association.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

DESPITE the absence of some committeemen who had been informed that the meeting was scheduled for 2 o'clock in the afternoon, a meeting was called to order shortly after 11 o'clock A. M. on Friday, November 24, of the committee of the Manhattan branch of the Exhibitors' League appointed to investigate the charges against Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Tobias A. Keppler, counsel for Fleischman & Goldreyer, prosecuting the charges against Mr. Ochs, protested that the meeting scheduled for Tuesday, November 21, was summarily postponed by Chairman Samuel H. Trigger, without notice to him or to Messrs. Fleischman and Goldreyer, and without notice to several members of the committee who appeared at the headquarters of the Manhattan local, at No. 218 West Forty-second street, in the belief that a meeting was to be held. The postponement of the meeting scheduled for Tuesday resulted in a request by Mr. Keppler to the members present for an investigation as to the reason.

Mr. Keppler, in protesting against the postponement on Tuesday, read into the record:

"I vigorously protest against this adjournment, because I made it very clear and emphatic at the meeting held Saturday that if there was a long adjournment the whole purpose of the investigation would be defeated.

"I defied Mr. Ochs to produce the stock certificate book stubs and the stock ledger, which I contended proved that a film interest subsidized the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and that it was therefore not to the advantage of the exhibitors or to the organization. Mr. Ochs and his attorney, Mr. Rosenthal, faithfully promised to produce the books today at 11 o'clock. Neither Mr. Ochs nor his attorney is present, nor are the books here, and we therefore demand an investigation of why this meeting was adjourned in the manner it has been and without notice to us, and why the books have not been produced; and we request that this investigation be made as speedily as possible."

A representative of the Moving Picture World was told on Tuesday by Thomas Howard, secretary of the State League, that the meeting had been postponed because of the absence of Mr. Blumenthal. Mr. Howard said that Mr. Blumenthal was in Detroit.

It developed during the course of Friday's meeting that Mr. Trigger had sent telegrams to the eight members of the Executive Board, inquiring their opinions as to whether or not the local branch could have the certificate books and stock ledger of the Exhibitors Trade Review brought before them. Seven of the eight members of the Executive Board answered that the local could not demand the books. The eighth—William Eisenberg of Greenville, Miss.—gave it as his opinion that the local could demand the books.

Mr. Keppler claimed he was not informed that a meeting was in progress on Friday until about 12:30. When he arrived before the committee he demanded an explanation as to why the meeting scheduled for Tuesday had been summarily postponed. Mr. Trigger said that it was because one or two of the members of the committee could not be present.

Following remarks by Mr. Keppler anent the matter of the stock books being taken up before the Executive Board, Chairman Trigger took issue with the lawyer and said that he was trying to blacken the character of the members of the Executive Board. Mr. Keppler amplified his statements as to the members of the Executive Board, insisting on his right to explain that inasmuch as he knew nothing of the men he could not blacken them—that he could not disparage them by a request that he be allowed to go before them before the stock book question was finally settled. Later Mr. Trigger apologized.

"Since these meetings started," said Mr. Keppler, "I have been asked to form another exhibitors' association. I have refused to consider any such proposition."

A resolution was passed by the committee to the effect that no officer or member be allowed to postpone a meeting without the sanction of the committee and that no officer or member act on his own initiative in matters affecting the committee as a whole.

An objection by Mr. Och's attorney to further questioning of his client by Mr. Keppler resulted in the latter's insistence that he would not waive that right—that to do so would defeat the whole object of the investigation.

A motion by Mr. Steiner that the sending of the telegrams to the members of the Executive Board be endorsed by the committee was seconded, but withdrawn before a vote had been asked.

Mr. Ascher stated to the committee that he felt it was the duty of the members to forget by whom they had been appointed and that they should do their duty open-mindedly and conscientiously. He remarked that the interests of the league were paramount and that above the question as to the guilt or innocence of any party were the interests of all the exhibitors.

In order to give Mr. Keppler a chance to take up with the Executive Board the question of the stock books at their meeting this week the meeting of the committee was adjourned until Friday, December 1.

HUDSON CO. EXHIBITORS EAT AND MAKE MERRY

Second Annual Banquet in Berkely Hall Splendidly Attended Listens to Many Invited Guests.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Hudson County, N. J., held its annual banquet on the night of November 22 at the rooms of the Berkely Club, Palisade and Jackson avenues, Jersey City. The affair, which proved eminently successful, began shortly before midnight with a highly acceptable dinner. Many exchangemen had been invited; there were some operators, too, but the exhibitors, of course, were in the great majority.

After the dinner had been thoroughly enjoyed the state president of New Jersey, Dr. H. Charles Hespe, greeted the company present which in all numbered close to a hundred. He briefly reviewed the history of organization in the state of New Jersey. Much he said remained to be done. He spoke of the need of immediate organization in New Jersey. There were, he said, geographical difficulties in the way, but unremitting efforts would result in a good and active organization. After this short introduction Dr. Hespe welcomed the invited guests of the evening. He then called upon W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World, for a few remarks. Mr. Bush declared that his championship of the exhibitors' cause was dictated by the deep conviction that a prosperous exhibitor must always be the sound foundation of the prosperity of all the other branches of the industry. The revenue of both distributor and producer must come from the exhibitor, hence the need of making it possible for the exhibitor to grow and prosper.

National President Ochs was called on for a speech and he recited his adventures in Philadelphia in connection with an effort to improve conditions there. Next Frank H. Richardson, the projection editor of the Moving Picture World, was asked to speak on his favorite topic. He declared that the time was too short as it would take him an hour and a quarter to get started. "Seriously speaking," said Mr. Richardson, "this matter of projection is getting more important all the time. Pay your operators good wages and then hold them strictly responsible for good projection." Mr. Richardson's many sallies at the expense of himself, his story-telling powers and his vibrant sincerity made him the star speaker of the night.

It was close to 3 a. m. when the formal adjournment was announced.

JOYOUS GATHERING OF THE TROY CLANS.

The Three Organizations in the Capital District Have Their Annual Celebration and Talk of Stronger Union.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Troy and vicinity, of which Mr. Levy of Waterford is the active popular president, held a very successful banquet on the night of November 22, at Troy. The success of the affair reflected great credit on the committee on arrangements which consisted of the following exhibitors: J. Rosenthal, F. Fischer, and Benjamin Apple. Not only was Troy and vicinity generously represented but there were exhibitors from Albany, Schenectady, Watervliet, Cohoes, Waterford, Mechanicville, Schuylerville and Hoosick Falls.

A number of exchange men had been invited and many responded, among them Jermain who, with Mr. Fitzer, represents the Fox Film Company at Syracuse; V. L. S. E. was represented by Messrs. Hartich and Frayne, Pathe by the genial Mr. Epstein and his staff, Mr. Zamia and Mr. Gentile; Triangle was represented by Mr. Bendell; International Film Co. by Mr. Spector, World Film by Mr. Walder, Universal by Mr. Charles and the Mutual by Holderman and Lawlor.

Turkey and trimmings were the piece de resistance of the generous menu which was thoroughly enjoyed by all. An informal discussion followed and the recent decision of the Appellate Division in the Third Department regarding the Sunday question formed the main topic. All the speakers expressed the idea that a closer amalgamation of the Albany, Troy and Schenectady locals would put the exhibitors in a stronger position to meet the future. The following exhibitors were appointed as a committee to meet and formulate plans for a joint meeting of the three locals: Albany, Buck, Roberts and Powers; Schenectady, Freed, Zeiser and Bergstrom; Troy, Barhydt, Meffron and Apple.

When the situation developed the "lighter vein," Mr. Buettner took up the duties of toastmaster and performed them in his usual entertaining fashion.

The exchangemen and exhibitors talked over their little differences and nothing but the best feeling was exhibited on both sides. At present every house in Troy is charging ten cents and there was much talk of doing away with matinee prices and charging ten cents everywhere after 1 P. M.

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

Hold Session in Minneapolis and Are Addressed by National President Ochs.

LEE A. OCHS, of New York City, president of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was the chief speaker at the largest gathering of members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest since May at the West Hotel, November 14.

The meeting, which followed a luncheon, was called for the purpose of distributing shares of stock in the corporation amongst the exhibitors, to discuss censorship, Sunday closing, increased taxation, return expressage and the deposit system. Mr. Och's spoke at length upon return expressage and told of the way in which New York exhibitors successfully fought against it. He urged the Northwest exhibitors to do likewise, providing the exchanges would not "play fair," and condemned the advance deposit system with a few forceful expressions.

Mr. Ochs told the exhibitors of the untiring efforts of Thomas Furniss of Duluth, Minn., in representing the West at executive board meetings of the League and National Association of the industry in the East, and thanked the Minnesotans for their support at election time at Chicago last July. He complimented the members upon the spirit they are showing and urged them to do their utmost to get new members into the corporation.

Thirty-two members of the corporation paid up their dues at last week's session, and each member in attendance received one share of stock in the corporation, upon motion of David G. Rodgers. President J. G. Gilosky of the Northwest Corporation, Oliver A. Rowe, Blue Mouse, St. Paul; Thomas Furniss, Rex, Duluth, Minn.; Joseph Cohen, Minneapolis, and Thomas Foster, Star, Stanley, Wis., gave short talks following Mr. Och's address. Mrs. Henrietta Starkey, manager opera house, LeSeuer, Minn., was the only woman in attendance.

Among those present at the meeting were Lee Ochs, Thomas Furniss, James G. Gilosky, T. L. Hays, William Koenig, Thomas J. Hamlin, D. G. Rodgers, C. E. Van Duzee, Frank Nemec, H. P. Greene, J. B. Reisman, L. V. Calvert, M. A. Hoppenrath, A. G. Zinn, W. H. Koch, Bert Goldman, H. J. Andres, J. Roshko, S. H. Kahn, C. R. Fish, C. H. Hitchcock, Al. G. Kells, J. Barnet, A. Engler, N. V. Mitchell, W. A. Lochren, Ellsworth Cameron, A. A. Kaplin, D. W. Chamberlain, P. E. Hays, Sprague Greene, F. S. O'Malley, Morton Nathan, C. C. Campbell, H. G. McLaskey, J. G. Shonka, O. A. Lee, S. G. Lebedoff, R. J. Howen, T. Foster, J. L. Maitland, Joseph Friedman, J. A. Keough, Mrs. H. A. Starkey, F. W. Thayer, J. W. Cohen, H. J. Breilein and W. B. Watson.

William A. Lochren, president Lochren Film Corporation, had moving pictures taken of those who attended the meeting following the conclusion of business.

NEW JERSEY LEAGUE BALL.

At a meeting of the New Jersey State branch of the Exhibitors' League, held November 17, it was decided to hold the first annual ball of the New Jersey Exhibitors' League on Thursday, February 1, 1917, at the Kreuger Auditorium, Newark.

The following committee was selected to take charge: J. G. Crawford, of the Crawford Theater, Newark, Chairman; Phillips Bomstein, of the Criterion Theater, Newark, Treasurer. Special arrangements was made with F. E. Samuels to act as Secretary and manage the affair.

This is the first ball ever held in New Jersey under the auspices of the Exhibitors' League which was only recently granted a charter. It is the intention of the League to make this ball one of the biggest events in the history of Jersey. This was not determined upon until after a careful canvass of the industry, who gave it their hearty endorsement.

Laws on Minors Upheld

Court of Appeals Affirms Legislative Right to Exclude Minors Under Sixteen from Theaters Without Guardian.

THE Court of Appeals has sustained the contention of the District Attorney in the case of The People vs. Brink. A full report of this case which involved the legality of the statute affecting the admission of children into motion picture theaters was printed exclusively in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World.

Counsel for Van Brink contended that the statute affecting the admission of children to motion picture theaters was unconstitutional because it was class legislation. The latter claim was based upon that provision of the law which permitted minors under the age of sixteen to attend unaccompanied by parent or guardian all performances held under the auspices of religious and educational institutions.

M. Oestreicher, the vice-president of the New York Local, who is a partner of Mr. Van Brink talking to a representative of the Moving Picture World said that both he and his partner were seriously considering an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. He added that this attorneys had assured him he had more than a fighting chance in that tribunal. The matter will in all probability be brought to the attention of the M. P. E. L. A. and their aid in carrying the matter further may be asked on the ground that the decision if favorable would materially help every exhibitor in the State of New York.

CALDER JOHNSTONE IN TOWN.

Calder Johnstone, first secretary of the Screen Club, but now of the scenario staff of Balboa studios, Long Beach, Calif., has been in New York for several days shaking hands with old friends. He will soon return to the coast.

BEYFUSS WITH SELZNICK.

Alexander Beyfuss, one time general manager of the California Motion Picture Company, is now occupying a position close to Lewis J. Selznick in the New York offices of the Selznick pictures.

Phil Lang Goes to Coast

Takes the Kalem Scenario Department with Him—Wants to Be Closer to the Players.

THE Kalem Company announced this week that the scenario department of that organization would in the future be conducted from the main studio at Glendale, California. Phil Lang, scenario editor of Kalem for a number of years, left New York last Saturday for the Pacific Coast studio and will immediately establish the scenario headquarters there. Accompanying Mr. Lang is Frank Howard Clark, the well known scenario writer who has for some time been a member of the Kalem staff.

Phil Lang.

The journey for Mr. Lang is the first step in Kalem's plan to center the scenario activities of the company in close touch and co-operation with the producers. Increased efficiency and a maintenance of high quality productions are expected to result from the move. But the announcement is also said to mark the first step in a series of revolutionary moves, chief of which is to be the establishment of a new kind of scenario department.

Plans for this departure have been maturing for many months and are now about to be set in operation. Kalem terms its new project "a contributing author department." Co-operating with Mr. Lang in providing the stories for Kalem productions will be a group of prominent authors, including in its list some of the best known fiction writers of this country and England. Thus, instead of turning to hack scenario writers or staff men for its plots, Kalem will turn to this group of well known magazine contributors and novelists, just as a magazine editor does to his scattered contributors. Each of the writers will be selected as a recognized specialist in the different types of stories to be produced.

Recent announcements of coming Kalem productions have shown that the formation of this "contributing author department" has been under way for some time. Robert Welles Ritchie and E. W. Hornung are the first to be numbered in the Kalem list. Further announcements, promised for the near future, will contain the names of other prominent authors who will supply the stories for coming Kalem screen productions. At three points on his journey to the Pacific Coast Mr. Lang will stop over for conferences with well known writers of fiction whose names may be expected to be announced soon on the Kalem "contributing author" list.

Phil Lang, who will direct the work of the new department, is recognized as one of the most valued scenario executives in the motion picture field. With a newspaper and theatrical training that well befitted him for the work, Mr. Lang entered the screen ranks some years ago with the Kalem organization. Equipped with a thorough knowledge of film production he is credited with contributing much to the development of the present day technique of screen writing. To Mr. Lang is due in large measure the "perfect continuity" of Kalem productions, which have been recognized by film men as a model in this respect. In co-operating with prominent writers of fiction and bringing them to a realization of the peculiar demands of the screen Mr. Lang has been unusually successful.

Not the least important benefit to follow from the transferring of Mr. Lang and Mr. Clark to California will be the advantage of working in close touch and co-operation with the producers. "The Girl from Frisco," "The Hazards of Helen" and the "Ham Comedies" are pictures at present being staged at Kalem's Glendale and Hollywood studios, while the new "Stingaree" series will also be produced at the Coast plant. With Mr. Lang and Mr. Clark on the ground and familiar with the locations and facilities at the command of the producers the work of the contributing authors may be directed in channels much more valuable.

"This is only the first of a series of surprises that Kalem has to offer," declared Mr. Wright, of that company. "We believe we have for some time been showing the way in the securing of real stories for motion pictures. And this notwithstanding the fact that we are specializing in one and two reelers.

"The signing of Robert Welles Ritchie and E. W. Hornung and the transferring of Mr. Lang to California forces us to announce our plans for the 'contributing author department.' In a few weeks we will announce further names. But it is sufficient to say that our 'contributing author department' will be modeled after the plan of the big magazines which secure the services of specialists in various lines as 'contributing editors.' No limit will be placed on expense in securing the services of authors whom we want. We are doing this to prove to exhibitors that a feature is a feature, no matter what the length, that it is qualiy and drawing power that count and not footage."

Complete Plans for Linder

George K. Spoor, of Essanay, Has Made All Arrangements for the Famous Comedian.

PLANS have been practically completed for Max Linder to launch into the production of his first comedy at Essanay. One of the big studios at the Essanay plant has been set aside exclusively for his use. A company is being formed solely as his support. A competent staff of scenic artists, wardrobe designers and property men have been secured for him. Max will be "king" on this floor.

Before the month is ended, probably, Linder will be enacting his comical escapades before an American camera. Max, once started, is a speedy worker, according to his past achievements, and exhibitors should be enabled soon afterward to give their patrons definite announcements of his first Essanay photoplay.

Max Linder and G. K. Spoor.

As yet no title has been selected for this production. Max and Mr. Spoor have applied the past two weeks to the selection and "dressing up" of the scenario, and the arrangement of details for its picturization. Hundreds of other scenarios have been scrutinized for future material.

In Linder, American photoplay patrons will find a new brand of merriment. He does not resort to the slapstick comedy as a funproducer. He is seen as a dapper young "darling of the ladies," who is as often pursued as pursuing. In either case, Max finds the path of true love to be replete with troubles.

Since his arrival at Essanay's Chicago studios, Max has proven "good copy" for the newspapers and magazines. He has been interviewed, by actual count, 112 times within the two weeks; and he has posed in every manner of costume and position for more than twice that number of photographs.

Max likes Americans and American customs, now that he is acquainted with them. He is a super-fan at motion picture theaters, and has expressed delight and amazement at the variety, daring and dramatic achievements of this country's photoplayers. He was taken on a tour of inspection of Essanay's plant and afterward declared that none he had seen in Europe could equal it.

And Linder likes especially American girls. "American women are more truly fitted to comedy than those of Europe," he asserted. "Their buoyancy makes them naturally adapted to mirth-producing. America has given the world some of the most wonderful photoplay actresses I have ever seen."

"Uncle Sam's Defenders"

Mutual to Release Interesting Army and Navy Subject in Six Installments.

COMING at a time when the country is especially imbued with the spirit of nationalism and patriotism, and when every city and village has been stirred with the departure or return of troops, every city has had its training camp, the announcement made by the Mutual Film Corporation that a series of six single-reel subjects, entitled "Uncle Sam's Defenders," and embracing all the steps in the making of a finished soldier from the every day citizen and important scenes from the operations of the United States Navy, will be given to the public weekly, commencing December 8, will be of special interest and importance to the exhibitor and to the public.

The first chapter of this series, "From Civilian to Soldier," will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation on Friday, December 8, 1916. This chapter deals with the citizens' encampment at Plattsburg, New York, showing them receiving instructions in military work and tactics.

Chapter two, "Our Boys at the Border," to be released on Friday, December 15, shows the routine followed by the regular army boys on the Mexican border and is full of excellent artillery and target practice; the infantry in a sham battle and the machine-gun squads are shown in action.

Chapter three, to be released Friday, December 22, entitled "A Jack Tar in the Making," shows some wonderful extensive views of Newport and Annapolis Naval Academy.

"Afloat and Ashore," the fourth chapter, to be released on Friday, December 29, is comprised of scenes aboard the battleship "Texas," some excellent scenes of coaling and provisioning ships and the rougher side of the sailor's life.

Chapter five, "Scouts of the Sea and the Sky," scheduled to appear on Friday, January 5, contains details in connection with torpedo boats and torpedo boat destroyers.

The last chapter of this patriotic series, entitled "Bulldogs of the Deep," opens with scenes aboard the mine layer, "The San Francisco," and a floating machine shop which accompanies the ship and makes repairs.

"Patria" Has Great Reception

First Episodes of the International's Serial Draws Large Attendance at Invitation Presentations.

TO a throng numbering more than nine hundred—men and women of the first distinction in all walks of life—Mrs. Vernon Castle made her bow in the International Film Service's new serial, "Patria," in the grand ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton on the night of Monday, November 20. Probably no motion picture has ever before been given its premiere showing before a gathering of such social prominence, and the affair took on the aspect of a night at the opera rather than the showing of a film. So many guests took advantage of the opportunity to view the first three chapters of "Patria" that it was necessary to run the seven reels twice.

Those who packed the ballroom to over-flowing were sincere and generous in their applause. When the popular Mrs. Castle was seen in the first introductory scenes of the film an ovation was given that lasted for several minutes. And the appreciation of the picture became greater as the plot unfolded on the field of white, set at one end of the ballroom, whose delicately tinted walls and rich silken hangings have looked down on New York's most representative social affairs. From a flag-draped booth came the light-beams that limmed on the screen the story by Louis Joseph Vance, transferred to visual telling through the medium of the motion picture by the Whartons, Inc.

But all the applause that had been given before was drowned to stillness when Mrs. Castle was presented in person by Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal. Mrs. Castle was overwhelmed and could scarcely make her way through the appreciative admirers.

Representatives of society, wealth, art, literature and motion pictures were present in over-flowing abundance. Among those who attended were: Mr. and Mrs. Willian Randolph Heart and their guests, Mrs. Vernon Castle, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Dr. and Mrs. Preston P. Satterthwaite, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Colt, Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Aldrich, Mr. and Mrs. Julian M. Gerard, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Brisbane, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert B. Swope, Mrs. John H. Clews, Mrs. Lawrence Grossmith, Mrs. Foote, William Rhinelander Stewart, Jr., Henry Carrington and James Blair, James W. Gerard, the Ambassador to Germany, and Mrs. Gerard and Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. Griswold A. Thompson, Mrs. Roland D. Allen, Miss Marion Tiffany, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. V. Hoppin, Mrs. William H. Force, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander D. B. Pratt, Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas, Mrs. William F. Whitehouse, Mrs. Lowerv Gillet, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Nixon, Miss Margaret Overton, Mr. and Mrs. DeLancey Coster, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence B. Elliman, Schuyler Parsons and his son, Schuyler Parsons, Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Austin Gray, Mrs. Jules Bache, Mrs. Harold L. Richard, Mrs. John Lowe, Mrs. Henry L. Burnett, Louis Wiley, Jules Vatable, Mrs. Anson W. Burchard, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. C. Smith and their daughter, Mrs. Cyril P. Dugmore, J. Searie Barclay and Dr. Bolling Lee, Miss Katherine Laurence, E. Clarence Jones, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Perry Belmont, Ogden Mills, Spencer Eddy, George Leary, Dr. J. Frutard, Martin W. Littleton, Judge Clarence J. Shearn, Ben Ali Haggin and Irving Brokaw.

Following the private showing at the Ritz-Carlton, the first three chapters of the serial were shown on Tuesday morning at the Strand theater. More than 1,000 exhibitors assembled at the theater—men not only from the Metropolitan district, but also from Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, Hartford, Springfield and Pittsburgh.

The full symphony orchestra that had played at the Ritz-Carlton, under the direction of Professor Vecsey, furnished the incidental music, which has been especially arranged for "Patria" by Professor Vecsey and Robert Hood Bowers.

The serial was afforded an enthusiastic greeting by the exhibitors and applause was frequent. Prior to the presentation of the picture a splendid musical program was rendered on the wonderful Strand theater pipe organ.

King Baggot in "Absinthe"

Revised Version of This Early Universal Success to Be Released in Amplified Form.

KING BAGGOT has purchased from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company the negative and the complete territorial rights to "Absinthe," the picture in which he made one of his earliest and greatest triumphs, and it will shortly be released. "Absinthe" was produced by Herbert Brenon, director of "A Daughter of the Gods," "War Brides," "Neptune's Daughter," and other film masterpieces. Every scene was taken in Paris and shows many of the most important spots in the French capital, such as the Tuilleries, Arche de Triumphe, Grand Opera House and scores of other famous places. The introductory scenes show a sweeping panorama of the city.

King Baggot.

"Absinthe" was one of the best of the early pictures and, in its day, simply poured money into the coffers of thousands of exhibitors' box offices. The entire production is being revamped, new scenes being made and new titles inserted. The revised version will contain actual scenes from the present war. The French trenches, artillery in action and the armies on the march will be shown.

In this picture, King Baggot considers that he has done his greatest piece of acting. French and German actors assisted in making the production, the only Americans in the cast being Baggot and Leah Baird. As sole owner of "Absinthe," Mr. Baggot will handle the new version and control all the States' rights sales. He will also appear in person at the opening performances in the largest theaters throughout the United States. The force of his personality and the wide publicity that he enjoys should make his personal appearance of great value to the exhibitors. The fact that "Absinthe" was first made when the world was at peace is explained in the opening titles of the picture.

"CIVILIZATION" IN PORTO RICO.

The Harper Film Corporation has appointed Morgan Robertson its representative in Porto Rico, for the purpose of there handling "Civilization," the Thomas H. Ince spectacle. Mr. Robertson will arrive in Porto Rico on December 10.

Pathe Plans Big Campaign

Advertising Scheme for "Pearl of the Army" Said to Be the Biggest Yet Proposed—Has Many Features.

THE nation-wide advertising campaign on Pathe's great military-mystery serial, "Pearl of the Army," will be the largest yet instituted. The campaign on "The Shielding Shadow" set a new mark, but that on the Pearl White production will surpass it in the introduction of a number of original business builders of a special nature. The list of advertising matter decided upon and now announced for the first time includes a very handsome advance twenty-four sheet, showing Pearl White as the American Joan of Arc. This paper will build business for exhibitors.

Another new idea instituted for the first time on "Pearl of the Army" is the Pathe art portrait. It is a beautiful reproduction in nine or ten colors of the work of the famous artist Hamilton King, printed on handsome stock in one-sheet size. The Pathe art portrait is not a poster, but is designed to grace the most luxurious lobby. It gives theater managers a chance to dress their fronts in a new and original manner in every way in keeping with the production.

The importance of the art portrait in the eyes of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, is evidenced by the fact that he has given this painstaking campaign his direct supervision. There should be an enormous demand for these art portraits, because they mark a distinct advance in the quality of advertising matter. They are the nearest approach to original pastel drawings as have yet been offered to exhibitors.

Stores attract business by means of their windows. They pay high salaries to experts who do nothing but attend to window display. Exhibitors should use their lobbies in the same way. Pathe art portraits have been created with a view to giving wide-awake exhibitors an opportunity to do so.

The other distinctive advertising matter now ready for exhibitors is as follows: One, three and six-sheets on each episode, a set of slides (three to a set), two-color heralds on each episode, canvas banner, advance, a colored photographic lobby display (twelve photographs to a set), a water mark for stationery and a novelty of great originality.

This last is a "dolly" cut-out of Pearl White, showing a complete selection of dresses, hats, shoes, etc., with which to dress the figure. The garments are taken from the Florence Rose Fashion Films and are therefore authentic in every detail. Such a novelty will undoubtedly cause a great deal of comment among the women and children.

"One of the best features ever offered to a newspaper in connection with motion pictures" is the way the publisher of one of the biggest newspapers of the United States described the series of lessons in scenario writing prepared by Pathe in connection with "Pearly of the Army."

"There is scarcely a man, woman or child who goes to motion pictures who has not at some time tried to write or imagined he would like to write a story for pictures," says Mr. Berst. "It is this universal interest in the art of photoplay writing that is responsible for the big success of our plan.

"These scenario lessons as presented in the newspapers are condensed from the real working scenarios from which the Astra Film Corporation produced the military serial. The technical phrases are retained and at the end of each one is published a technical dictionary."

In introductory notes the newspapers encourage their readers to first study the scenarios, then see the play presented on the screen, go home and try to write their own scenario. This offers an opportunity for the newspaper and the exhibitor to present prizes for the best scenarios submitted. More than two hundred papers published scenario lessons in conjunction with "The Shielding Shadow," and the number will probably be greatly exceeded on "Pearl of the Army."

Here is another new idea which will be instituted on the Pearl White serial—novelettes of each episode about nine hundred words in length. These stories will be published under a two-column heading once a week, with a single or double-column illustration.

These brief stories are prepared in addition to the complete novel in fifteen installments, each installment about forty-five hundred words in length, written by Guy W. McConnell, the celebrated author who furnished the basic idea from which George B. Seitz, who wrote "The Iron Claw" and "The Shielding Shadow," made the scenarios.

The newspaper advertising campaign is without doubt the greatest Pathe has ever put out. It will be characterized by an advance "teaser" campaign so daring and so unique that particulars cannot be given in advance. This campaign will stir up interest in "Pearl of the Army" from coast to coast. Copy will be run in the two leading newspapers of all the large cities.

The copy is striking, both in display and wording. There are several four-column and five-column displays, illustrated with thrilling moments from the picture. A page of special display advertisements, based on this copy and written with the needs of the exhibitor in mind, has been prepared by Pathe and will be furnished to newspapers through the Western Newspaper Union. The one and two-column ads leave prominent space for the name of the theaters and are, in many instances, reproductions of the larger copy. All, of course, are prepared by experts, of whose advice exhibitors are thus enabled to take advantage by getting the newspaper in which they wish to use the plates to obtain them from the Western Newspaper Union. Another new idea which Pathe will introduce in connection with "Pearl of the Army" is a series of cartoons drawn by the famous artist, Merle Johnson, whose work in Puck is so well known. These cartoons are drawn in the inimitable manner which has made Mr. Johnson famous. They are two columns in width.

With the magic name of Pearl White, an all-star supporting cast, and such an advertising campaign as this, Pathe believes that "Pearl of the Army" will prove its greatest success.

UNIVERSAL ANIMATED CLAIMS BEAT.

Another "beat" has been scored by the Universal Animated Weekly over all other motion picture news films. Within three hours from the minute Ruth Law arrived at Governors Island, on her record-breaking air flight from Chicago to New York, moving pictures of the landing of Miss Law were shown at the Strand and Rialto theaters. Universal Weekly cameramen were waiting all night at Governors Island, so they would be sure not to miss the arrival of the daring little air-woman, who has been hailed "Queen of the Air." As soon as the cry of "Here she comes" greeted the ears of the waiting throng the cameras began clicking and every single detail of her landing, as well as a fine close-up picture of Miss Law, were caught by the Universal cameramen.

The precious film was carried post haste to the offices of the Universal laboratories, where it was printed and developed in record time. It was ready for the leading theaters several hours before the nearest competitor.

CHRISTIE PLAYERS AT CHILDREN'S BENEFIT.

A sketch entitled "The Seminary Mixup," which was written by Mr. Christie and played by members of his studio, was offered recently for the benefit of the Children's Hospital of Los Angeles. The sketch gave opportunity to Billie Rhodes and Neal Burns for special song and dance numbers and to Jane Waller for demonstration of her expert Ukalele accompaniment. The cast comprised the principal members of Mr. Christie's studio, including Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns, Betty Compson, Ethel Lynn, Eddie Barry, Harry Ham, Frank O'Neil, Stella Adams, Jane Waller, George French and Harry Rattenberry. Harry Ham, Christie Comedy lead, was eulogized by the Los Angeles dailies last week on his performance with the Amateur Players at the Gamut Clubhouse.

NEW STAR FOR IVAN.

Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has added another star to its roster in the charming personage of Katherine Kaelred. Her first work will be in the new extraordinary special feature which has taken Director General Ivan Abramson months to make, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," in which she will be co-star with Frank Sheridan and James Morrison. Miss Kaelred will be remembered as the original vampire with Robert Hilliard in the still successful drama, "A Fool There Was," which was first produced in the year 1909.

Four Selznick Companies Busy

Four Subjects Now About Completed—All for Early Release.

FOUR producing companies are at work in three studios on Selznick-Picture productions for release in December and January. The success that followed the presentation of the first Selznick-Pictures (Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law" and Herbert Brenon's production, Nazimova in "War Brides") has brought Selznick's new trademark to the fore.

The third Selznick-Picture will present Clara Kimball Young in an adaptation of Thomas Dixon's powerful novel, "The Foolish Virgin." Albert Capellani, director general of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation and producer of "The Common Law," finished the final scenes of Miss Young's second picture this week. It will probably be released in seven reels and will be ready for its private exhibition soon. In the cast will be seen Conway Tearle, who made such a decided success as Miss Young's leading man in "The Common Law," and Paul Capellani, who has been seen in powerful characterizations in a number of Miss Young's preatest pictures.

The Selznick-Pictures' offering to follow "The Foolish Virgin" will be, according to the present plans, Joseph M. Schenck's presentation of Norma Talmadge in a film version of "Panthea," a drama by Monckton Hoffe. Miss Talmadge has been working for several weeks on this production under the direction of Allan Dwan at one of the Willett studios, Fort Lee, N. J., and the reports indicate that the picture will be finished by next week.

Herbert Brenon is nearing the completion of his second Selznick-Pitcures offering, a powerful drama of Italian life in the Middle Ages, entitled, "Lucretia Borgia," from Victor Hugo's famous drama, at his studio on Hudson Heights, N. J. Miss Florence Reed becomes a Selznick-Pictures star in this production, which for lavishness of settings as well as for its dramatic quality is said to be a worthy successor to "War Brides." It will be ready for release in January.

Robert Warwick, who recently left the World Film Corporation to organize his own producing company, of which Harry Rapf is president, is well under way with his first Selznick-Picture, an adaptation of "The Argyle Case." This was the play by Harvey J. O'Higgins, Harriet Ford and the noted detective, William J. Burns, in which Robert Hilliard starred with brilliant success a few seasons ago. The Warwick company is working at the Biograph studio and is expected to complete the picture in time for its release late in January.

Miss Young has begun on the third of her new productions, a film version of the novel, "The Price She Paid," by David Graham Phillips. For this picture Charles Giblyn, formerly with Triangle, was engaged as director in order that Miss Young's time should be continuously occupied and her output of features increased. By the time Mr. Giblyn has completed "The Price She Paid," Director General Albert Capellani will not only have finished "The Foolish Virgin" but will have the scenic settings for Miss Young's fourth picture, "The Easiest Way," the famous Eugene Walter play recently secured by Mr. Selznick.

Horsley Studios Busy Again

Ovey and Wilbur Companies at Work and Other Companies Being Organized.

ACTIVITIES at the David Horsley studios in Los Angeles are again assuming the proportions which characterized the place last summer. During the early fall operations were temporarily curtailed while a readjustment of policy was being made. Now that this state of transition is a matter of the past, renewed energy is being exerted to carry out the producing policy of "Bigger and better things," so that announcements concerning new releases will have more than ordinary interest attached to them.

At this time two companies are at work and others will begin operations within a short time. Plans for these new companies are on the same big scale as those under which the two present organizations are working. Full details as to the type of plays they will produce, the scope on which these plays will be built, the names of the stars appearing in them and other information will be given later.

The two companies now engaged in making pictures are the Cub Comedy Company, headed by George Ovey, and a feature company, led by Crane Wilbur.

The comedy organization is making a series of one-reel subjects, under the direction of Milton Fahrney. The first number of the series is "Herry's Double Header," which was released November 24 through the Mutual. It is expected that the pictures of this series will create a new epoch in one-reel comedy production, since in this day of features and consequent scarcity of one-reel comedies Mr. Horsley has seen fit to spend more money in their production than ever before and at the same time more money than many multiple-reel subjects cost. Furthermore, he is alloting his comedy company more time to make a picture, even though all phases of production are carefully mapped out before the first scene is taken. All of this action is due to Mr. Horsley's desire to make not only one-reel comedies but one-reel features, a class of picture he believes exhibitors will cordially welcome.

Crane Wilbur and his co-workers are making a series of eight five-reel feature subjects which will be titled under the general heading of "The Morals of Men." The series is now half completed. Each of the eight subjects will be distinct, of course, though a morality theme is used for all. "The Painted Lie" and "Unlucky Jim" are titles of two of the pictures already made. No release dates have been set, but announcement to this effect will be made a little later on.

The Wilbur series, like the Ovey comedies, will be more than a collection of ordinary pictures. The vehicles were a long time in preparation, Mr. Wilbur himself being the author, and careful and elaborate production is being given them. Thomas Ricketts, a director of many years' experience and reputation, is directing. Mr. Wilbur's supporting cast, including Mas Gaston and Harris Ingraham, is more than adequate.

With the "Bigger and better things" policy in effect, these new David Horsley productions will doubtless be awaited with interest.

Sally Crute in Edison Feature

ONE of the chief reasons for the extraordinary success of the Edison feature, "The Cossack Whip," which stars Viola Dana and is now booking through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, lies in the strength of Miss Dana's all-star supporting cast. The Edison management permitted Director Collins to employ feature players even for the "bits" in this production, which has been hailed as "the most brilliantly acted feature of the season." Prominent among the stars and nearly-stars to whose work this praise is due is Sally Crute, feature in many Edison productions, who plays the role of Madame Pojeska, premiere danseuse of the Imperial Russian Ballet. In this latest Kleine-Edison success.

Sally Crute.

As the care-free, temperamental dancer, Miss Crute has a part for which she is eminently fitted, and, in several strong scenes which offer her opportunities for emotional acting, does what a number of reviewers have characterized as the best work of her career.

Miss Crute hails from far below the Mason and Dixon line and has all the sunny liveliness of the typical Southern girl. In addition to her moving picture work, she has appeared in a number of stage successes, including "The Rosary," "The Climbers," "Three Twins," "The Deep Purple," "Within the Law," "Brewster's Millions" and "Officer 666."

CLAIRE ALEXANDER ILL.

Claire Alexander, leading woman for George Ovey in Cub Comedies, was taken suddenly ill on Saturday, November 18, and was immediately removed to a Los Angeles hospital. During her absence the feminine leads in Cub Comedies will be played by Miss Goldie Colwell, who was Ovey's leading woman when the Cub brand was originated over a year ago. Upon Miss Alexander's recovery and return Miss Colwell will be cast for important parts in another brand of David Horsley productions.

Fox Film Comedies

New Series of Two-Reel Subjects Announced by William Fox—Available to All Exhibitors.

WILLIAM FOX announces the release of one two-reel comedy each week beginning January 1, 1917. This is the first important production policy change to be announced for the coming year. It means that the Fox Film Corporation which has heretofore produced and released only weekly five-reel dramatic photo plays is now to release in addition a weekly two-reel comedy feature. "Foxfilm Comedies," the new pictures have been christened. They are not to be released on the regular Fox program but are available to any exhibitor anywhere.

Several months ago reports of Mr. Fox's comedy plans gained circulation throughout the motion picture world. No word concerning the project was forthcoming from the executive offices, however, and at Los Angeles, Cal., the work proceeded steadily. Screen comedians of known ability were gathered together, six producing companies were organized and the filming of comedies was begun.

The work has progressed quietly. No news regarding the production of Foxfilm comedies has been given to the public, but now the product is completed and ready for the screen.

Up to the present, fifteen two-reel comedies have been completed. All these will not be given to the public, however. By means of a careful process of elimination, only the best will find their way to the screen. Mr. Fox has gone about his new project in such a manner as to enable him to select for the forthcoming fifty-two releases only those comedies which convince him they are sure-fire laugh producers. Mr. Fox is too wise and experienced a producer to go into the market with mediocre comedies. He knows that in order to fill the need he seeks to fill he must offer the best. Already Foxfilm comedies represent an investment of considerably over half a million dollars. This financial outlay will be increased if necessary in order to meet the requirements Mr. Fox has specified for the new venture.

The staff of comedy directors includes Charles Parrott, Walter C. Reed and Harry Edwards. In the list of players are such well known comedians as Hank Mann, Charles Arling, Martin Kinney, Frank Alexander, Joe Lee, Lee Morris, Harry M. O'Connor, William Hauber, "Smiling Billy" Mason, Anna Luther, Carmen Phillips, Amy Jerome, Annette De Foe, Caroline Rankin and Elsie Greeson.

The first release is entitled "Social Pirates." It was directed by Mr. Reed. The featured comedian is Charles Arling and foremost in the big supporting cast are Amy Jerome and Annette De Foe. The chief assistant comedians are Lee Morris, Bill Hauber, Martin Kinney and Frank Rice.

An early release will feature Anna Luther who has already won fame as a Fox dramatic star. Following soon afterwards will be something new in screen comedies—a burlesque of a well known photoplay which has gained much fame on the Fox program. The featured players in this release will be Hank Mann and Carmen Phillips. These are examples of the two-reel Foxfilm comedies William Fox will release as a New Year's gift for photoplay lovers.

"Comedies have become a necessary part of every motion picture exhibitor's program and are eagerly booked by vaudeville houses as well," said Mr. Fox. "The exhibitor must offer a comedy to round out his program properly. His patrons demand the best, and good comedies are the most difficult things to obtain in the motion picture market today.

"The development of motion picture production has been practically all along the lines of five-reel features or even larger. Comedy production has been allowed to go in the best way it can. In presenting Foxfilm comedies we have selected nothing but the best of all our companies have produced. Nothing but the highest quality will be released. We will make the best comedies on the market, or we will stop making them altogether. Although the comedies will be produced, released and advertised independent of the regular dramatic productions, they will be handled by the branch offices of the Foxfilm Corporation all over the world."

Foxfilm comedies will be released in the United States and Canada January 1, 1917. The release date for Europe and Australia has been set as March 1.

Sherman Breaks All Selling Records

Completes Sale of Entire United States and Canada in Six Weeks—Warner Gets New York.

HARRY A. SHERMAN, President of Sherman-Elliott Company, owners of Selig's production, "The Crisis," has completed the sale of all territory in the United States. The last deals were completed on November the 24th, whereby H. M. Warner purchased the State of New York, including New York City, for $50,000, and a group of well known eastern film men organized the Sherman Releasing Company of Boston, for the exploitation of this production in the New England states.

Fred W. Levy, President of Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Kentucky, purchased Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina rights. Mr. Levy will open at the Mary Anderson theater in Louisville, Kentucky, the week of December 24; and about the same time in the leading theater in Indianapolis. In both places Mr. Levy contemplates big stage settings, an orchestra of twenty-five and a vocalist, also other novelties in the presentation of the Selig drama. He intends sending three companies through the South and the Atlantic Coast states he owns.

Mr. Warner announces that he will open "The Crisis" in a Broadway theater beginning the second week of December, and shortly after that date will send out two companies to the larger cities in the state of New York.

It has been just six weeks since Mr. Sherman's New York organization started negotiations for the sale of state rights for "The Crisis," and the fact that he has completed sales totaling half a million dollars and disposing of every state right in the Union for this production speaks volumes for itself.

Sherman will start showing "The Crisis" in his western territory on December 24, opening at Minneapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee & Denver. This will make sixteen road companies showing photoplay productions in the largest theaters in the west—eight "Birth of a Nation" companies; four "Ramona" companies and four "Crisis" companies.

MARYLAND MOVIE CLUB TO GIVE BALL.

The Maryland Movie club has its hands full for the coming year. At the last meeting of that organization of picture men of Baltimore, Md., the question of the third annual ball was discussed. It is proposed to hold this event in the largest and best hall in Baltimore during the first part of January, and there will be a strong effort to make it the biggest and best ever held. A strong committee has been appointed and a liberal appropriation for decorations and entertainment has been made.

The club is growing rapidly and the members are beginning to talk about new quarters as the present rooms are becoming crowded. The annual election of officers will follow immediately after the ball.

Metro's Christmas Serial

"The Great Secret," to Be Released December 25, Will Feature Bushman and Bayne.

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces that, on December 25, it will release simultaneously through all its exchanges the first episode of "The Great Secret," the 14-episode dramatic serial in which Francis X. Bushman and Miss Beverly Bayne are starred.

The first episode of "The Great Secret" will be released in three reels. The remaining thirteen chapters will each be two reels long. The opening episode consists of two full reels of highly dramatic action preceded by a prologue which is little more than half a reel in length. In this prologue all the characters are clearly identified and their motives fully set forth.

"The Great Secret" is presented by the Quality Pictures Corporation and produced by the Serial Producing Company. It will be released exclusively through the Metro exchanges in the United States, Canada and Great Britain.

W. Christy Cabanne, for several years chief of staff to D. W. Griffith and Mr. Griffith's sole directing assistant in "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" is directing Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne.

The author of "The Great Secret" is Madame Fred De Gressac, whose story won in competition with 176 men writers of more than considerable fame. Mme. De Gressac is the author of a dozen of the best known stage successes of Klaw & Erlanger, yet "The Great Secret" is her first motion picture plot.

"The Great Secret" is being produced at the Quality Studios, at 645 West 43d street, New York City. These studios have been rented for the exclusive use of Mr. Bushman, Miss Bayne, Mr. Cabanne and the Serial Producing Company, and have been entirely renovated. All of the business angles of the production are under the personal charge of Mr. Simon Fleisher. For once, a good business man and a good director are working in the completest harmony. Chief of staff to Mr. Cabanne is R. J. Huntington, whom Mr. Cabanne brought on with him from the Pacific Coast. Eugene Thurston is assistant director to Mr. Cabanne and William Filldew, the famous cameraman of the Fine Arts studios, the knight of the crank for "The Great Secret."

Mr. Bushman plays the role of William Strong and Miss Bayne the part of Beverly Clark, the supporting cast proceeds: Edward J. Connelly is Dr. Zulph, the first lieutenant of The Great Master, which role is filled by F. R. Stanton, Miss Helen Dunbar, who is one of the victims of The Great Master's power, is a trained nurse attending John Clark, the multi-millionaire uncle of Beverly. William Calhoun plays a free lance detective who is of great aid to Mr. Bushman, as William Strong; Lillian Sullivan is a splendid female detective in Calhoun's employ. Other notables in the cast are Miss Belle Bruce, Miss Dorothy Haydel, who plays the part of Strong's fiancee in the early part of the story; Mrs. Sue Balfour, Beverly's mother, and Mrs. Mathilde Brundage. Charles Fang, a real Chinaman and an actor of unusual ability, plays valet to Strong. Thomas Blake is a sort of underworld emperor; Charles Ripley is one of his henchmen, and the famous "Tammy" Young is a clever stool-pigeon.

The first episode of "The Great Secret" is graced by the appearance of eight of the best known American lightweight pugilists: "Kid" Broad, "Jack" Goodman, "Bert" Keyes, "Spike" Robinson, "Jim" Quinn, "Ed" Kelly, "Paddy" Sullivan and Monte Attell. All eight of them have a fight with Bushman in the first episode that will probably rank as the greatest screen fight ever seen.

INCE AT WORK ON NEW SPECTACLE.

Thomas H. Ince, producer of "Civilization," is at present hard at work on a new big spectacle. Promises are made that the new picture will even surpass "Civilization." Little information regarding the new film is forthcoming from Mr. Ince or from the offices of the Harper Film Corporation, which is exploiting "Civilization," except that the forthcoming production will have a vitally human theme; that it will be sensational and exciting, and that it will be played by a cast of well-known stars.

Mr. Ince began work on the new spectacle before "Civilization" was entirely completed, and it is already well under way. Work has progressed to such an extent that the approximate date of the film's first showing is already known, and that the music for the picture is partly written.

"It has a big theme," stated an official of the Harper Corporation, "and will undoubtedly be a great success. It will please exhibitors and make money for them."

NEW LIGHT STUDIO FOR TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS.

The unseasonable fog and rain that caused vexation and delay to so many directors on the coast during the past three weeks will have no more terrors for the producers of Triangle-Fine Arts plays. Taking a lesson from recent experiences in filming scenes outdoors between showers, the management has been prompted to build a very large light-studio. The south stage, the largest on the "lot," is to be converted into an enclosed studio, and an elaborate battery of mercury lights and improved appliances will be installed. Four extra large sets can be built in the new studio at one time, and combined with the old quarters there is every reason to believe that the accommodations will prove ample for all the work likely to be undertaken.

MITCHELL LEICHTER LEAVES FOR COAST.

Mitchell Leichter, one of the pioneer film distributors of the East, has left New York for San Francisco, where he will join the Pacific Coast executive forces of the Lasky De Luxe Film organization. Mr. Leichter is well known as an amusement promoter and concessionaire, and was especially active during the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. He controlled several important privileges on the Zone.

At the conclusion of the Exposition Mr. Leichter came East and successfully promoted a tour through the Middle West and East of the Gold Medal winners of the Exposition

DEATH OF JACK LONDON.

Jack London, the author of many stirring tales, died suddenly at his ranch at Glen Ellen, near Santa Rosa, Cal., on November 22, from uraemic poisoning. Though best known for his stories London was a contributor to the screen drama. His "Sea Wolf" was made by the Bosworth Film Company and the principal part was played by Hobart Bosworth. The Bosworth company was formed for the purpose of producing motion pictures from London stories, but the deal with London later fell through. "John Barleycorn" was another of London's stories to be filmed. It created a considerable controversy.

CALEHUFF MOVES.

The Calehuff Motion Picture Supply Company of Philadelphia, which has been doing business at 1301 Race Street for several years, announces that its new home address is 1233 Vine Street, where a large ground floor store has been leased. Growth of business necessitated the change of location. Charles A. Calehuff has been in the motion picture supply business for many years and has been very successful through the manner in which he has treated his patrons. His business is a shining example of the motto "It pays to please."

GOLDFISH IN NEW COMPANY.

Capitalized at $3,000,000, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, of New York, has received a charter of incorporation. Incorporation papers filed at Albany contain the names of Samuel Goldfish and M. M. and E. Selwyn. The offices of the corporation are at No. 1451 Broadway.

ROW OVER ALLEGED SALE OF MOTOGRAPHY.

RUMOR was strong in trade circles, in the city, on Thursday morning, November 23, that Motography had been purchased by the proposed new trade publication, the Exhibitors' Trade Review.

It was at first announced that Lee Ochs, of New York, and Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, had called on Ed. J. Mock, editor of Motography, Tuesday, November 21, at his office in the Monadnock Building, and that preliminary arrangements were made for the sale of the paper, said arrangements being completed later the same day by Louis Blumenthal, of New York City.

Later, Thursday, it went the rounds that the deal was off, but no reasons were given for the change of mind. Attempts were made at this office to get in contact with Mr. Mock by phone and otherwise, but without avail. Late Thursday evening, Nat S. Stronge, business manager of the Electricity Magazine Corporation, was seen. This corporation publishes, in addition to Motography, Electrical Vehicles and the Telephone Engineer.

Mr. Stronge made known to me that Mr. Mock had sold Motography to Mr. Ochs on Tuesday, November 21, and that the deal had been closed through Mr. Blumenthal the same day.

"Mr. Mock owns 50 per cent. of the stock of the Electricity Magazine Corporation," said Mr. Stronge. "The deal was closed without the consent of the other two stockholders. These stockholders are the estate of the deceased B. C. Sammons, of Chicago, who at the time of his death was vice-president of the Corn Exchange Bank, Chicago, and John Crocker, a multi-millionaire of Maroa, Ill. The executors of the Sammons estate and Mr. Crocker, personally, will appear in court Friday morning, November 24, to quash the sale of Motography."

Mr. Stronge informed me that he had resigned his position as business manager of the corporation in order to oppose the sale of Motography. He also stated that Motography had been sold for $15,000 in notes, payable at the end of one, two and three years, respectively, from the date of the transaction.

I again tried to get Mr. Mock by phone, both at his office and his residence on Friday morning, before writing this, in order to get his statement on the matter, but again failed to get connection.

Later I was informed by Mr. Stronge that Mr. Mock had wired the officers of the proposed exhibitors' trade paper that he had been enjoined by the other stockholders from selling Motography.

Chicago Reel Fellows Meet.

The meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago was held at the Hotel Morrison, Thursday evening, November 23, the chief object of which was to hear the reports of the recent ball committees.

Quite a large membership filled the banquet hall, and the date of the annual election was changed from March to December, in order that the officers can take office at the first meeting of each year. A nominating committee was appointed which drew up three slates for the members to choose from, at the election on the third Friday of December, this year. There are three tickets in the field, the progrssive, the members and the radical, the members of each party voting for their choice for each office.

The resignation of W. R. Rothacker as a member of the present Board of Governors, was accepted, and Don J. Bell was elected to fill the unexpired term.

While the returns have not all been brought in as yet, the profits of the second annual reception and ball, it was figured, would be about $100. That greater profits were not forthcoming is attributable to the fact that the public was afraid of the location of the ball, believing that it was a full dress affair.

Chicago Film Brevities.

James Young, the former husband of Clara Kimball Young, has been added to the directing staff of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co. He will assume his duties Monday, November 27, when he will engage in the direction of the first Essanay picture in which Max Linder will appear.

I. L. Lesserman and his office force moved into the new quarters selected for the Laemmle Exchange at 17-19 S. Wabash avenue, on Saturday, November 18. The entire floor space occupied by the General Film Company's branch office for several years—about 10,000 square feet—has been taken, and business at the time of writing has resumed almost its normal condition. Everything is running smoothly and patrons are being served as formerly. Edward Gehring, a clerk, who was badly, but not seriously, injured in the burning of the old office, is already out of the hospital and will soon occupy his former position.

Charles J. Meegan, formerly advertising manager of the General Film Co., has been appointed advertising manager of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service. This change went into effect Monday, November 20. Mr. Meegan came on to Chicago Saturday, November 18, in connection with his new duties, and returned to New York the following Thursday.

Bert M. Moran, connected with the Minneapolis branch office of George Kleine, paid this city a visit last week. He left Saturday, November 18, for a five weeks' trip through the western section of the Dominion of Canada, including British Columbia. He is traveling in the interests of "Gloria's Romance" and of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service.

John G. Hruby, owner of the Dolton theater, Dolton, Ill., and the American theater, Harvey, Ill., was a caller at the World office last week, and renewed his subscription. Mr. Hruby leased the American theater last February. It has a seating capacity of 400, and charges 10 cents admission for programs of the V. L. S. E., World, Mutual, Bluebird, Gold Rooster and other makes. It is Mr. Hruby's intention to enlarge the theater in the near future to a capacity of 800.

A trade showing of "Modern Mother Goose," by Fort Dearborn Photoplays, Inc., this city, was given in the private exhibition rooms of the Universal Film Co., at 109 N. Dearborn street, Wednesday morning, November 22. The picture, which is in five reels, delighted those present, who pronounced it a beautiful play for children. A feature of the production lies in the fact that it is enacted by children under thirteen years of age. The principal exterior scenes were taken on the campus of the Chicago University and in Washington and Lincoln Parks. The principal interior scene is laid in the Elizabethan Room of the Congress Hotel. This is the first picture of its kind made by this company, which will make a specialty of childrens' pictures under the motto, "Clean plays only." Mathew C. von Betz directed the picture and wrote the prologue, which takes up the first reel. The actor who plays the giant is the only made adult in the fairy tale.

Gilbert P. Hamilton, who made his home in Chicago several years ago when he was superintendent of the Essanay plant, was seen in the Hotel Sherman one day last week. He was here in the interests of his latest production, "Are Passions Inherited?" (seven reels), which he directed some time ago in Los Angeles and on the Crow Indian reservation. Dorothea ("Dot") Farley adapted this photoplay from Jack Wolf's newspaper story, "The Big Western Hat," and also appears in the principal role. Mr. Hamilton informed me that the rights were recently sold for New York State and South America. A and H. M. Warner, of New York, with offices in the Godfrey Building, are handling the picture. The printing and technical work of the films are being done in the plant of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co.

The Central Film Company and the Central Film Corporation, two separate organizations controlled by Jones, Linick & Schaefer and Nathan Ascher, were recently combined under one charter, and will hereafter be known as the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., of Chicago. The former headquarters at 110 S. State street, will be maintained. The new corporation names Louis J. Selznick, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and Nathan Ascher as officers, and Harry Weiss and F. M. Brockell as managing directors.

Active work has been started on Selig's "The Princess of Patches," which is founded on the well known stage play by Mark Swan. Director Al. Green left for the State of Mississippi last week, where plantation and other scenes called for in the photoplay will be taken. Accompanying him were: Vivian Reed, Maude Baker, Charles LeMoyne, Clara Lambert, Roy Southerland, Frank Weed and about 20 others. Director Green and the company, after finishing the southern scenes, will return to Selig's Chicago studios, where the interior scenes will be made.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Studebaker—"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" will close an eight-weeks' run on December 3, and will be followed on the 5th by Nazimova in "War Brides." Herbert Brenon will come on from New York for the opening.

Ziegfeld—Lillian Walker in "The Dollar and the Law" (Vitagraph) and "The Scarlet Runner."

La Salle—"The Masque of Life" (Signet) will be continued for another week, ending its three weeks' run on December 3. It will be followed by "Idle Wives" (Universal), produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

Colonial—"Intolerance" (D. W. Griffith) opens Tuesday evening, November 28.

Ascher Brothers will open their new house, the Lane Court theater, at Center street and Lane Court, this city, Saturday evening, November 25. The theater seats 1,000 on the main floor, and is strictly modern. This is the tenth theater on the Ascher circuit, the 10 houses having an entire seating capacity for 12,000 people.

Lubliner & Trinz have added the West End theater, at Cicero and West End avenues, to their circuit of houses in Chicago. The house seats 1,500 people, and an orchestra of 10 pieces and a pipe organ play the accompanying music for the pictures. This makes the seventh house on the Lubliner & Trinz circuit.

At the Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of November 26 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Pauline Frederick at the Strand.

AT THE Strand Theater Pauline Frederick was seen in a new photo-drama entitled "Nanette of the Wilds," a story of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, by William Mack. Miss Frederick portrays the role of Nanette, the daughter of a Canadian liquor smuggler who is operating in defiance of the Mounted Police. Williard Mack himself plays the role of O'Brian of the Mounted Police. Others in the cast are: Charles Brant, Frank Joyner, Wallace MacDonald, Macey Harlan, Daniel Pennell, Jean Stewart and Robert Conville. The scenes are all laid in the Canadian North and West and the play was produced by the Famous Players Film Company.

The second official and authentic series of motion pictures of the European war, obtained by special arrangement with Charles Urban, representative of the British Government, were also shown. Another interesting picture was the Stampede, taken at a Western County Fair, and showing wild horse racing, pony express races, bull dogging, trick riding and roping.

Viva Stratton, Carl Rogier and Irene Stolofsky were the soloists.

"An Enemy to the King" at the Rialto.

E. H. Sothern, in a film version of "An Enemy to the King," were the featured attraction at The Rialto. The picture was taken after Mr. Sothern had accustomed himself to the difference between acting on the stage and acting before the camera and for that reason it is a distinct advance over the first of his pictures offered to the public. The regular Triangle program of releases at The Rialto was suspended for a week in order to permit the Sothern picture to be shown. "An Enemy to the King" is a sumptuously costumed production from the Vitagraph Studios. It gives the star a role with which he is perfectly familiar and affords him an opportunity for the display of his well known skill as a fencer. Edith Storey, the Vitagraph star, plays opposite him in the role of Julie De Varion.

"War Brides" at the Broadway.

Nazimova in the powerful eight-reel screen version of "War Brides" is still the attraction at the Broadway. The picture is evidently on for an extended run.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater four pictures were shown: Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Wilfred Lucas was seen in "The Miscroscope Mystery," and a Keystone comedy was also included in the program. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday William S. Hart in "The Devil's Double," and a Mack Sennett production were on the bill.

Louis T. Rogers Forms Company

Will Specialize in Big Productions and in Purchase of State Rights for New York.

LOUIS T. ROGERS, for many years the Fox contract man and Canadian expert who recently resigned from the Fox Film Corporation, has established a business of his own in starting a company which will engage in the buying and selling of state right productions for the state of New York. Mr. Rogers is located at 218 West 42nd Street in which building he occupies the third floor. This floor is devoted to the activities of the Rogson Company of which Mr. Rogers is president. He has just concluded a contract with L. J. Selznick whereby he is to handle all Selznick productions for the State of New York for a period of five years. He has also closed a deal with J. L. Kempner purchasing on behalf of Marcus Loew the New York State rights of the feature known as "The Mask of Life," produced by the Signet Film Company.

Louis T. Rogers.

Mr. Rogers who is a young man and full of nervous energy feels sure that the company he has formed will be a success. He has formed plans for the production of special features. The first production will be based on a widely known play which has had a Broadway success. Mr. Rogers eventually expects to produce a minimum of one big feature a month.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

SANTA BARBARA NEWS.

American Film Company Cuts Down Production—Farewell Dinner to P. G. Lynch.

FROM Santa Barbara comes word this week that the American Film Company is inaugurating a policy of retrenchment and that a great number of employees have been laid off, this is not a great surprise as conditions are the same in Los Angeles; a number of film companies having cut down their producing force to less than half to what it was six months ago. The company is now only operating three companies at the present time, but we are informed that the fourth company may be started shortly. Not long ago nine companies were at work under the Flying A banner.

H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, and a party of friends and associates visited Santa Barbara Sunday this week and called at the American studios. The very same day Mr. Hutchinson and Studio Manager J. R. Crone left for Los Angeles and there was considerable speculation in Santa Barbara whether the chief of the Triangle Film Corporation and president of the American Film Company had met and if there was a possibility of a merger of the American Company with the Triangle interests.

A farewell dinner to P. G. Lynch, who recently resigned as studio manager of the American Film Company, was given at the Arlington Hotel on Tuesday this week. Practically all the employees of the Flying A plant were present at the banquet and everyone took the opportunity to give testimony to the high esteem in which Mr. Lynch is held by the moving picture people in Santa Barbara.

P. G. Lynch.

The climax of a most successful evening was reached when, in behalf of those present, Director James Kirkwood presented Mr. Lynch with a handsome thin model gold watch suitably engraved. A chain, the gift of the guarantee actors and actresses, was also presented and a letter was read from the extra people who took the opportunity to wish Mr. Lynch every success in his new field.

During the evening a handsome bouquet of flowers was sent to Mrs. Lynch by the men at the banquet and later a note of thanks from her was read. R. S. Stebbins, assistant manager at the local plant, who leaves with Mr. Lynch, was presented with a pair of gold cuff links.

Among those present were: Edward M. Langley, James Kirkwood, Clifford Howard, Al Heimri, George Wight, Edward Sloman, W. G. Dowlan, Kenneth B. Clarke, William Russell, C. William Kolb, Jack Halloway, Max Dill, Al Santell, Franklin Ritchie, George Periolat, Ashton Dearhod, Harvey Clark, Harry Von Meter, William Carrol, Charles Newton, Clarence Burton, Reaves Eason, Sid Algiers, Paul Drinkwitz, Art Howard, W. A. Hall, Leslie Alderson, William Vaughn, Ira Morgan, Wm. Gilmore Beymer, John S. Seltz, Carl Widen, Thomas Middleton, John Brown and Joseph Carr.

TO DANCE ON THANKSGIVING EVE.

Many of the Stars of Filmdom Will Appear at the Hollywood Photoplayers' Ball.

Stars of the screen will vie with one another for individual popularity at Shrine auditorium on Thanksgiving eve, when the first grand ball of the Hollywood Photoplayers' Club will be given.

Arthur Shirley, director general of the affair, stated this week that two of filmdom's most prominent luminaries will be chosen to lead the grand march, and that the event will go down in Los Angeles history as the most pretentious ever staged.

A few of the players who have signfied their intention of occupying boxes are: William Farnum, Ruth Roland, Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Fay Tincher, Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, J. Warren Kerrigan, Dustin Farnum, Douglas Fairbanks, Winifred Kingston, Herbert Standing and Mrs. Standing, Charles F. Eyton and Kathlyn Williams (Mrs. Eyton), Thomas H. Ince, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Lewis J. Cody, Tom Santchi, Roscoe Arbuckle, Crane Wilbur, Edna Purviance and Herbert Rawlinson.

The primary object of the ball is to raise funds with which to furnish a clubhouse for the photoplayers. It is planned to make the quarters the most attractive of its kind in the west.

The Hollywood photoplayers' Club, though only in its infancy, already has a pledged membership of 300, with almost as many more applications on the waiting list.

The officers are: Francis Ford, president; Arthur Shirley and Dr. E. Bytell, vice-presidents; Walter E. Fowler, treasurer and attorney, and Harry E. Hoskins, secretary.

Temporary headquarters have been established at 6411 Hollywood Boulevard.

Ince Actor Danced to Death.

While dancing with Ninita Garcia, George Elwell, the young actor of the Triangle-Ince studios, dropped dead in a prize waltz contest at Ocean Park, California, on the evening of November 13. They were competing for a silver loving cup when he collapsed. A physician was summoned, but said that death had been instantaneous with heart failure as the cause.

Elwell was only twenty-one years old, and had only recently returned from the Mexican border, where he had enlisted in the seventh California infantry. He received an honorable discharge from the service on account of physical disability at that time, and had only very recently resumed his studio activities.

He secured favorable attention by his work in "The Raiders" and other Triangle productions before being called to the border.

Fairbanks and Chaplin Do a Turn Together.

The ultimate in comedy has been attained, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin are in pictures together.

This is no tale of broken contracts or shattered hearts of producers. It all came about as a perfectly legitimate part of a day's work and the two highest salaried fun makers are still safely wedded to their respective arts.

Fairbanks was enacting a scene of "The Matrimaniac" across the street from Chaplin's studio. Charlie was cutting capers in front of the camera and spied the Triangle-Fine Arts star. Telling his director to wait a minute, Chaplin rushed into the street in his grotesque make-up and sat down on the curb to watch Fairbanks.

"Now make me laugh, Doug," he said. "I'll be your audience."

Fairbanks entered into the spirit of the occasion and soon he and Chaplin were romping together, unconsciously reeling off a skit that it would take nearly all the money in the motion picture business to buy.

Although the Triangle-Fine Arts cameraman continued cranking his machine, the hard-hearted director ordered the scene deleted as entirely irrelevant to the story in hand.

Both Fairbanks and Chaplin, however, insisted on having prints developed to add to their private collections.

Leave Again for Yosemite Valley.

Paul C. Hurst, associate director at the Signal studios, this week left Los Angeles with a portion of the Helen Holmes feature company for a trip to El Portal in the Yosemite Valley, where he is to make a number of exterior scenes in the production of the eighth and ninth chapters of "A Lass of the Lumberlands."

The company left Los Angeles early in the week and will probably be gone ten days, during which time they will secure more of the unusual woods scenes that have aroused such favorable comment in the chapters of the serial thus far released. Those who made the trip include, besides Mr. Hurst, Helen Holmes, Leo D. Maloney, William Brunton, William Behrens, Charles Wells, Clyde Roe, technical director and a corps of stage carpenters and propertymen. Robert Phelan is to officiate behind the camera.

During this portion of the company's absence, Director General J. P. McGowan is at work on interior scenes for the same two episodes at the studio. With him are working Thomas C. Lingham, Katherine Goodrich and the remaining minor actors of the cast.

This trip of the company to the mountains will probably be their last until snow flies. With the completion of the ninth episode, they will be far enough ahead so that they may continue on interiors for subsequent chapters. Then when the first severe snow falls in the valley, they will leave in a body for El Portal for their last trip. The scenes made at this time will be practically the last in the serial.

Two Film Men Killed in Grand Prize Race.

This year was a disastrous one at the Santa Monica races, when Lewis Jackson, chauffeur for Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, lost control of his car while doing a hundred-miles-an-hour on a dangerous curve, and crashed into four trees. Jackson was instantly killed. His mechanic, John Ghianda, escaped by "stepping out of" the machine before it was torn to pieces. After the flying piece of steel and wood hit the first tree, it crashed into L. B. Jenkins, cameraman of the Keystone Film Company, killing him, and demolishing his camera, which he had been grinding until the impact. A woman running a soda stand was killed. A spectator standing beyond the cameraman was also killed. Grace Cunard and Francis Ford and company were in a box at the grandstand when the wreck occurred and did not learn of the death of their champion until some time later. Miss Cunard was nearly prostrated over the accident. The whole company, which was making a picture around the races, stopped work and went home after the terrible news reached them.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Director John Emerson, Douglas Fairbanks, Assistant Director Jack Scott and sixteen Fine Arts players went to San Diego last week to begin work on a big production on the exposition grounds.

Well-known screen artists will make merry in the cause of charity in a ministrel-vaudeville show next Sunday evening at the Walker theater, No. 732 South Grand avenue, to be followed by a dance in Lincoln Hall, situated in the same building. The entertainment will be under the direction of the B'nai B'rith Lodge, and will be in charge of Harry McCoy, the comedian of the Keystone Film Company.

A sketch written by Mr. McCoy in which he and Jane Waller will appear; a political jollification with Joseph Callahan characterizing "men of yesterday and today"; a minstrel show along new lines with Guy Woodward, Lee Mooser, Lena Rogers, Arthur Brick and Mazie Cartman are the leading attractions.

John Partington, manager of the Imperial theater, of San Francisco, and his wife, started from that city last week for a three day's tour in the Yosemite Valley, but hearing of the heavy snow in the country, drove into Los Angeles and are now spending a few days as the guest of Anita King, the Lasky star. Mr. Partington royally entertained Lasky stars whenever they visited his city. On Monday night this week Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Reid gave a party in honor to the San Francisco exhibitor and his charming wife. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Hal Reid, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Pallette, Mr. and Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa, Miss Anita King, Mr. and Mrs. Billy Mason, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth McGaffey and others.

Judging by the treatment accorded Harold Lockwood, May Allison and Producer Fred J. Balshofer, in Monterey, California, where is now being filmed the exterior scenes of Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island," one might think that these three Yorke-Metro celebrities were candidates for president of the United States. The two daily papers, the Cypress and the American, have been carrying daily interviews with Lockwood-Allison and Balshofer. The Del Monte Hotel gave an elaborate dinner in their honor, the local Monterey theater arranged a special program in celebration of their arrival. The Chief of Police escorted them on a tour of the Executive buildings, and the Carmel Colony, where a majority of our famous paintings are completed, were hosts to them at an informal tea. A group of the artists from the Carmel Colony, witnessed several scenes of Lockwood-Allison in "Pidgin Island" rehearsed and staged by Producer Fred J. Balshofer.

After J. Warren Kerrigan withdrew from Lois Weber's Universal feature production, "The Mysterious Mrs. Misslewhite," Harrison Ford, Broadway actor, was engaged to play with Mary MacLaren in the picture which is being refilmed.

Ford has had a notable legitimate stage career and he played featured roles with Robert Edeson and also with May Mannering in "Glorious Betsy," during its New York run. He played the lead in "Excuse Me" and also appeared in a photoplay version of this comedy. He was in two productions with W. H. Crane, and has played in eastern stock. Later Ford appeared with Louis Mann in "The Bubble," and also had a leading role in the New York run of "Rolling Stones."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Newspaper Work.

EXAMPLE is better than precept, and how a thing is done is a lot more helpful than how it should be done. We believe that motion picture exhibitors in the comparatively few years the pictures have been running have shown more examples of really good work than the managers of dramatic attractions have shown in double and perhaps triple that length of time. There is a reason for this in the smallness of the admission price which requires that the house be intensively handled if results are to be gained. Through the good will of exhibitors this department has reproduced the best of this work, but this is the first time we have had the chance to go over the actual campaign of a trained advertising man in newspaper work, and we believe that even the managers of the smaller houses will be interested in the matter that follows, though it is the campaign of the Stillman theatre, of Cleveland. This means a big house in a city, with a capacity and admission prices that permit a larger advertising appropriation than most houses enjoy. All of the advertisements are prepared and placed by C. L. Madden, of the Fuller & Smith Advertising Agency. Mr. Madden is an advertising expert who has familiarized himself with the picture theatre business, and not a picture theatre man who learned to do advertising, wherein this matter is different from most of that appearing in this department.

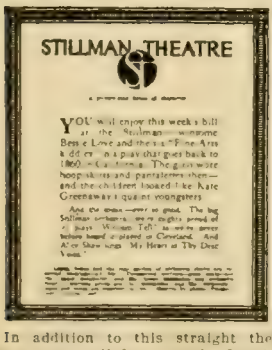
See ad (classified) on page 21

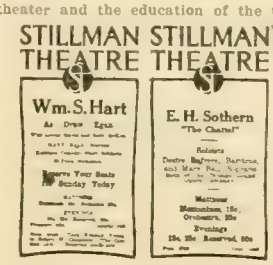
In the first place note these two advertisements. Both are run in the same issue of the same evening paper. This paper accepts advertisements of theaters in its classified pages, and most of the houses use these pages, since the rate is cheaper than the theatrical advertising. We do not know just how the rates compare, but on an average it should be from two to two and a half times cheaper to go into the classified pages, and on some sheets the disproportion is even greater. One New York paper, for example, charges ten cents a line for classified stuff and fifty cents for theatrical advertising. So the Stillman takes twenty-eight lines in the classified space. But Cleveland is a large place with a transient population. The traveler, when he is looking for amusement, looks for the theatrical advertising, so the smaller advertisement (just large enough to let in the cut) is run in the theater column. It is only eight lines, but it gets the house where the traveler can see. Another paper, which does not let theatrical advertisements run in the classified section gets a two-inch advertisement.



STILLMAN THEATRE
YOU will enjoy this week's bill at the Stillman—wonderful Bessie Love and the six "Fine Arts" a delight as a pay day get back to 1860—Civil War days. The girls wore hoop skirts and pantalettes then—and the children looked like Kate Greenaway's quaint youngsters
STILLMAN THEATRE
WHEN you reserve seats at the Still man you reserve seats at any time you please. Your seat is held and occupied
You don't have to stand up, you don't have to wait in the lobby, you don't have to come early
That is the value (EVERY one of it) of a GOOD seat. But you can't get it and every seat occupied unless you have reserved

In addition to this straight theatrical advertising the house uses some very well-done panels five inches deep and two columns wide. There is always mention of the current attraction, but it is the Stillman theater that is being advertised for the greater part. The one on the left, dealing largely with the bill, was run on Monday. The other was a Saturday advertisement and is directed to the seat reservation scheme with after-mention of the remaining performances of that week's program. Monday it is more important to advertise the bill that will run that week. On Saturday the large advertisements will take care of the coming program and house talk will pay better.

These house talks, straightforward, characteristic and convincing, do more real good for a house than the praising of the current bill. We show but two of a number of examples. The Stillman is a still-new theater and the education of the theater-going public is important.



The morning papers get four inches against two inches in the afternoon papers. The family appointments are more apt to be made in the morning, and the woman shopper looks over the morning paper before starting downtown. These appear in the theatrical column, the panel ads. are given the run of the paper or are specified for the woman's page, local news or some other place where it will most likely reach the class of patron at which it is aimed. This is another point in expert advertising. The advertising is not merely dumped into the pages. It is put where it will do the most good. Specified position generally costs a little more, but it is worth it if it is needed, otherwise "run of paper" is ordered and the advertisement can be printed anywhere that pleases the make-up man. One advertisement in the batch sent supplements the afternoon stuff and gets three inches "run of paper." It catches the reader who purposely avoids the theatrical column as not being interested. The theater ads. are dodged when up bobs this estray, and interest is gained despite the conscious effort to avoid it.

Mr. Madden does not put this forward as an ideal make-up for a Sunday announcement. He says "This is what I call a horrible example of hurry-up work, but it does show up because the make-up man can't bury it." It is a two eights and somewhere hereabouts you'll find a reproduction of a half-page in which this advertisement is used. Just below you will see part of a negative cut; one with black ground and white letters. In theory this is still more prominent and it is in theory, but white on black requires large letters, and the black cut merely announces Romeo and Juliet where Mr. Madden tells all about his program in the same amount of space and gets practically the same attention; indeed we are inclined to believe that the Stillman will be seen first. Compare it with the other advertisements on the sheet and see how it stands out. That hand-drawn note to the left has nothing to do with the matter There was an advertisement on the other side—one of the run-of-paper panel ads. Two other Saturday and Sunday ads are also shown here. One is 7¼ inches across three columns, and the other is 7½ over two. Both of them are kept from associating with other advertising on the same page, not alone by border, but by white space, as well, to make assurance doubly sure. Notice in the half-page reproduction how the Keith advertisement runs to the column rules. It is forbidding to the eye and only the big lines get much attention. Unless those can hold you, the entire advertisement is lost. Mr. Madden uses smaller type, but it is inviting and eye-catching. He has more words to his space but they do not appear to be so many because they are not crowded. More than that, it is all characteristic, as much a trade-mark as the house monogram. In a couple of months the Cleveland newspaper readers will know the Stillman advertising as far as they can see the paper.

As a brief resume here is the campaign. Four-inch advertisements in the morning papers and two inches in the afternoon editions, six days a week, with from fifteen to twenty or more inches on Saturday or Sunday. Special advertisements specifically not in the theatrical column to catch the unwary, all-open composition with the house monogram always and the name of the house and name of attraction in the upper half of the advertisement. The only exception to this last rule in some thirty advertisements is that one in which the reserved seats are the real feature of the advertisement, and here the rule holds good still, for the feature comes to the top. Look back a moment to that half page. You'll notice that the Stillman and not Selznick offers Miss Young. The Standard wastes space advertising Fox

Who is THE SHIELDING SHADOW?
Saturday, October 21st, 1916
AND
Every Saturday, Matinee and Evening, for 15 Weeks

Tarleton Winchester, of Pathe's, sends in a throwaway gotten out by the Temple, Buffalo, which forms an acrostic for "The Shielding Shadow." It is reproduced here for the benefit of those who have this serial and as well for those who wish to go to the trouble of getting up similar lines for some other attraction. The Temple management has saved the Stain exhibitors the trouble, by getting out this sheet, which is 6 by 12 inches in the original, common news stock. Anything of this sort takes well. It plays on the curiosity of the recipient. It is just a handbill and he starts to throw it down. But he sees it is an acrostic. Then he has to read down to see what it is, and by that time he will read across to see how well the maker did his job. Of course it is possible to speak learnedly of the psychology of advertising, but it is even more simple to speak everyday talk and say that anything that will appeal to the curiosity will gain attention in the degree in which it appeals. That is why there is so much stuff that is good for once and not more frequently. The degree of curiosity is not as great the second time.

Writing Hymns.

All the time we've been wondering where Jimquin was, the Los Angeles hustler has been sore because we kidded some of his poetry. To prove himself a poet he has written a song, or rather completed one, started in the trenches by his brother, Charles Henry Quinn, who sent it to him when his regiment was ordered to the front line and his chances of coming back and finishing the job seemed to be rather slim. Jimquin writes that it is being sung by "regular" singers, and the novelty alone should carry it along. But beyond that, the song has merit and timeliness. It is published by the Ballenger Company, Los Angeles.

Stitching.

Walter H. Brooks, of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., is now wire-stitching his program instead of using the six-page folder form. This is partly because he is now using an eight-pager. Another change is in the time table. Instead of the formal time table he now follows each title with the hours of playing, so that the information is directly below the subject the reader has become interested in. This is a better scheme than the formal table, even though it does entail a little more work.

Moving the Girl.

The Garden theater, Detroit, planned to run the Little Girl Next Door, a slaver play, the entire week recently, and had to quit after the second day and go back to the regular program. Decent people will not attend, and the others stay away when they learn that the stuff is not as superheated as they have been led to expect. Profit by their experience and keep off the stuff.

That Fashion Show.

An exhibitor reports that he tried every big dry goods store in town and could not hook up with one for a fashion show as each store wanted to give its own and get the crowd to the store. To effect this they gave out souvenirs to each patron. That's easy to beat. Point out that a theater show means more than a store show, and then offer to have printed up coupons good for a souvenir if presented at the store the following day. That will hock the show up to the store and get the people over to the store in a buying mood after they have seen the fashions.

Three in One.

Joe E. Tabor, of the Majestic, Belvidere, Ill., sends in a half-page advertisement that serves as an anniversary advertisement, a general advertisement and to tell the week's program. The layout is simple, but effective, the boxing, with space between serving to keep the various sections apart. Study this advertisement carefully and you will see that it has too much copy for a half page. Were it set with rules boxing off it would be too heavy, but by boxing each detail by itself instead of letting the rule join others, the effect is that of a series of detached advertisements, each of which is observed separately and not as a whole. As a single advertisement cut up with rule it would be repellant to the eye. With these individual panels it looks well and will be read. The intelligent use of rule is often half the trick. Sometimes it is even more.

That Matinee Musicale.

J. Ernest Tompkins, who used to sing on the stage, is now managing the Princess, Colorado Springs, Colorado. He is running a series of matinee musicales on Friday afternoons, five numbers and a feature picture, the music running about half an hour. It is all furnished by the theater orchestra with Mr. Tompkins as soloist, and they are making business. Anything that is novel will draw for a time at any rate, and will last if it is good. And the closer it comes to a social function, the better it serves as a matinee attraction. We think that almost any house can get up a musicale with home talent and make money with it. A special program, small, but good, is a part of the scheme.

Punched Tickets.

John J. Farren, of the Victoria, Rochester, N. Y., sends in a free ticket he recently sent out. One ticket was sent in the regular house ticket envelope and was stencil cut "special" across the stub. This beats the usual specially printed ticket, but if the seat coupon is really good for a special reserved seat, many might fear to come with friends because they would be separated from them. Additional advertising was carried on the face of the envelope which announced the bill for the latter half of the week. Now and then some Monday tickets to a judiciously compiled list, and for an attraction known to be better than usual, will bring personal advertising of a sort that cannot be purchased, but be certain that you have a feature and not a bloomer. In this case Mr. Farren had Douglas Fairbanks in Manhattan Madness.

Good Slogan.

"You get so much and pay so little" is the house slogan of the Cross Street, Somerville, Mass. That says a lot; much more, in fact, than the statement that Boston people pay more to see the same subjects. The house uses a single-sheet program 4½ by 9, yellow paper printed in red and green. Red and black would be better on yellow, and we are inclined to think that it is more or less of a waste to run the second color. The bill is plain and readable and the second color does not produce a result commensurate with its cost. In featuring small paper it is well to proportion cost to result produced, and it is seldom that a second impression pays, even on larger work unless it is desired to emphasize some gala occasion.

Perhaps the Solution.

The Columbia theater, Attleboro, Mass., lately advertised that owing to the fact that the current attraction was a vampire play a special program would be offered for the children. The vamp was shown at 2:30 and the special program at four, the evening offering the vampire lady once more. Most of the kiddies come in the afternoon, and with a special bill as good as the feature, but of a sort better planned for children, it would seem that all objections are met. The kiddie feature was not of a recent release date, but the youngsters do not care so that it is new to them and still in good shape. It was not an essentially child story, being a Bill Hart western. This house has lately inaugurated a four-page program and is doing very nicely with it.

Real Lobby Work.

Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty, Spokane, recently woke up long enough to ship us a photograph of a recent lobby display and then probably went back to his bunk for another six months so far as sending stuff out is concerned. He is a most irritating sort of person. He does a lot of real things every week, but he is too lazy to shoot them along. He had the Triangle, the Thoroughbred, the other day and thought it would be something of a novelty to show a horse to a public accustomed to automobiles, so he hired a horse from a harness shop instead of the livery stable, dubbed her Miss Minta, dolled her all up and set her in the lobby. He says solemnly that even the policeman and the street sweeper came to see. He adds that he doesn't know if it helped business any as he is full all the time, but also adds that it is the house and not the management that is full. We know that. Washington went dry some time ago. Just in passing, that's an all around pretty lobby, don't you think?

Getting Better.

The Film Forecast, the organ of the Rowland and Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, is getting better each issue. It is only a matter of time when M. J. C. Kornblum will have the printer doing what he should. One good feature of the new issue is the added space that "Korny's Corner" gets. It goes around the corner now and onto another page. One of his late paragraphs runs:

> Our friends the Censors got in some of their fine work both on "The Wheel of the Law" and "Anton, the Terrible." If we could get a motion picture of the curlicues of their way of reckoning, there would be a line of lace manufacturers a block long waiting to buy the rights for a crazy quilt lace pattern.

It would drive a lace-maker crazy, but it would be a fine thing to put on the back of bank notes instead of the geometrical lathe patterns. It would defy the counterfeiter.

What is most needed now is a more definite division of program and letter press.

Good Work.

The Mutual booklet for A Lass of the Lumberlands, their new serial, is a pretty piece of printing and shows how well purple and buff work in combination. More than that, it gives the exhibitor plenty of material for advance work without overloading.

Parents Must Sign.

H. A. Chenoweth, of the Opera House, Westfield, Mass., offered free admission to the children at a matinee if they presented a signed permission from their parents. The signing had to be done on the card he supplied. It may have been done to circumvent some local law about admitting minors, but can you imagine any better way of gaining the attention of the parents for the night show? Probably he had this in mind, for just below the permit is the line "Better come down to-night and see for yourself.

Andrews Butts In.

Frank G. Andrews, who is becoming known to the readers of this publication through his articles on phases of exhibiting, is going to put some of his theories into practice in Washington, N. J., where he stays when he cannot find an excuse for visiting New York. He is going into it on the installment plan by running Saturday night shows in a local house. He starts in with an announcement in the local paper, explaining that he takes the personal tone he does since the town is so small that he knows most of the residents. His initial announcement is three and a half inches across two columns and it reads:

ANNOUNCEMENT:

> If I correctly sense public sentiment in Washington, there is a demand for a higher grade of moving pictures, particularly dramas, than has heretofore been show in any of the local theaters. Acting under this belief, I have leased the Broad Street Theater for a series of Saturday night shows. The service I have selected is the famous Triangle service, unquestionably the highest brand produced, certainly by far the most costly.
> I have every confidence that an intelligent public will quickly appreciate these pictures and welcome their introduction in Washington. No circus methods will be employed in advertising these attractions. The enterprise deserves encouragement—a visit or two to this theater as a test—after which the pictures should draw purely on merit.
> Because of the cost of this superior service, I am obliged to fix the admission at fifteen cents to adults and ten cents to children, which is the regulation charge everywhere for Triangle pictures. However, there will be six reels of drama and two of comedy—the latter being the famous Keystone brand. So you see the extra five-cent charge is accounted for not only in quality, but in quantity.
> On the opening, Saturday night—October 14—I will show Frank Keenan in a strong Southern play entitled "The Coward." The comedy is "A Favorite Fool," with the famous stage comedian, Eddie Foy, in the leading role.
> Comedy starts at seven o'clock sharp; drama at 7:30. Come at either hour. Second show starts at nine.
> FRANK G. ANDREWS.

He is also distributing a four-page folder on almost much the same lines, but more ample in statement, and announces that he is not going to advertise heavily, but trust to the intelligence of his fellow townsmen. His campaign is unusual, but it seems to be well planned. He is an old newspaper man, well known, and his statements and promises carry weight. It will be a campaign of personality plus pictures of merit and it will be interesting to watch the outcome.

Where Is Mr. Wall?

It's about time that S. E. Wall got busy with his pen and ink. We are getting lonesome for a letter.

Checking the Passes.

H. W. Heiberger, of the Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., uses a check form of pass which he credits to the Lyceum, Clovis, N. M. He has them printed up on "safety" paper, the same as a regular check, and they pay to the person named "one and no more admissions," the "no more," being set as the cents are written on a regular check, as a fraction. The check is payable in "Current Funs" and guaranteed by the Board of Censors. It is a joyous thing to get a pass, but these make pleasure perfect.

Performances de Luxe.

The Regent, Philadelphia, offers something novel in its time table. The times of performances are given and some of these are starred. The program explains that those with an asterisk are "performances de luxe" with full orchestra, while the others are "intermediate" and the music is supplied by the grand organ. It is one of the little refinements that marks careful management. People can know what to expect.

We wish the Strand, New York, would do something of the sort. The way they switch from organ to orchestra and back again is unnerving. There seems to be neither rhyme nor reason.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Building Up.

BECAUSE you are able to add two and two and get a result of four, do not think that enough. Progress until you can add two and two to two and get six. In other words, do not be content to have "enough" plot for five reels. Get all the plot you can crowd into five reels for a five reel story: not merely enough to go bumping along.

This perhaps is at variance with the teachings of some studios. Dr. R. Ralston Reed, for example, was recently the guest of the Lasky studio in Los Angeles; the trip being the prize he won in the Columbia contest. There he was told that his five reel play contained enough plot for twelve reels: not the play that is going to be blamed on him on the screen, but the one he really wrote. "What we really want," explained Mr. De Mille, in substance, "is about three reels of story and two reels in which to develop the action properly." As an example he mentioned the Drew comedies, which have slight but perfectly developed stories.

At other studios he was told that this was all wrong, that there must be more dependence placed upon movement than psychology. Both are right and both are wrong according to viewpoint. Stories must be framed to please varying tastes, and magazine readers who affect Scribner's do not admire Adventure and vice versa, yet both classes must be served. But plot is not necessarily action, and the plot must be intensified to the limit if it is to stand its best chance of acceptance, so do not be content with a good enough plot, but strengthen and develop it to the utmost, even though you may subsequently be forced to condense it to get the length. Half, and more than half, of the stories sent out are faulty and do not sell merely because the author stopped the moment he got enough instead of keeping on until he got his best.

Wickes on Song Writing.

Song writing seems to have an almost fatal fascination for the average man or woman, and more of the innocent fall victims to the wiles of the fake publisher than become prey to the fake photoplay schemes, and the pseudo literary agent who advertises for story writers and newspaper correspondents. This is largely, perhaps, because of the large returns from hits, but in part to the inherent tendency of emotion to express itself in song. In writing the Popular Song E. M. Wickes has given us a very good book on the subject. It is practical, optimistic, but not unduly so, and gives the reader a clear and unbiased survey of the field from which he may deduce his individual chances as well as telling what should be done and how this is to be accomplished. It belongs in that comparatively small class of text books that are helpful because they teach instead of merely laying down the law. If it is possible for the reader to write songs, this book will supply the inspiration and instruction he lacks. Mr. Wickes' style is simple, direct and pleasing. Perhaps it is best described as "human." It is a book that has a real reason for being and forms a valuable addition to the Writer's Library. (Writing the Popular Song, E. M. Wickes, Writer's Library, Home Correspondence School, Springfield, Mass., 181 pages plus XIII. $1.35 by mail.)

A Brain Polisher.

Several readers have requested something along the lines of the "German money" idea, saying that they get help from working over such things. Suppose we work it on these lines: Dora has discovered Jim because of his intemperate habits. He drinks all the more and commits a crime for which he serves a term in prison. When he gets out he learns that she has married Tom. He gets drunk, and while in that condition comes to her house to kill her. Write one or more scenes commencing with his arrival at the house, showing how she gets out of the situation. Be brief and dramatic. If you will send in your scenes with a return envelope, your development will be criticized and returned to you. The right is reserved to publish one or more of the solutions. Unlike the "German money," there is no catch to this one. It is merely a test of your inventiveness. To make it more interesting we'll bar these solutions in advance:

She shows him her baby.

He sees a picture of themselves taken long ago, or other mementos of the past.

That Atlas Contest.

Although we do not like script contests, we think that the Atlas-Boston Transcript contest differed from most in that it was fairly conducted and with a view to getting the best material. As a matter of fact there was but one play that was really worth the money paid and this was given the first prize by practically all the judges. The rest of the opinions varied markedly, but eight of our first ten nominations were in the eleven prize winners, and two of those not scored by us were given awards because to others they appealed as effective though the ideas were old. But the contest proves again our point that if honestly handled they are not worth the expense save in advertising. Thirty scripts went to the final round and twenty-nine of these were clearly not of prize calibre.

Too Close.

A few weeks ago Marc Edmund Jones lost his clothes and his library and even his beloved phonograph. A sheriff came and took them; not because Jones doesn't pay his bills, but because the man he was boarding with was being sued for divorce by his wife and she attached all the furniture. The Jones shirts were taken along with the rest of the stuff while he was hunting an express wagon, and they could not locate the moving van or his ex-host's wife for several weeks. And it was so close to home that it never occurred to Jones to make it into a comedy. He just told it up and down the street as a good story, and probably there are three or four versions in the studios right now. It was too close to home. He lacked perspective. Some script writers are the other way about. They write so close that they write of things that interest only themselves. If you can average between Jones and the other fellows you'll be about wright. If you do comedy let it be intrinsically funny. It is not funny merely because you took part in it.

One Phase of Synopsis.

Recently a producing manager wrote us that our synopses were too short. He wanted more detail. In part he said:

> One fault I find with your synopses is that they are too brief. It would be better if you injected more business into your synopses and thus get them fuller. We really don't care for a working script, as our director prefers to prepare his own plots.

We send only a two or three hundred word synopsis because we are not trying to sell on synopsis. We tell what the story is about and offer to send the plot of action if the story interests the director. Here is one director who wants greater detail of action, and yet who does not want a working script. What does he want? The working script would give him the business in detail. Then, if he wanted to make his own plot, he could do so with the fullest information that the author could give him. That is where the synopsis only scheme falls short. The director never gets the full value out of the stuff he buys because he refuses the author's full aid. The position is inconsistent. If he is able to develop the bare idea, what does he need of action? If he needs the action, why not take it all and improve that to suit his own ideas if he absolutely must muss things up?

We do not offer synopses in the usual sense of the term. It is easy, but it is slovenly. But because we offer scripts to companies of varying needs from polite comedy to slapstick, we do offer a sketch of the basic idea and develop the script to suit. This is not something that the average free lance can do, but the free lance should not offer merely a suggestion. It doesn't pay in the long run, and we know several writers who will be in a pretty pickle presently when full scripts are again demanded.

No Inquest.

There will be no inquest club this season. The response was too small to make it worth while trying to build up the affair, and so the idea has been dropped. We are sorry for the sake of those who did wish to come in, but they were not numerous enough.

Advice.

You will find that, as a rule, the person most willing to give advice is generally the one least qualified to give good advice. It is the man who does not know who is usually the most eager to tell what he thinks he knows. Do not be in too much of a hurry to take advice and convince yourself that the advice is good before you act upon it.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Important.

New York Operators' Notice.

Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union No. 306, I. A. T. S. E., is the body with which all operators of Greater New York should be affiliated. For years past that organization has sought to better the working conditions of New York men, and at the present time it numbers approximately 65 per cent. of the operators of Greater New York within its membership.

This, however, is not satisfactory, and the union now proposes entering upon a vigorous campaign of organization.

In order to furnish opportunity for non-members to meet and hear arguments advanced as to why they should join with their fellow workmen, and the setting forth of advantages to be derived through affiliation the union has arranged for a series of meetings to be held at 12 o'clock midnight on every Thursday in December, as follows:

December 7. Broadway Casino, 790 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

December 14. St. Louis Hall, 443 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

December 28. Cortland Casino, 585 to 597 Cortland avenue, Bronx, New York.

December 21. Parkway Palace, 110th street and Fifth avenue, Manhattan

These meetings have been arranged as conveniently as possible to the end that all operators may attend them. Admission to the meetings is only to be gained by showing a New York operator's license card.

Regardless of what you may think, feel or say, it will be well worth your while to invest an hour and a half of your time in attending any or all of these meetings to which you are hereby extended a cordial invitation by Local No. 306. The editor will be present and, among others, will address you on the benefits of organization. You incur no obligation to join because you attend.

Question No. 166.

Is there any way to tell which arm is grounded without taking the lamp apart?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 156.

The Roll of Honor on Question 156 is: C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; F. N. Irvin, Lufkin, Texas.

I have selected the reply of Brother Linstruth as best suited to the needs of publication.

Reply to Question No. 156.

By C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.

The Question:

What ought to be the height of screen above floor of stage, or above main floor of auditorium where there is no stage?

The Answer:

The height of the screen above the stage floor or above the floor of the auditorium will depend upon many things. First: On the ordinary stage if the screen is hung well down stage it is best to have it quite near the floor, say 3 feet above, which will permit of a good black border all around. If the screen is well up stage, say on the back wall, it must be high enough so that those in the front row of seats can see the bottom of the picture without difficulty, and must not be so high that the top of the picture cannot be seen from the back gallery seats. These heights will vary according to the height of stage, slope of floor and height of balcony, as well as the position of the screen on the stage and the nearness of the front row of seats.

In a theater having no stage, but with a middle aisle, the screen must be high enough so that the light ray will clear the heads of the people as they pass in and out along the aisle. I believe in the majority of cases this will require at least 6 feet above the floor, where the auditorium floor has the ordinary slope. I believe a picture having 6 feet between its lower edge and the floor would allow everybody to see the bottom of the picture, but in considering all this we must also not overlook the fact that the picture should be gotten as nearly as possible in line, up and down, with the lens; this latter point is of very great importance.

[This is a fairly good reply, but there are one or two points which have been overlooked, viz.: the nearer the picture can be brought to the stage floor without obstructing the view thereof the better, because it is more nearly imitating actual stage conditions where the real thing is on. So far as the black border be concerned, it is not important that it extend under the picture if the stage floor in front of the picture be painted black; that is to say, the bottom edge of the black border is not important. Another thing: Where there is no stage, but merely a blank front wall, if we place the picture too high there is always a tendency to make it appear as though we were actually looking at a picture on the wall, and this has some effect in destroying the highly desirable illusion of real life.]

Speed Merchant.

P. Young, Sarnia, Ont., says:

Some one has been heaving rocks, and one lit pretty close to me. In the department, October 21st issue, I notice an article concerning my work at the Crescent Theatre. I would like to explain a few things which will prove to you that the writer was not such a wise guy after all, though he has me advertised as a speed merchant, and says that my picture jumps a lot. The Crescent Theatre is a very pretty house, both outside and in. It is not of the "store room" type, but is built as a theatre from the ground up, and is up to date in every respect. Its seating capacity is 498, and it has but one floor. It is equipped with the best money can buy, even to an automatic ticket machine in the box office. In the operating room are two Powers Six A motor-driven machines, which project their perfect picture on a Satin Gold Fibre screen, width 14 feet 10 inches. Distance from lens to center of screen 78 feet 6 inches; size of machine aperture 11-16x29-32. I pull 36 to 40 ampers D. C. at the arc, delivered by a Fairbanks-Morse motor generator set, but we are forced to dispose of this, owing to a change from 60 to 25 in cycle of the current. In place of this we will have a Fort Wayne generator set and double lamp control. Now I will tell about the jump the critic saw. I changed the intermittent sprocket on one machine for a new one and when putting the sprocket on the shaft I noticed it slipped on much too easily. I was certain at the time there would be trouble, but under the conditions was obliged to take a chance, and that was the cause of the slight jump in the picture, which was taken out the next morning. I run my machines at a speed ranging from 60 to 70 feet of film a minute, and thus get the best possible picture with what I have to do with. My picture is steady, clear, and of sharp focus; also there is absolutely no jump, except such as may be due to imperfections in film perforations. I am now on my eleventh year operating, and can produce the goods.

All of which is set forth in justice to Brother Young. I am more and more coming to the conclusion that the publication of comments on projection is not a very good policy, except where they contain my own observations. Almost always there is a dispute over it, and I am not in position to know who is right or who is wrong. However, in justice to Friend Young, he certainly talks like a man who knows his business, and I am therefore inclined to credit his version of the matter.

Censor Spectacle.

J. Frank Moore, Dover, N. H., sends in his idea of a pair of spectacles to be worn at moving picture shows. He says: "Let every one be his or her own censor. If they do not wish to see a nice Vampire, or Kellermann picture, let them pull down the blinds at the objectionable part. How convenient! Instead of cutting out portions of the film which others wish to see, when that part comes along, bing! down with the blinds; count ten, bing! up with the blinds. All serene. They are cheaper than Censorship Boards, and are more satisfactory. Incidentally protest Federal censorship. Stick up for your rights. I never did believe in a few men or women telling everybody else in the country what they ought to see and what they ought not to see.

Optical Dope.

The three cornered argument between Martin, Solar and Griffiths has piled things in on me so fast that it has really gotten things into a bit of a muddle, and I guess we will have to some extent "begin over again." But regardless of the disputes between the brothers, there is no manner of question but we are advancing, and the benefit which the motion picture industry will derive in this matter will be most largely due to the credit of the three gentlemen named. Brother Solar sent in a long, highly technical article dealing with lens construction; also he criticised Martin pretty strongly on certain points. I sent this whole matter to Brother Martin, with Solar's consent, and since Friend Solar's criticisms have been referred to in print, I think it is due Martin that the present letter be published. Here it is:

In reply to your letter of the 25th inst., and the enclosed matter by Friend Solar, . . . when I started to read his article I thought I was going to get an awful rap for what I didn't know about focal lengths, principal points, air spaces, the action of positive and negative lenses, etc. I have, however, failed to discover that he touches upon any real principles that I do not already understand; moreover, I have also actually used these same principles in the design work of the new forms of condensers already sent in. (As yet not published.—Ed.) I have slowly developed and classified the results already obtained, and the time is approaching for the discovery of a practical condenser of improved design which will greatly surpass the performance of the types now in use. Now when I started this work of design I realized that a condenser was not required to give results of fine definition of image as is an objective lens, therefore I discarded the tedious algebraic formulas which Solar gives, and substituted, so far as possible, the equivalent and more wieldy trigonometric and graphical methods, which are the proper thing for the work of primary design. Solar's highly detailed formulas are no doubt necessary for the calculation of a Petzval objective, such as he shows, but if he would apply his formulas to any of my condenser designs I don't think the practical difference in final results would amount to much, provided I have not made any serious numerical errors in my own calculations.

Referring to my article of Sept. 23, it was intended for general information—merely to show the possibility of further developing the regular form of condenser. I paid no attention to nodal points, or other refinements apart from the purpose of the article. But Solar says I don't understand the position of conjugate points for combinations of lenses. Well, I'll bet I do, though it is quite true that my methods in this particular are not those generally used. With regard to my article of Sept. 30, I concede Solar to be correct in claiming that the diameter of the aperture lens, as I show it, will not effect the aberrations, provided its focus and other conditions remain the same. I was a little tangled there with the idea of reducing aberration by stopping down the lens with a diaphragm. But, on the other hand, I most emphatically do contend that the aperture lens, as I there show it, will produce less aberration in the screen image in proportion as it is placed closer to the film, and vice versa. When the lens is placed close to the film, each point of the film is acted upon by only a very small portion of the lens, and this small portion having only a slight range of aberration, consequently the definition of the virtual image will suffer little. But if the lens (uncorrected) is placed as much as an inch forward of the film, the cone of light which diverges forward from a point on the film will be intercepted by a larger area of the lens, thus comprising a greater range of aberration, which in turn must injure the definition of the virtual image. I believe it is of very great importance to make this point clear, so I illustrate it by a drawing which also gives the experiment for verifying the theory. This is also of much practical interest because it may prove the possibility of using a simple uncorrected aperture lens in conjunction with any regular form of objective. I don't know just how the Sabo lens deals with this item, but of course if the aperture factor is duly corrected within itself the above difficulty is largely overcome. But whatever may be the performance of the Sabo lens, I feel pretty sure that its usefulness must be much handicapped by the present short distance from condensers to aperture. I am working on the new condenser designed to increase the efficiency of the aperture lens in this very respect. It is bound to come, and in the end all things will be perfect because it is the "order of the function."

"Would'st thou possess thy heritage, essay,
By use to render it thy own!
What we employ not but impedes our way,
That which the hour creates, that can it use alone!"

An Interesting Question.

B. L. Corwell, Sour Lake, Texas, comes in with the following interesting query. He says:

What would be the effect on screen if one places two slides precisely alike in each of the carriers of a dissolving stereopticon, projecting both to the screen at the same time? Will the picture on the screen stand out in relief by the blending of the two slides, or will it simply make a brighter and clearer picture?

This is rather an interesting question, although it is entirely theoretical, because I don't believe it would be practical, in actual work, to get slides to register perfectly with each other on the screen. Never having seen this particular stunt tried I really do not know just what would happen, but I should imagine that if the slides were perfectly registered with each other the effect would be to bring out the high lights very strongly, and to make a very beautiful projection. It would not amount to the same thing as doubling the amperage on one slide, but I should think would have the approximate effect of increasing the amperage on one slide by about two-thirds. However, there may be other effects. I don't know.

On the other hand, if the slides were just a tiny bit out of register there might be to some extent the stereoscopic effect. Then again it might simply serve to blur the image. I don't know. It would, however, be an interesting experiment for operators to make, provided it is possible to secure two slides exactly alike in all particulars, and further provided a dissolving stereopticon is available. I would like to hear reports on this particular stunt, not that I think is has any practical value, but merely as an interesting experiment.

From Paducah.

For more than a year Local Union No. 281, I. A. T. S. E., Paducah, Ky., has been endeavoring to get the City Electrical Inspector to approve the passage of an ordinance requiring all motion picture operators to be at least 21 years of age, and their assistants not less than 18.

At last, however, the local has been successful, and the Board of City Commissioners has passed the ordinance. This department is thoroughly in accord with the limits therein set, except that we believe 19 would have been better for the assistant, which would give him a two years' apprenticeship. Congratulations to Local 281.

Theater Man's Paradise.

R. H. Fulton, vice-president and secretary of the E. E. Fulton Company, Chicago, Ill., send in the following:

A few weeks ago it was my privilege to spend an extremely enjoyable week end with the boys of Camp 133, near Hammond, Ind., through the courtesy and kindness of my esteemed friend Bayless Cosner of Local 133 I. A., Hammond, Ind. The camp is the result of a very commendable idea, originating with Friend Cosner, to establish a recreation spot where the boys could put in what spare time they had in the open air, and taste the joys of camp life. The camp location, as may be seen from the photograph, is ideal, as is also the manner in which the whole thing is managed. Order and cleanliness everywhere prevail, and there is never an occurrence to mar the joy of anyone. The camp has proved to be a very popular place, and many of the town people, including the biggest exhibitors, pitch their tents there at week ends, and join the boys in all the sports and games. I spent one of the happiest days of my life at Camp 133, returning home filled with enthusiasm for the idea, and with added admiration for my friend Cosner, whose big hearted thoughtfulness made the camp and its joys possible for the boys in his territory.

The photograph certainly shows that the camp is a beautiful place. It also, if you look closely, shows there is fishing. Notice the fish poles sticking out from the side of the picture, evidently being held by some disciple of Isaac Walton seated on the bridge from whence the photograph was apparently taken. It is a good idea all right all right. A properly conducted camp of this kind not only makes for better health, but it is a much cleaner, better way of spending a vacation than loafing around town trying to see how many tall, foamy ones you can absorb in a given amount of time.

Stick to the Truth.

Joseph L. Aaron, secretary Local Union No. 302, Calgary, Alberta, says:

> In looking over the department, October 14th issue, I notice a report from one Paul Baron, Coleman, Alberta (population 300) in which he makes certain statements with regard to Alberta needing a waking and shaking up. He also complains of lack of organization in this Province. Now Brother Richardson, I shall not waste much of your space, but I would like to advise the aforementioned gentleman to stick a little more closely to the truth. There are only two cities of any size in this Province, viz: Calgary and Edmonton, and in both these cities the operators are thoroughly organized; also the locals have working agreements with all the theatres in the cities named. In Calgary we have a membership of about thirty. The scale is $25 per week of six days, six hours per day. The theatres are open twelve hours per day, and employ two operators in each house. Most of the theatres have motor generator sets or mercury arc rectifiers, and Powers Six A or Six B projectors. At the theatre where I am employed, the Grand, one of the best houses in the Dominion of Canada, we have two of the latest types Simplex. You therefore see so far as the equipment and organization in this city be concerned there is no need of any waking or shaking up. As for results on the screen, I think we can very well hold our own with the operator from Coleman, Alta. We have a projection inspector appointed by the local whose duty it is to visit the operating room and theatres of this city and report on the condition of apparatus, as well as inspect the work of the operator on the screen. We are also arranging a system of fines for operators who are caught running pictures out of frame, poor light, excessive flicker, etc. The majority of our men are a studious lot. They all have your Handbook; also they read the projection department. Moreover they are at all times trying to improve their work. You will also find that Calgary and Edmonton have been represented on the Roll of Honor quite a few times.
> In conclusion, I would like to ask if it would be possible for you to visit Calgary when you make your trip north? I notice you will be in Vancouver and go from there to Spokane. Now I think you can make the trip via Calgary with no increase in the fare, and I can guarantee a 100 per cent turnout of the operators working in the city, as well as most of the managers. There are also five exchanges here, and I think a little talk to some of them would do no harm.
> I would like to inform the small town operators that our local is at all times open to men who are really operators, who can satisfy our examining board of that fact, and who are working within the radius of our jurisdiction.

It strikes me that this is among the best letters I have received from a union secretary up to date. It is clear, concise and to the point. Moreover, it does not overlook anything, and I would particularly call the attention of the Alberta small town operators to that sentence which offers them membership. The mere fact that operators are organized is by no manner of means a proof they don't need a "waking up and shaking up," because, while I am sorry to say it, it is a fact that there is occasionally a well organized city which is hugely nonprogressive in everything except the one item—organization. This, however, according to Brother Aaron, is not the case in Calgary, since he says that the men are studious, and most emphatically the putting out of an inspector and a proposal to fine operators who don't deliver the goods on the screen shows anything in the world but lack of progressiveness.

I believe the correspondent from Coleman, Brother Baron, was perfectly sincere in what he said, but very likely he has not had the opportunity of judging conditions in the larger cities of the Province by personal observation.

As to the visit, why in order to reach Calgary I would either have to make a special trip from Spokane, or go up around by the northern route, in which event I would miss North Yakima. I will, however, look further into the matter, and see what can be done, because it would be a genuine pleasure to be able to meet with the Calgary men.

Can't Be Did.

W. B. Sproule, East Boston, Mass., writes:

> Have taken and have enjoyed the Moving Picture World for a matter of six or seven years; also have your Handbook. Would like to have your advice on screens. We seat 1,800, one thousand on the first floor and eight hundred in the balcony. The house is about 80 feet wide, with four aisles and forty-two seats across. In a smaller house we had a mirroroid screen and had the best picture in town. I want to put in one of the same, but am at a loss to decide on silver white, flesh white, or pale gold. In the other house we had a silver white, but I am told the flesh or pale gold will bring out the colors better, and give more depth to the pictures; also show a different color between the actor's face and snow white shirt or collars. Our throw is about 102 feet, and the picture 12 x 16, or near that.

I am sorry, Brother Sproule, but to take up a question of this kind in the department would inevitably cause hard feeling, by reason of the fact that I would have to favor one particular surface screen surface and thus, at least by implication, condemn others. Questions of this kind are not a proper subject to be discussed in the projection department of the Moving Picture World. They properly come under the head of protection engineering service, and as a protection engineer (see my advertisement in another part of the paper) I will be glad to answer you for a moderate fee and the answer will not consist of hot air either. I will not only give my decision in matters of this kind, but will tell you upon what it is based.

A Unique Installation.

We take pleasure in illustrating the unique installation in use by the North Carolina State Board of Health, which same has already been referred to in this department several times.

This picture represents the State Board giving a show and lecture in the open air at a school house. The screen is stretched on the wall of the building and of course the standing capacity is unlimited. Current is supplied by the engine-generator set, mounted on the automobile truck shown. The machine is an Edison Model B, but since this picture was taken a Power's machine has been installed.

The Board is accomplishing a great deal of good with this outfit. Its example is well worthy of study by the Boards of Health in other States.

Richardson Operating Room.

H. S. Tamen, Yankton, South Dakota, says:

> I have been in the game a little more than nine years, yet this is my first "bust into" the projection department. But to come right down to brass tacks, how can one really get away with it if he had not the Handbook and did not thoroughly read the World? Trouble? Of course I am having trouble or I would not be writing you, but it is not in the operating room. Incidentally, I have been running the present theater for the past five years, but since it has been sold to a retired farmer, who insists that the rent will be doubled May 1, 1917, at which time my lease expires, naturally I have hunted around for something better, the hunt finally terminating in the purchase of a plot of ground 55 x 150 feet in the best location in the town. Now what I wish to do is to erect a theater especially adapted to motion picture work, at a cost not exceeding $25,000. And that is where you come in, for I want you not only to furnish me with a "Richardson Operating Room," but also to refer me to some capable architect on theater construction. I have my own ideas about design but need someone to dope out acoustics, material and harmony. You have had on your staff an architect, Edward B. Kinsila, who edited under "Modern Theater Construction," whom I judge to be an expert along these lines. Now I want you to plan the operating room, and to refer me to some capable architect, with whom you can get along, to get up the specifications on the building. The architect's fees will be taken care of in the usual way, but the fees for the plans and specifications of the operating room will be a matter between you and I, with which the contractor will have nothing whatever to do.

I have referred your letter, Brother Tamen, to Mr. Kinsila, who certainly is thoroughly competent to take care of theater construction with the single exception of the operating room, and I have yet to find that architect, no matter how capable, who understands the needs of practical projection sufficiently well to locate and plan an operating room which is not open to more or less severe criticism—generally more. I will be glad to comply with Friend Tamen's request, and if he follows my plans, he will have an operating room which, I venture the assertion, will challenge criticism, though, of course, the matter of its location may be something which I cannot entirely control.

The Gold Screen.

There is considerable more than appears on the surface when one comes to consider the "gold surface screen." I have actually had exhibitors tell me that the yellow color in their screen was imparted by means of pure gold, to which I could only reply "pure piffle." Gold, gentlemen, is $20.00 per ounce, and how many ounces of the precious metal do you think it would take to produce the gold color on a sixteen-foot screen? Also, I venture the assertion that if applied to a screen surface it would make a totally different color from the metal which is used in producing the yellow surface. There is no such thing as a screen surface made of gold, or colored with gold, and I would like to hear arguments from screen manufacturers who claim they have a bronze powder which will not oxidize, and therefore turn gradually darker. Mind you I am not saying you haven't got it, but if you have I would be very glad to have proof—NOT hot air, but PROOF of that fact.

Excellent Contract.

Local Union 321, I. A., Tampa, Florida, sends in copy of its contract for examination and criticism. So far as the wage scale be concerned it runs from $15.00 a week for a four-hour evening show to $20.00 and $15.00 for a thirteen-hour continuous. The least wage asked is for an assistant at $13.00 per week on a ten-hour a day show, the chief in this case to receive $18.00. And this I certainly must criticize. I really don't see how a man is going to exist on $13.00 a week, with the present skyrocketing of living expenses. It seems to me that fifteen dollars ought to have been conceded by managers as an absolute and very reasonable minimum. Supper relief is overtime, and only in cases of emergency will the operator be allowed to work the supper hour. Provision is made that where an operator is to be removed he shall be given two weeks' notice, the penalty being the payment to him of two weeks' wages. This it seems to me is a little bit stiff. One week's notice should, I think, be sufficient, because it is never pleasant for a manager to work with a man after he is given notice of discharge, and seven days ought to be time enough to enable an operator to search for another position.

Section No. 12 is a pretty broad clause. It reads: "All operators will be given one half of their working day off each week, provided they cause no extra expense to the manager."

It seems to me there is a pretty big knothole in that particular provision, because there are a great many ways in which an operator can, through lack of knowledge, as well as through carelessness, "cause extra expense." Or, the whole, however, the contract is a very good one. It certainly contains nothing which the manager can by any stretch of the imagination call unreasonable.

The Tampa Union is to be congratulated—very much so, and I trust it will experience no difficulty in securing the signature of all Tampa managers.

Nova Scotia Operators.

A. A. MacDonald, Halifax, N. S., sends in a most excellent group picture of Nova Scotia operators, taken when they met in Halifax to receive examination and license. He writes: The questions asked us were very simple, and I regard the examination as a just one. We took the opportunity thus presented and formed an association called the Operators and Stage Employes Association of Nova Scotia. Nearly all the operators are falling in line, and we confidently expect in the near future that every one of them will become a member. And now for a question. What carbons are being used now? The Diamond carbon, which I spoke of in my last letter, costs 45 cents each, and are hard to get even at that price. I was much disappointed I was unable to get to St. John to hear your talk, but it was impossible.

As to carbons, why the Speer and the National are both being very largely used in this country. Just what the prices are at this time I do not know, though I suppose I should keep track of that matter a little more closely. You can procure these carbons from the Picture Theater Equipment Company, or J. H. Hallberg, New York City, whose addresses may be had from their advertisements in another portion of the paper. Possibly you may be able to get them from the large supply dealers in Montreal, or wherever you get your supplies.

The picture is an excellent one and I believe it will be very generally admitted that Nova Scotia operators, as exemplified by the photograph, are an excellent appearing group of men. When I first looked at the picture, which came before the letter did, I thought a mistake had been made and some one had sent me a photograph of the Canadian Bankers' Association. Counting from either end of the front row, the sixth man is A. E. Wall, Chief of the Nova Scotia Board of Censors, who acts as chief examiner of operators.

Theater Magnificent.

While in the city of Cleveland it was my privilege to meet Mr. E. Mandelbaum, president and general manager of the new Stillman theater, and Mr. H. H. Lichtig, house manager and treasurer, who, with evident and pardonable pride, showed me through the Stillman theater—Cleveland's "Theater Magnificent." It is difficult to find words to adequately describe the beauties and completeness of the Stillman without appearing to be over-enthusiastic.

One enters the theater through an arched lobby 25 feet wide and 85 feet in length, the walls of which are decorated in panelled mirrors. At the right is the box office, beyond which one enters an inner lobby, 25 feet wide by approximately 20 feet in length, opening on the right of which is the reception room, where both ladies and gentlemen will find a check-room with maid in attendance; also very classy stationery bearing the imprint of the theater.

Entering into the theater proper one is both pleased and astonished at the unique treatment accorded the front wall of the foyer. I have not seen anything similar to it and, so far as I know, the plan is original with the Stillman.

Described briefly as possible, the foyer extends the full width (85 feet) of the theater, has an arched, panelled ceiling, the panels of which contain suitable decorations in plastic relief. The front of the foyer curves inward over the rear seats of the auditorium. In the center, and up something like 12 feet, is a floor, protected at its outer edge by an ornamental railing. Inside this railing is a space approximately 10 feet wide, curved inward in the center. This is called the mezzanine promenade, and on this promenade are ornamental chairs, palms and plants of various kinds, as well as writing tables and stationery. Opening off the right side of the circle of the promenade is the women's rest and retiring room, and off the left side is the men's retiring room. The whole effect is unique and decidedly pleasing.

The theater seats 1,806. It has a main floor and a balcony. On the underside of the balcony are perhaps twenty lights, set in recesses of the ceiling and covered with dark bluish-green opalescent glass. At the right and left of the foyer wall a broad stair mounts upward. The carpeting of the theater was especially woven for the Stillman. It is of dark green and black of pleasing pattern. The chair covers were also made especially for the theater. The pattern is wide green and black strips. The general effect is thoroughly satisfying.

The picture itself is 18 feet wide, and the screen is bordered with about 2 feet of black velvet on all sides. The orchestra of thirty pieces occupies the space on the stage immediately under the picture. In addition there is a huge pipe organ. The music is in charge of Mr. H. L. Spitalny.

At the back of the seats on the main foyer are loges which contain eight chairs each. These seats are 50 cents, the regular seats selling at 15, 25 and 50 cents in the evening, with a reduction for matinees. The 50-cent seats are those immediately in front of the loges. They extend about half way down the length of the auditorium, and are divided from the front, 25-cent seats by a cross aisle 5 feet in width. At the front of the balcony is another set of 50-cent per seat loges, and at the rear or top of the balcony a third row of loges is found, in which smoking is permitted. Seats in the smoking loges are 25 cents. I am told they are very well patronized.

The ceiling of the main auditorium is slightly arched; it is of the Maritime Provinces Operators.

"reaching" type. This means that it is level for a distance then drops down three or four feet then runs level again and then down. In other words it is stepped. This has the effect of giving a better [illegible] from all parts of the house.

The ventilating system is very complete indeed. It consists of a [illegible] located in the basement, with suction fan above the main ceiling.

The projection room has the usual fault of being located so high that there is no proper distortion of the picture, but fortunately the [illegible] the effect not very bad. The really regretable feature of this is that the operating room could easily have been located between the girders of the balcony, where it would [illegible] and is supposed to have absolutely perfect projection. The room itself is very good, except for its location. The observation [illegible] The projectors are placed on a shelf up near the ceiling, and in fact there is but little to criticise, except that the upper half of the room is dead white, but that could easily be remedied by a nice little pot of black paint. The projection department is in charge of Cedric Gleichman and Don Canady, both of whom are, I believe, thoroughly capable men.

I would recommend to their careful consideration, however, the tables contained in November 4 issue of the projection department. The arcs of the two Simplex machines are handled by arc controllers. In fact, the projection equipment is very complete, and is a distinct credit to even so excellent a theater as the Stillman.

Who Runs the Show?

A phase of the motion picture industry as applied to theater practice has recently been brought to my attention, and is of such huge importance that I feel it justifies attention by this department.

The charge is made, particularly in many of the large theaters in the larger cities where the music is under the direction of a man who poses as a second edition of John Phillip Sousa, that the musical director is demanding of the operator that he run his picture in synchronism with the music, instead of having the music synchronize with the picture. In other words, the director by this act deliberately declares that the proper rendition of the music is of greater importance than the proper rendition of the picture. So acute has the situation become in some of the larger theaters in various cities that high-class operators have resigned their position rather than mar their work in order to accommodate the musical end of things.

The mere fact of the musician making an absurd demand of this kind would not cut any particular figure, but unfortunately in many cases the theater manager, presumably through fear of losing his musical director, backs him up and turns down the operator.

Now I would like to ask you, Mr. Manager, one or two pointed questions: First, What is it the audience pays an admission to your theater for: to hear a musical concert or to see a photoplay, or photoplays? Put in another way: What is the main reason the audience patronizes your box office? Second: Granting that the music is of large importance, which is of the GREATER importance to your theater, the picture or the music? In other words, if for any reason you had to do without one or the other, which would it be. Methinks I hear you say, why the music of course, because that is about the only answer you could consistently make. Third: Granting the proposition that it is not always possible to synchronize the picture and the music without some injury to one or the other, don't you think it would be better that such injury as might be absolutely necessary by suffered by the music, rather than by the picture on the screen? THINK THIS MATTER OVER, MR. MANAGER, AND THINK IT OVER DEEPLY AND WELL.

I ran into one instance of this kind in my late visit to Cleveland, Ohio. There was a miniature war on in one of the finest theaters in that part of the country between the operating department and the musical department. The musician was demanding of the operator that he run his picture to suit the music, a demand which was, in my judgment, absolutely ridiculous on the face of it, because the picture is the paramount thing in any theater. Of course the operating department should not work any unnecessary hardship on the music, or cause the music to suffer unnecessarily. It is of the very highest importance that the musical department and the operating department of any theater work in harmony and close accord, to the end that the least possible injury be worked both to the picture and the music.

The theater in question has a high class operator; also it has a high class musical director. Now, I believe the difference, from the manager's point of view, lies right here. The musician, as I have often pointed out, lets absolutely no opportunity pass of impressing upon the theater manager and upon the public the fact that he is an ARTIST. The operator, on the other hand, does not take any pains at all to impress upon either the theater manager or the public that fact that he, too, is an artist, since in his hands lie the rendition of photoplays costing many thousands of dollars. This being the situation, the manager wrongly, but very naturally thinks: "Oh, well, I can get a good operator most anywhere, but a good musician—why, he is an artist and hard to get."

I would advise the manager of the theater in question to call his musical director and chief operator together in conference in his office, and tell them point blank that the picture is the paramount issue, and where there is injury to be worked to the projection or to the music, the music is the one which must suffer, and that unless this point be conceded it will be absolutely necessary to secure a musical director who will concede it. I would then tell the chief operator that it is up to him to accommodate the music wherever it is possible to do so without injury to the projection, and that unless he does so it will be absolutely necessary to secure a chief operator who will. This amounts, in effect, to telling the two men they absolutely must work in harmony, but it is telling that particular thing in a way there can't be any misunderstanding of the issue.

The theater manager should always remember the fact that the picture comes first, and the music next, and that although both are, as I have said, of large importance, the music must perforce be the goat when it is necessary that there be any goat.

Light Trouble.

Minneapolis, Minn., has the following trouble:

> My curtain illumination is not as bright as it used to be, although nothing at all has been changed. The lenses are the same; also they are kept scrupulously clean. In fact, I clean my condensers every day and the outer surface of the objective as well, using a solution of one-half wood alcohol and one-half water, as per directions given in the Handbook and department. Once every sixty days I take the objective apart and clean its interior, setting the same on top of the rheostat, with the arc burning, before reassembling, in order to get it perfectly dry and avoid any possible generation of moisture on the interior of the lens. Notwithstanding these various things the illumination is decidedly inferior to what it was six months ago, or so it seems to me. What do you think is the answer? The supply is 110 volt through a rheostat.

There are several things, Minneapolis, which might account for diminution in the screen brilliancy. First and foremost it is quite within the range of possibility that your screen surface itself is considerably darker than it was six months ago. If it is a calcimine screen it may need re-coating, and most emphatically if it has not been coated within six months it does need it. If it is a metallic surface screen, possibly it is darkening with age; also if you had a black border on the screen six months ago, and for any reason have removed it, that would have the effect of very largely diminishing the brilliancy of your picture.

It is possible the auditorium has more light than it did six months ago, or that the character of the auditorium lighting has been changed. It is also possible you are using colored side lights, and that the coloring on the globes has deteriorated, thus sending more white light into the auditorium; or possibly it is a combination of all these various things. So much for the auditorium end of it.

It is quite possible the resistance in your rheostat has become considerably higher than it was six months ago. It is also possible that your wire connections have not been cleaned periodically, as they should be, and that these connections have developed increased resistance. Once every week the wire connections, especially those at the rheostat and lamp, should be taken apart and thoroughly cleaned. They may look all right, but copper oxidizes under the action of heat and a thin, almost invisible scale forms, which has high resistance. It is also within the range of possibility that your asbestos wire is not quite the size it was supposed to be, and was slightly overloaded in the beginning in consequence of which it developed heat. Under this condition the asbestos wire might, to a certain extent, deteriorate throughout its entire length, thus increasing its resistance and reducing the amperage at the arc. It is also possible that the carbon arms themselves have, through continued use, developed considerable resistance, or that the inside of your carbon arms has become rough and pitted and is not giving a clean, close electrical contact with the carbon that it ought to give. It is also quite possible and, moreover highly probable, that your carbons themselves are not as good as they were six months ago. I assume that you trim off the burned ends of the asbestos covered wires inside the lamphouse periodically, as you certainly should.

So far as the deterioration of wires and increase in resistance be concerned, it is always advisable that there be a reliable ammeter in the operating room. An ammeter gives the operator a chance to check up on things of this kind, as I have time and again pointed out. It will, if properly used, more than pay for itself in a comparatively short time.

SOME SHORT EDUCATIONALS.

Industrial and Travel Subjects of Particular Interest from Pathe and Mutual Programs.

"How Matches Are Made."

THIS instructive industrial subject will appear shortly on the Pathe program. It constitutes a half reel, and shares honors with a beautiful colored scenic entitled "The Island of Kyushu in Southermost Japan." The manufacture of matches thoroughly illustrated shows us the logs being conveyed to the factory, where they are cut into blocks, which are then sawed into thin veneers. The veneers are cut into match lengths, after which they are sulphured and dried, and packed in boxes. The making of the match boxes is also shown.

"The Island of Kyushu in Southermost Japan."

A rather highly colored film with exceedingly beautiful photographic effects, which constitutes the last half of the Pathe subject "How Matches Are Made." In this picture we see the inhabitants traveling about with pack trains, and our attention is drawn briefly to the agricultural possibilities of the island. A passing glimpse of the sacred statues is followed by delightful views of picturesque lakes, mountains, rivers, and waterfalls.

"Mutual Tours Around the World."

The second and third issues of this new Gaumont travel series contain some intensely interesting matter. Amsterdam, Holland; Rouen, France; and Archangel, Russia, were thoroughly covered in the second issue, which will be found especially interesting as a study in Dutch, French and Russian types of architecture. The third issue opens with a panoramic view of Cairo, the capital of modern Egypt, followed by views in the ancient and modern portions of the city, including Opera Square, Citadel of El-Kala erected in the Eleventh Century, the mosque of Saida Zeneb, one of the old gates, Muski, a narrow street in the Egyptian quarters, mule drivers, and Arab types. The second subject on this reel takes us on a delightful trip through the gorges of the Vesubie river. The third shows Antwerp, Belgium's chief commercial center before the war. These views were evidently taken before the war. They introduce us to Antwerp's harbor and shipping facilities, to her cathedral where hung three of Rubens' the Flemish painter's masterpieces, which have been removed since the war, her principal thoroughfare, her dog market, and her corporation houses w here business men congregate to discuss matters of common interest.

"Reel Life No. 29."

This issue of the Mutual magazine in film gives as its opening subject "How Zinc is Produced." The Franco-Belgian zinc works at Mortague-du-Nord, have been used by way of illustration. We are shown how the zinc is carried to the distilling rooms, and placed in retorts made of fire clay which have been first heated in gas furnaces. They are then placed back in the furnaces, the fumes of the zinc are fired, and when the process of distillation has completed its work, the molten zinc is emptied into bar molds, from which the zinc bars are afterward taken and weighed for shipping.

"Catching Fish for the Market" on the Massachusetts Coast.

This is another instructive article of the magazine in film. It explains and illustrates how long nets are strung to buoys, how the trap set in a heart shape is led up to by an entrance called a gate through which the fish pass after following along the barrier nets set to direct them. We then see the nets full of struggling fish being hauled in. The unloading from the vessels, and weighing for the market, is followed by a close view of the gray fish, which has been found by the United States Bureau of Fisheries to have good food value, and the grading of mackerel.

"Growing Tea in the United States."

This is one of the closing subjects, and shows the picking of the tea on a tea plantation in South Carolina, and also the interior of the factory where the tea leaves are rolled by a special machine, after which the rolls are broken by hand, and the tea leaves placed on tables for drying, where they are left for twenty-four hours.

The closing subject consists of a brief collection of fashions designed and executed by Chas. F. Presley.

THE OTHER SIDE.

A Glance at the Educational Question from the Manufacturer's Viewpoint.

Interviews with leading members of various moving picture manufacturing companies have revealed the fact that the manufacturers as a whole regard the educational market from a rather hopeless viewpoint. This is largely due to a failure on the part of the educator to comprehend the situation of the manufacturer in the matter, and also to the failure of the educator to meet the manufacturer on a practical basis.

Previous to the general recognition of the moving picture as an educator, the manufacturer with little encouragement and less compensation gathered together libraries of educational films of all kinds, which the exchange man failed to push, and the exhibitor apparently did not require. Educators not awake to the vast educational possibilities of the moving picture gave little or no encouragement to the manufacturer, all of which resulted in what might in a broad sense be termed a wanton waste of valuable materials. Hundreds of prints were allowed to remain in the vaults undergoing a process of deterioriation through which unused film is bound to pass, and were eventually sold for a possible 15 to 20 cents a reel for the silver, gelatine, celluloid and other elements contained in the film. These reels of old film today are selling at an increase of from 40 to 50 cents per reel on their former price, for the sake of the combustible material contained in the film, and which is now used in the making of shells for the European war. The bare cost of the manufacture of one of these reels is $40, not counting the labor. It is therefore evident that the manufacturer has done his share and been a cheerful loser in the game, for it is certain that the manufacture of educational films still goes on.

In spite of the hopeless attitude of the manufacturer toward present conditions in the educational market, the fact remains that the day when the moving picture will be looked upon as a necessity of the classroom is not so far distant. As before said, the chief hindrance to the market's development is the failure of the educator to meet the manufacturer on a basis of mutual understanding, and we are sorry to have to state that among the thousands of educational negatives available, few are suited to the school curriculum. The Pathe Freres claim to have some two thousand educational negatives, and the Gaumont Company is similarly well supplied; the Universal Film Manufacturing Company claim in the neighborhood of six hundred; the educational stock of the Edison Company, which was largely depleted by fire, numbers at the present time somewhere in the neighborhood of two hundred negatives. Geo. Kleine and Charles Urban have also been large contributors to the number of available negatives, and yet among this vast number of scenic, industrial, topical, scientific and other negatives, there are lamentably few that could be brought into use in connection with school studies.

Mr. L. W. McChesney, of the Edison Company, who understands every angle of the situation expresses the belief that the only practical method of covering it, as far as the school question is concerned, would be found in a carefully supervised moving picture illustration of text books. A hindrance to this method of procedure, Mr. McChesney points out, would be due to the lack of a universal text book. While certain states are using a certain text book on a given subject, other states are using some other, a fact which would make impracticable the application of any set course of illustrations on that particular subject. He also states, on behalf of the Edison Company, and he believes that the same is true of most of the other manufacturing companies, that they are willing at any time to reproduce any educational picture for which they have the negative, and for which there is a special demand, providing they can be assured of the co-operation of the exchanges in handling it.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company have already shown themselves more than willing to be of service in the field, by offering to make up programs picked from among their stock of negatives, for any Board of Education or Educational Group that has a dozen or more schools in which are installed moving picture apparatus approved by the local fire authorities.

These schools must contract to show these programs for twelve consecutive weeks, or more, at a rental fee of $10 a reel, or $100 for a five-reel program service for the same period, to which must be added the expressage if the distance from the central exchange exceeds fifty miles. While realizing that their stock as it stands is not suited to the requirements of the school curriculum, still they have hereby shown a willingness to aid the educator in covering the situation as it stands.

The developments which are taking place, many of which are proceeding under near-sighted and clumsy arrangements, and developments reported about to take place, point at a turn in the educational market which, by the majority, is unanticipated.

BRITAIN'S GRAND FLEET.

British Admiralty Pictures of the Grand Fleet in the North Sea are now on exhibition in New York, the first series being shown at the Strand theater. This fleet is the greatest ever assembled and presents a most majestic and formidable array. The great "Iron Duke" and the "Queen Elizabeth" are the leaders of the great Dreadnaughts class and are veritable monsters of the deep. In appearance they appear more formidable than the American vessels, also heavily armored, whether this is so is not for the lay mind to decide.

This great portion of the fleet as seen in this series is only a part of the vast navy protecting the eastern coast of England, but it is the fighting power of the whole, which numbers many hundreds of vessels of all classes. As a lesson on a nations navy and defences this film will be helpful, we have become somewhat familiar with America's big ships so that these of the greatest navy ever built will give an opportunity to the Young American to see and know what the old world can do. The fast sailing battle cruisers seem very ponderous with their heavy smoke stacks and bulky sides and bulwarks, the knowledge of these differences for comparisons sake make every one on the alert to know how they acquit themselves in the day of battle. Judging by the numbers of people constantly thronging to see these pictures and those of the Somme battlefields, there can be little doubt that a desire for knowledge is fully equal to any curiosity otherwise manifested, surely the educationally inclined will find more than a passing interest here, the governmental and naval authorities are showing more than an ordinary interest in them and express the opinion that they should be seen by everyone.

W. H. J.

TOPICALLY TAUGHT.

Geography is taking on a new interest as a result of the remaking of many parts of the old world during the present course of events. Topical pictures of today are the best teachers of geography. The Antipodes in Egypt is certainly a bringing together of "the ends of the earth." This explains a picture of the "Anzacs" (Australian and New Zealand Troops) encamped under the shadow of the Pyramids. Never before have school children been able to see "History in the Making" as now. The remaking of the Balkans will be of vital importance to all nations and their schools; therefore the meeting of Five Nations' Troops upon the streets of Athens is also of importance. How armies are organized and built up, how they prepare for action, as also the munitions preparations and the growing science of aviation and other branches of national knowledge are daily being taught in the topicals of the present day; never were they more interesting, never were they more instructive and more valuable; surely they are among the most up-to-date pictures an exhibitor can show, they are among the best for all to see, especially the young scholars, as future learning will be easy after these and many others of the same class have been seen. Let it also be remembered that this valuable series is a constant one, appearing without any break and should be used accordingly.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

A moving picture production which promises to be of general and educational interest is being arranged for by a number of prominent women in Toronto, Canada, headed by Mrs. A. J. Small. The title of the picture will be "What Women Are Doing," the principal roles to be carried by a cast of local players. The picture will probably be made in two parts, and while it will be fictional in style will show what the women of Toronto are doing in war time. Views will be taken of women at work in munition factories, at Red Cross events, knitting bees, recruiting meetings, etc. The picture will be publicly screened when finished.

In Springfield, Ill., which was one of the first cities in the Middle West to adopt the moving picture as a part of school and church work, was about to make the Ridgely grade school the fifth moving picture auditorium of this class in the city, when the building was burned to the ground. There had already been installed in the building a Power 6A projection machine, a Fort Wayne compensarc, a large underwriters booth, and a Minusa screen. Weekly educational programs, balanced with clean comedies and dramas were about to be given. The loss was covered by insurance and the school will be rebuilt at once.

During her travels through the state of Kansas, Miss Mary Gray Peck, who has been touring the Middle States in the interests of the better films movement, had ample and sufficient reason to believe that the moving picture's western melodrama is not all an illusion. The train on which Miss Peck was traveling was held up by a masked man, who, with gun persuasion succeeded in extracting $100 from the Pullman passengers. Miss Peck, who has delivered a number of addresses in Iowa and Kansas, has met with encouragement wherever she spoke, and has given several interviews to the newspapers in that section. From Kansas she goes to St. Louis, Mo., from there to Louisville, Ky., and then East to Pittsburgh.

EDISON'S LOCK-REEL PROGRAM.

In response to the better films movement the Edison Company is about to issue a lock-reel program of films suitable for the family group. Much time and thought has been spent on the preparation of these programs which will contain pictures based on stirring stories of adventure by standard authors, clean comedies and some fairy stories and educationals. The educational film and the fairy story, we understand will be in the minority. Original stories of modern adventure will also be a feature of these programs, the first of which will be released before the beginning of the New Year.

These programs which will contain ordinarily five reels will be issued weekly, and will be available through thirty-five exchanges throughout the country. Just what will be the source of distribution is not yet known, principally owing to the fact that a thorough investigation of the exchanges is being made by the Edison Company for proof of their dependability and thorough co-operation.

THEY BELIEVE IN PICTURES.

The Central Brotherhood connected with the Central Methodist Church at Morris Street, Yonkers, N. Y., recently held a meeting at the Social Hall in the basement of the church. It was "Moving Picture Night." The Brotherhood had installed a motion picture machine and treated the members to a number of most interesting reels, most of them of an educational nature. W. Stephen Bush, of the staff of the Moving Picture World, had been invited to address the audience on the subject of motion pictures and gave a short talk. After the show there were refreshments and everybody had a good time.

Christmas Cheer in Decorations

By Hanford C. Judson

Holiday Greens of Pine, Holly With Its Red Berries and Ideas for Sparkling Lights Are Now in Order

WE HAVE over commercialized Christmas. Every dry goods store and butcher shop are on the job to stimulate our holiday spending. They push the calendar so far ahead that we grow tired of Christmas long before it comes. But the holiday remains, and it is the jolliest day of the year for the world's big, youthful majority. We look for something better at Christmas; we want to forget whatever worries us and to have a good time, and the wreaths and the red bells and the twinkling lights remind us of cheer. They have been associated with the world's beliefs and joys for so many hundred years that all new and fresh delights find them appropriate and all memories of pleasant times find shining through them, as it were, a welcome, kindred light.

In designing special decorations for a theater one of the first things to remember is that the feelings of the patron in the house are affected by them in a subtle way. He has been seeing greens for weeks, therefore it is better to work out some original design and color scheme that will impress him as new. He knows that this decoration business has been commercialized, so don't let anything suggest to him that the management of the house is doing it for any other reason than because it is appropriate to the season. The theater itself has a personality. Let it wear its decorations as a lady would a rose. Maybe she is going to meet some one she likes. She certainly doesn't wear the flower for its sake, nor, if she is wise, does she put a great bell of flowers on the top of her head. While she is wearing it, it is a part of her. She doesn't want a flower, but a touch of color, and, perhaps, a suggestion of perfume. She and the flower together are a delight more than either would be alone. So should a theater's decorations be. If they are cheap, made of paper with gaudy red and green wreaths and cardboard bells, the manager seems to be doing it merely because his competitors are and he thinks he has to, while he hates the expense. If the decorations are too elaborate and expensive, it looks as though he were trying to get ahead of his competitor in the next block. But if he does his brightening because he likes to do it and does it carefully, his theater will be a courtier for the patron's favor and will get it.

Holiday Decorations, Columbia Theater, Portland.

Foyer of Columbia Theater.

Manager Myrick last year, at the Columbia theater, in Portland, Ore., got up some special Christmas decoration that attracted much favorable notice in his neighborhood. The Columbia was decidedly a house of Christmas cheer. Two pictures of what he accomplished are shown herewith. Besides decorations of holly and mistletoe throughout the theater, Manager Myrick arranged his electrical effects so that after each show two Christmas trees on the stage were illuminated to the delight of the young folks and a "Merry Xmas" flashed out on the drop curtain. Slides of biblical subjects were shown with organ accompaniment during intermissions.

WHEATCROFT REJOINS FOX FORCES.

Stanhope Wheatcroft has rejoined the William Fox forces. The last Fox photoplay in which he appeared was "Under Two Flags." Mr. Wheatcroft also played in "The Little Gypsy," "East Lynne" and "Sins of Men."

This Banker Likes Pictures

David H. Beecher of Minneapolis, Gives His Views on Motion Pictures as an Entertainment and an Investment.

IN AN attempt to keep in touch with some of the things that are making the greatest strides in the world's progress, I read carefully all the literature received from one of the largest banking institutions in New York—the Harriman National Bank. A year or so ago I was much impressed by a letter from the above bank which was addressed to all the bankers of this country pertaining to the motion picture industry, in which they called attention to the fact that this business, which was practically new, had taken fifth place in the industries of the world.

As an investment banker who owns and has interests in twenty three banks in the great Northwest, I am forced to admit that the art of the unspoken drama in its present stage of development surely heads the list in actual achievements. It must be admitted that our greatest stars of the legitimate stage cannot draw from the wells of emotion so effectively as the stars present in a high-class cinema production.

David H. Beecher.

I became very much interested in the motion picture industry. A short time afterwards I had the opportunity of investing some capital with one of the largest exhibiting companies in the West. My experience has been that no safer investment is offered the public or a banker than the motion picture industry, providing your investment is in the hands of a man or an organization that is capable.

My experience to date has been most pleasant as well as profitable. In my first year of association with the motion picture industry, my investment ran close to $100,000. Since then I have invested several times that amount. I say it is a most pleasant and profitable association as my first investment was returned to me inside of three months and since that time, which covers fourteen or fifteen months, I have been in receipt of a handsome check each week from the organization which handles my surplus capital.

For clean entertainment and as an educational possibility, there is nothing to equal the motion picture and I feel sure that the next ten years will show you the real things. This is the opinion of a novice who knows practically nothing about the business—a sixty-year-old boy, who has had to work out his own salvation behind a bank counter in the Northwest. For the best part of my life I was too poor to travel all over the earth to see all the wonderful things. Now they are brought and laid before us in such beauty and profusion as to almost stagger one, and at a price that I can take my wife and family to see and enjoy thoroughly.

Times have certainly changed in my short span of life. Just think of it! The tired clerk or the business man can get a high-class evening's entertainment—a real classic—to his taste for possibly 10 cents, 25 cents and for 50 cents and $1 can see some of the greatest productions, such as "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Ramona," and "The Crisis," which I fortunately was permitted to view recently at the Strand theater, New York City.

I see a steady demand for better and cleaner pictures and it is surely to come when master producers and great showmen get together and both endeavor to elevate the morals and the quality of the productions. This will certainly be appreciated by all those who are responsible for the success of this great art—the people.

JOSEPH F. LEE HAS A NEW FEATURE.

Joseph F. Lee, one of the best known State's right buyers, has a brand new feature for review. It's a six-pound boy, and the feature and producer are doing well.

Robert Walker, Metro Player

ROBERT WALKER, of the Metro forces, says it is a mighty tough job for a young man to play the part of an old one in motion pictures. This declaration was brought forth by the fact that Mr. Walker is seen as a young and an old man in the Metro production, "The Gates of Eden," in which Viola Dana is starring. In this play he acquits himself with great credit in each role.

He first appears as William Bard, a foundling brought up in a Shaker community. Bard is driven out of "The Gates of Eden," because he falls in love with Eve (Viola Dana), the daughter of Elder Joseph. The young man changes his name to Drab, piles up a fortune and next is seen as a person well advanced in years.

Robert Walker.

"If an actor is old," says Walker, "he can play the part of a young man without difficulty. But if he is young it is mighty hard to express the emotions of an old man. I don't know what the psychology of this is, but it's a fact.

Walker is 28 years old. His grandparents on both sides were ministers. He was born in Bethlehem, Pa., came to New York at the age of six and was educated at the Horace Mann High School. He went on the stage through the urgings of his uncles, Robert and Harry Hilliard. At first he was in musical comedy. Then he appeared with Robert Hilliard in "A Fool There Was." In motion pictues he was seen with Alice Joyce under the Kalem banner, then with Edison and finally with Metro, where he has done his greatest work.

PARAMOUNT FOLK GET MARRIED.

The culmination of a delightful romance that had its inception in the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Chicago, Ill., distributors in that section of Paramount Pictures came last week when O. W. Kappelman, who has been the booker in the exchange was married to Miss Hazel Dorothy Columb, who was formerly in charge of the switchboard in the exchange office. The couple were married by the Rev. Herbert L. Willett, at the Hotel Sherman, and after an elaborate wedding reception they started on a wedding trip through the East. While in New York they were the guests of some of their Paramount friends. They will return to Chicago shortly, where they will reside in their newly furnished home.

GRACE DARLING TO APPEAR IN CANADA.

The International has sold the Canadian rights to the serial "Beatrice Fairfax," starring Harry Fox and Grace Darling, to the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., of Toronto. Arrangements have been made by the International to send Grace Darling, who assumes the role of Beatrice Fairfax, on a tour of the principal cities of Canada to appear in person at the first offering of "Beatrice Fairfax." She will leave about December 5, remaining a week in Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal. Because of the fact that Miss Darling began her career as a newspaper writer, she will be a guest of the newspapers of the Canadian cities during her stay in them.

MRS. WALTER BALDWIN INJURED.

Mrs. Walter Baldwin, formerly Pearl Melville, well-known as leading lady with the Baldwin companies in New Orleans, Duluth, and other places, is seriously ill here as the result of burns she suffered from her dress catching fire while she was lighting a gas stove. Mrs. Baldwin is a sister of Rose Melville, better known as "Sis" Hopkins, who has been called from her New York home to the bedside of her sister. Mr. Baldwin is now general manager of the "Civilization" companies in six Midwest states.

Spokes from the Hub

BY MARION HOWARD

DONALD BRIAN and Stewart Baird of the Sybil Company, playing here, will be guests of honor at the next meeting of the Film Club Sunday evening, Dec. 3, at the Brunswick. Both, you know, have appeared on the screen. Other players in town will be invited, like Arnold Daly. A special program has been arranged by the president and her committee. Just at this writing we are interested in the "Movie" ball on Wednesday, the 22d, already mentioned in these columns. The president and two members, Mrs. Florence LaP. Brakett, and Mrs. Anna Spencer Frost are on the ball committee and will meet the stars in the boxes and later at the banquet, in Horticultural Hall. Mme. Bernhardt has been the star heroine of the hour here and was met socially. She put in an arduous week and seemed none the worse for it on leaving late Saturday night.

All are enthusiastic over "The Prince of Graustark," especially with Bryant Washburn in a congenial role most picturesque. This is considered the best Essanay picture seen here in a long time, and it was good to see such support as given by Sydney Ainsworth, John Cossar and Ernest Maupain "game to the last." A clever bit not mentioned by the reviewers was the introduction of the marriage scene from "Graustark" with Bushman and Bayne leaving the altar. This brought us nearer the young Prince and disclosed to the unenlightened that he was their son. Strikes me the book was well followed. A large audience of notable quality applauded this picture put on by Mrs. Ayer at her Back Bay theater. Preceding it were some new International short reels, one of them an idiotic effort to be funny at the expense of women, who not in a thousand years would appear thus. It was not even listed as a caricature and offended many there. I have a keen sense of humor, but at this time when women in other lands are showing patriotism by doing the work of men who are at the front, it would seem that more respect might be shown their sex. The bad taste in the mouth was partly removed by the picture following this by the same company, Yosemite in its grandeur, and it was wonderfully well photographed. To those of us who have explored that wonderland in California it seemed incredible that a cameraman could get so near the falls and complete such a masterpiece in scenic beauty. The utmost pleasure was aroused and unusual applause followed the picture which ought to be shown in schools everywhere. Nowhere in all Europe do you find anything approaching this Valley and we ought to be grateful indeed to the screen for bringing to us so much natural beauty all our very own.

Douglas Fairbanks, being a local favorite, his name draws well, as illustrated the other night when "Manhattan Madness" called out a large audience at the Exeter Street theater and this means much when one knows the seating capacity of that house, once a place of worship. This lively play, with its surprise denouement, gave delight, and a bet was made back of me that Mack Sennett directed the chase scene, but his companion was quick enough to note Allan Dwan's name on the first title, so he won out. It was some scene, even for clever "Doug" to get away with, minus broken neck. "Say, but that girl is a peach!" was the remark to cross the aisle from a group of Harvard students, but alas, Jewell Carmen could not hear it. I wonder how she will fit in with the Fox forces. This reminds me to comment on "The Straight Way," a very good offering full of color, but alas we, over here, cannot enthuse over Valeska Suratt with her bizarre manner of dressing and the hideous way she wears her hair. You cannot get away from it at all, as her personality is far from compelling. In this play she is over dressed and one wonders where Mary Madison acquired all those jewels. Herbert Heyes, who has ever done notably good work (recalled here in "Under Two Flags") certainly deserved better in an opposite player (opposite in her case means just that). What a contrast Claire Whitney was to her! My companion and many others see a striking resemblance to George Fisher of "Civilization" fame, for she has the same expression in her eyes and I'd like to see them together. Miss Whitney went out of the picture all too soon and somehow seemed unfitted to play such a naughty role. On the same program at the Fenway, we had little Mary's hubby—Owen Moore—in "The Kiss," but it did not make any lasting impression somehow, and the thrills were not new. Gus Weinberg did a neat bit as the old grandfather gone daft. My neighbor—a man—said "some cinch for Owen, wonder if Mary minds." Mary Pickford has departed from our rock bound coast and returned to New York.

We had a repeat of "The Two Orphans" at the Fenway and it went over well, the story being so familiar to many. It gave us an opportunity also to see Herbert Brenon play Pierre and to note his directorship. I had not seen this Fox offering earlier and greatly enjoyed the fine team work, especially that of Theda Bara and William Shay. These are good to put on annually as the play was, last generation. About all Salem came to the Hub to see "Witchcraft," done by the Lasky Players with piquant and dependable Fannie Ward and her hubby "Jack" Dean, so many seasons her leading man on the speaking stage and the only American in the first company she brought over from London in "The New Lady Bantock" and other plays. The costumes furnished a delight so accurate in detail. "The Sultana," that beautifully colored Pathe offering, delighted immense audiences at the Boston theater, where "The Yellow Menace" is going strong.

What a wonderful child the Universal have in Zow Rae whom we saw Sunday evening at the Exeter theater in "Through Baby's Voice," a cleverly constructed play in two parts, which might have been named "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." It was thoroughly human and had a good lesson for young married folks in front. Douglass Gerrard and Edna Maison were the parents, but next to Little Zoe, the best bits were in the hands of the old lawyer and his confederate, the judge. Why on earth these plays are not shown week-days as well as Sundays, is something beyond me to understand. It is a kid play and we rarely see youngsters at the playhouse Sunday evenings. Let me commend this offering to all managers running short reels. I note that another play with this dear little child is released—"Gloriana," with the additional little star Gordon Griffith, in it. Such plays are of interest to adults everywhere. George Ade fables and Hy Meyer animated cartoons are going strong here and are refreshing in their novelty.

The Drews have given us two good pictures of late, the last one "Free Speech," was one long laugh. It was refreshing to note that their title editor has gotten 'round to the proper spelling and use of "all right." In their plays we get pure comedy minus vulgarity and awful slapstick inflicted on us in some theaters and which cater only to the ill bred and ignorant who might go off and flock by themselves at a theater built for such.

We wonder if the Mayor of the Hub will permit "The Easiest Way" to be pictured here when the spoken version was barred. We sincerly hope not, because as put on by Clara Kimball Young we feel that it will not offend. This censorship is very tiresome to devotees of the drama (spoken or pictured) and does not voice public sentiment a little bit.

The World Film Corporation loses a very popular man in "Bob" Warwick, who delighted thousands here of late in "The Heart of a Hero" well done in all details. Large parties came to the Hub to see it from Lexington and Marblehead, where several scenes were taken last summer. We regretted that they did not get a clear picture of the Nathan Hale statue, minus the tall buildings in New York, as it is one of the finest statues in all America, the hands alone worth going a long way to see. It was given the city by the New York Sons of the Revolution, which, in turn, bought and restored Hale's little red school house in Connecticut, where it stands as an object lesson. This they did not show as illustrating the thought of this generation, but maybe I am too sentimental for directors. Along this line I suggested that a picture be shown in Jeanne d'Arc of the newest statue in New York of that heroine on Riverside Drive, made by a young woman sculptor, a part of the foundation made of stones brought over here from France and from the prison where she was incarcerated. I learn that the director found himself "unable to do so" and I wonder why. It should be a matter of local pride to show it.

Among the Picture Theaters

Grand Theater, Estherville, Iowa

F. H. Graaf Erects $75,000 Photoplay House Seating 1,066 in Town with Only 4,500 Inhabitants—Has Explicit Faith in Stability of Industry.

A MAN who has explicit faith in the stability of the moving picture industry and one who believes that it will always continue to strive for better conditions is F. H. Graaf of Estherville, Iowa, who has recently opened a moving picture theater there known as the Grand and which cost $75,000 to erect. The fact that Estherville has about 4,500 inhabitants and that the Grand cost so much money is worthy of consideration. It is evidence—and positive evidence at that, too—that Mr. Graaf's belief is actual and not mere words. It is the only moving picture theater costing such a large sum to be built in so small a place as Estherville that has come to our notice. Mr. Graaf's conviction that the industry is here to stay is based upon his five years of experience in it. He is one of the pioneer exhibitors in the State of Iowa, and it was he who opened the first moving picture theater in Estherville. That was five years ago. He is progressive and enterprising and a diligent reader of the Moving Picture World.

The size of the Grand is 44 by 124 feet, and it has a seating capacity of 1,066 persons. Of this amount 400 seats are in the balcony, and 66 in the eight boxes. From any seat in the house an undistorted view of the picture can be had. The auditorium is provided with nine exits. The ornamental plaster decorations are of the most modern design, and the statuary work under the boxes are particularly pleasing. The painting decorations are in several colors and blend harmoniously with other embellishments, giving the interior a restful appearance. The aisles throughout the house have been laid with thick red velvet carpet, which matches with the general color scheme. The Grand is equipped with a complete vacuum cleaning system, and within easy access and placed in convenient locations are a number of hose reels for fire protection.

The stage is large and commodious, being 30 by 50 feet. It is fully and adequately fitted with the latest equipment, which includes an asbestos curtain, a velvet drop, and a number of different scenes. The proscenium is 24 feet high and 30 feet wide. The orchestra location is in front of the stage, and it is marked off by stout brass railings. Under the stage is the keyboard of the big Wurlitzer pipe organ. The Grand is well ventilated, and fitted with all up-to-date appointments and apparatus.

The doors in the lobby leading into the auditorium are done in art glass set in copper. The ticket booth has also been made of the same material. Pieces of art glass to the amount of 6,336 have been used in the lobby. All electrical wiring is placed in conduits. Lights in the house are controlled either from the stage, ticket booth, or operating room. The walls of the lobby are made of Pacanazzo marble, while the artistic panels which have been inserted in the wall add to the dignity of the lobby and are made of brown marble. The floor is laid in Cerome tile in charming design, and the color of it blends nicely into the general order of lobby decorations. J. E. Nason of Minneapolis, Minn., was the architect.

The operating room which is sufficiently big is absolutely fireproof in its construction. It is furnished with the latest apparatus, among which are two Power's 6 B projectors and a Hallberg Economizer. A gold fiber screen is used, and the chairs are of a special design made by the Wisconsin Seating Company.

Mr. Graaf is picking the best pictures obtainable. At the present time the Grand shows releases of the Metro, World, Vitagraph, Triangle, etc. Serial pictures are also booked, and "The Crimson Stain Mystery," made by the Consolidated Film Corporation started the first of October. The usual admission prices are 10 cents for the balcony and 15 cents for the orchestra. It is Mr. Graaf's intention to show "The Birth of a Nation," "Civilization," "Intolerance," "A Daughter of the Gods," the Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet," and the like in the near future, and the admission prices when these are exhibited will be raised.

Portland's Suburban Photoplay Theaters

Views and Stories on Some of the Progressive Outlying Picture Houses—Five and Ten Cents Are the Usual Prices of Admission.

PORTLAND, OREGON, is well supplied with motion picture theaters and the accompanying photographs and stories are on a few of the houses in the East Side suburbs. With a population of 250,000, Portland has approximately 50 motion picture theaters with seating capacities ranging from 200 to 1,500, the majority of the suburban houses being located on the East Side. The city ordinance requires fireproof construction for all theater buildings and even in the suburbs this rule has been rigidly followed, with the result that Portland's suburban theaters have been built as substantially as those in the downtown section of that city. Fire inspections are conducted quarterly by the City Fire Marshal, and Portland has yet to have its first serious film fire.

The price of admission generally received in the suburban houses is ten cents, but a few houses are charging five. The standard program is six reels.

Gay Theater, Portland, Oregon

By Tactful Business Methods Manager Phelps Gets the Working Class and the More Moneyed People to His House at Different Times.

THE Gay Theater was built and opened in 1912, in the height of Portland's motion picture theater boom, when keen competition demanded first class buildings and superior equipment. That this theater is still a success is due to the foresight of its builders and the good judgment of the present manager.

The Gay Theater is situated on Mississippi Avenue, on Portland's East Side, and is managed by H. C. Phelps, who has conducted it for the past three years. Mr. Phelps is an old road showman, and he has made the Gay one of the most successful theaters in Portland. The house was built by Van Scoy and Hauck and was opened by S. S. Range, an old time picture man who has at different times owned some of the best theaters in the United States. Range sold to W. S. Warren, but was forced to take the theater back at the end of six months. He then opened it as a five-cent house and soon sold to Mr. Phelps and L. Henderson. Mr. Henderson retired from the partnership after one month.

Since Mr. Phelps took over the theater the price of admission has been five cents, except on Wednesday and Sunday, when a dime is charged and feature pictures and vaudeville are combined for the show. By having the ten cent nights, Manager Phelps says he gets the people who will not attend a five cent show. The Gay is patronized by people of the working class who live in one part of its territory and by the more well-to-do people who live in another part. By tactful management and selection of programs, Mr. Phelps has had no trouble to hold both classes of people.

The building is of reinforced concrete, fitted with five hundred opera chairs, and handsomely decorated. The projection is furnished by two Power machines.

The Crystal Theater, Portland, Oregon

Opened Four Years Ago, This Photoplay House Has Been a Money-Making Proposition.

THE Crystal Theater, located in the Piedmont district of Portland, has been a money-maker for the Peoples Amusement Company since its erection about four years ago. It also is one of the theaters that has weathered the motion picture theater boom in Portland a few years ago and has prospered where those surrounding have closed.

Crystal Theater, Portland, Ore.

The building is of fireproof construction. The auditorium seats 400, all on the lower floor, and like the other theaters of the Peoples Amusement Company, is equipped in a first-class manner throughout. The projection is furnished by two motor-driven Edison machines installed in up-to-date quarters.

Several managers have guided the destinies of the Crystal. Henry Harcke, who was manager up to a few weeks ago, and who was a very successful man, has gone East and left the future of this popular amusement place in the hands of Mrs. W. Ashworth. Al Sather was a popular manager there, too, and his singing was one of the big features on the Crystal program. Through co-operation with the schools in the neighborhood and community boosting, Sather did a good business in the house.

A word or two of Mr. Harcke's schemes will not be amiss. With the coming of the jitney bus a year or so ago, it became but a ten-minute ride from the neighborhood of the Crystal to Portland's downtown. So Mr. Harcke brought the regular downtown shows out to the Crystal and kept the patrons at his theater. He used three acts of vaudeville on Monday and Saturday in addition to the best pictures he could get. Mixed programs are good drawing cards at the Crystal and Mr. Harcke laid much stress on the music selected for the picture and personally handled the instruments in the pit. He was formerly pianist at the Empress in Portland and in opera.

Brooklyn Theater, Portland, Oregon

Interior Finished in Bungalow Effect—Was Built in 1911—Managed by E. L. McIntyre.

THE Brooklyn theater, Milwaukee Avenue and Carl Street, Portland, Ore., was opened in 1911 by the Northwest Amusement Company during the boom days of suburban theaters. At that time the Brooklyn Amusement Company controlled the Brooklyn, Powell Valley, Woodlawn, Brooklyn Theater, Portland, Ore.

Kenton and Portsmouth theaters. Its officers were W. T. Norton, an old time film man; W. S. Wessling, now manager for Pathe in Cincinnati, and B. J. Sperry, now Pathe manager in Portland. The Northwest Amusement Company operated the Brooklyn about a year.

The building occupied by the Brooklyn is of concrete and was built for a theater by its present owner, F. G. Urfer. The seating capacity of the house is in the neighborhood of 300. The interior is finished in a bungalow effect, the operating room apparently being set on heavy beams. This room is larger than is usually found in suburban theaters and is built to accommodate two machines.

The Brooklyn has had many owners since it was sold by the Northwest Amusement Company, but none has met with greater success there than E. L. McIntyre, who now conducts the house. Mr. McIntyre does his own operating and puts on a first-class picture, while Mrs. McIntyre does the hand-to-hand work at the door. The McIntyres have kept away from sensational pictures since they have taken over the theater and have succeeded in getting the more reliable and better class of theatergoers to patronize the Brooklyn.

Alhambra Theater, Portland, Ore.

Bigger Part of Cost of Erecting This House Was Spent in Obtaining Comfort for Patrons.

THE Alhambra theater, at 49th and Hawthorne Avenue, Portland, Ore., is one of the most pretentious of Portland's East Side theaters. An observer looking at the entrance would hardly believe so, but W. E. Tebbetts, the present owner, designed the house in such a manner as to put most of the cost into picture perfection and auditorium beauty and comfort for his patrons rather than a "flashy" front. Being built in 1914, Manager Tebbetts considered the present-day idea of preparing for tomorrow's conditions as well as today's, and the result is that people come from all sections of the southeast part of Portland to attend the Alhambra.

The auditorium is 60 by 90 feet in size with an extra high ceiling. The seating capacity is 500. The theater is heated by hot water and is provided with a modern ventilating plant. Projection is furnished by Power 6A equipment with a mercury arc rectifier. The projection room is 8 by 15 feet in size.

Mr. Tebbetts attributes his success at the Alhambra to the use of the best programs obtainable and to the modern conveniences that are installed in his theater. He pays particular attention to the musical interpretation of his pictures. The program at the Alhambra is changed four times a week. Mr. Tebbetts is a pioneer East Side exhibitor and was one of the first to realize that downtown competition could be successfully met by showing the best pictures on the market. He formerly owned the Empire and the Idle Hour and managed the New Grand for a year until the Alhambra was built. Each theater Mr. Tebbetts conducted has been highly successful.

Victoria Theater, Portland, Ore.

Hard Work of Manager Washtock and His Wife Repaid in Profitable Picture House.

THE residents of the Vernon district in Portland are proud of the Victoria theater at 17th and Alberta streets, because it has remained open when other theaters in the neighborhood have quit. Opened in 1911 by Edwin Dawson, when the boom was on in Vernon, the Victoria enjoyed such good patronage that competitors soon came to the district and two theaters, now closed, sought to cut into its business. Mr. Dawson had two boys who sang and played, who, with suitable programs, kept the business at the Victoria.

Mr. Dawson sold the house to Bock and Gellerman, who ran it six months and who then sold it to Martin B. Donovan. Mr. Donovan sold it to J. B. Washtock about two years ago and Mr. Washtock has operated it with continued success. Mr. and Mrs. Washtock divide the honors for the successful management of the house. Mrs. Washtock greets the patrons with a cheerful smile in the foyer while her husband sees to it that the projection and pictures are kept up to Victoria standard. Gold Rooster and Paramount features form a large part of the program. Two Power's machines are used.

The Victoria is a brick building seating about 400. It is equipped with comfortable opera chairs, plush curtains, etc.

The Empire Theater, Portland, Ore.

Patrons Composed of Many Nationalities, But Manager Kollross' Programs Please All.

THE Empire Theater, located at Grand and Hawthorne Avenues, Portland, is confronted with the difficult task of pleasing many classes of people and several nationalities. Manager W. Kollross has met these difficulties successfully, as is evidenced by the fact that he has conducted the theater several years and is comparatively satisfied. South of the theater is a district inhabited by many Italians; north of it lives a mixed class of people and a few blocks to the west is the bridge that crosses the river to the downtown district where the big theaters cut into the trade of the close-in suburban houses.

"It is a hard proposition to please them all," says Mr. Kollross. "Italians want Italian war pictures, Germans want Empire Theater, Portland, Ore.

German war pictures, and neither kind of war pictures make any special hit with the Americans. If I could get audiences that were all Italian, all German or all American, I would know what to do. I find Italians are good picturegoers."

The Empire was built in 1910 and opened by M. F. Fenton. After being sold several times it was acquired by W. W. Tebbetts, now manager of the Alhambra, who built up a good business there. Mr. Tebbetts sold to Mr. Kollross. The building is of concrete and was built for a theater.

"The Vampires"

Third and Fourth Episodes of Gaumont's New Serial Thrilling and Full of Action.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE professional manner in which "The Vampires" is being produced, the unusual types presented, and the vein of comedy intermingled with the thrilling kind of melodrama which the serial represents, by Normandin, former vampire and by later vocation an undertaker, places it as one of the best serials on the market.

"The Ghost."

In this episode the vampires after securing a position for Irma Vep in a Paris bank, the president of the bank is waylaid, thrown from the train and left a corpse where he is afterward found by Enrique Moreno, a bandit and competitor of the vampires, and by means of a forged message purported to be from the president, Irma Vep gets away with a large sum of money. A gruesome and thrilling part of the episode occurs in the scenes which take place in the apartment of Irma Vep, which is connected to that of the bandit by means of a safe. In this safe the corpse is placed by the bandit while he poses as the bank president. Philip Guard concealed sees what passes and in another thrilling scene accomplishes the arrest of Moreno.

"The Dead Man's Escape."

Enrique Moreno finding himself facing trial for the murder of Metadier in this fourth episode, has considerable to do with making it an interesting performance. Determined to evade trial he swallows a drug which puts him in a trance. At the prison morgue where he is placed in the belief that he is dead he recovers, and overpowering the guard escapes Philip Guard, reporter, also passed through a thrilling experience, when he is jerked from his window by means of a wire lasso by the vampires, placed in a large covered costumer's basket, and is rolled over a cliff. He escapes death and is kidnapped again and rescued by Normandin.

Both episodes are intensely interesting and teem with thrilling action, and will appear on the Mutual program December 7, and December 14, respectively.

Thrilling Views of Sir John Jellicoe's Grand Fleet in Action During the North Sea Naval Battle; Also, Moving Pictures of the British Troops Campaigning in Mesopotamia.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AUTHENTIC and thrilling pictures of Sir John Jellicoe's Grand Fleet in action during the now famous North Sea naval battle, and interesting moving scenes of the British troops campaigning in Mesopotamia, have been shown recently at the Rialto Theater, New York City. The pictures are the work of Charles Urban, who spent four weeks on board Iron Duke, Admiral Jellicoe's flagship, and was given every opportunity to secure these remarkable views at short range. Huge battleships in action, torpedoboat destroyers running at full speed through a rough sea, and submarines preparing to dive beneath the water, are among the interesting events shown. Life aboard the big warships is also shown in detail.

The films are the property of the British Government, and were taken by Charles Urban at the request of the Admiralty. The pictures of the Mesopotamia campaign are also the property of the British Government. They make clear the reasons for the failure of the relief expedition sent to aid the British troops at Kut-el-Amara, and illustrate the terrible conditions against which the expedition were forced to battle.

"The Breaker"

Arthur Stringer's Story Filmed by Essanay, With Bryant Washburn, Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain in the Cast —Adapted and Directed by Fred E. Wright.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

MY FIRST impression after viewing "The Breaker" was one of astonishment that five reels of film had been unfolded in regulation time—about 75 minutes—without being conscious of the passing of that period. The great interest created by the filmed story had left my mind immune to the measuring of heart beats, and at the close I was once more convinced that a visualized story is often more powerful than the printed prototype.

That is just what "The Breaker," by Essanay, is—a visualized story; for it is neither photodrama nor photoplay. It is based on the story of that name, which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post, under the authorship of Arthur Stringer, and the Essanay director, Fred E. Wright, has told it unusually well on the screen. I was so greatly interested myself that I am confident the appeal of the story will be wide.

Scene from "The Breaker" (Essanay).

John Widder (Bryant Washburn) and Alice Treadwell (Nell Craig) chance to room in the same cheap boarding house, of which the hard-working Mrs. Feeney is landlady and dragon. Widder is a weak brother, who finds it hard to eke out a living for himself and his sole companion, a canary bird, by selling water filters; Alice is so unsuccessful in selling pictures drawn by her that she is in dire danger of being turned out of her room baggageless. For story purposes, neither Alice nor John know each other at the outset.

One day John Widder calls at the house of a dangerous counterfeiter, Piazzia (Ernest Maupain) to sell his filters; and, knowing that detectives are watching the house, Piazzia induces him to carry away a suit case and keep it in his room for a short time. This case is filled with counterfeit bills, John finds out later, and is in constant fear of its being discovered in his possession.

A few days afterwards Mrs. Feeney orders Alice Treadwell from the boarding house because of the unpaid rent, and, learning of it, John changes one of the counterfeit bills and lends her the needed money.

Through an old friend who is a member of the detective force, Alice is enabled to trace the whereabouts of the counterfeit money made by Piazzi and his confederate, and is promised a reward of two thousand dollars. John, who has learned to love her confesses that he had passed a counterfeit bill in order to help her the money needed for her rent, and, at her request, shows the suitcase and tells her the story. Alice immediately accompanies him to a railroad station where the suitcase is checked.

That night the Feeney boarding house is raided, and Piazzia's confederate, who had secretly entered John Widder's room at the same time to gain posession of the suit case, is arrested. The posse is much discomfited to find that the suitcase is missing, but Alice appears on the scene and gives the officer in charge the check for that important piece of baggage. Being winner of the $2,000 offered for its recovery she requests $20 on account, and with this she accompanies John to the shop where he had changed the counterfeit bill, and it is recovered and destroyed.

Bryant Washburn, as the almost down-and-out John Widder, commands the sympathy of the spectator at all times, and Ernest Maupain's Piazzia adds another fine characterization to the creditable list already his. Nell Craig's Alice Treadwell affords all that the part calls for. Mrs. Feeney and Piazzia's confederate are two good character parts in the care of capable people, whose names do not appear in the cast furnished me.

The release will be made December 4, through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service.

"The Witching Hour"

Six-Reel Screen Version of Augustus Thomas' Successful Stage Drama Skillfully Produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation—C. Aubrey Smith in John Mason's Original Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE scenario for "The Witching Hour," the screen version of which has been produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, was made by Anthony Kelly. He has done his work well. The spirit and, to a large extent, the form of the Augustus Thomas play has been retained, without sacrificing any of the freedom of treatment demanded by the exigencies of the screen. A few minor faults, in which the director must take his share of the blame, mar the picture. The episode where Denning goads young Whipple into striking him down with the paperknife to escape the cat's eye is too long drawn out, and the closing scenes when the boy and his sweetheart go after Aardmuth are rather difficult to accept and smack too much of common, everyday melodrama. However, with the scales so largely in favor of the merits of the photoplay these brief errors will weigh but slightly against the general verdict. George Irving, who directed the production, has reached a high average for the entire picture.

There is no question about the worth of the theme in "The Witching Hour," and its power to hold the spectator. In the light of the play's stage success, it is interesting to recall that it was refused by a number of the foremost managers in this country and in England, on the ground that the public would not be attracted by a drama founded upon mental telepathy, and the author was forced to become his own backer before his work was acted on the stage. The process by which one being is able to project his own thoughts or desires into the mind of another person solely by telepathic influence, is used with telling effect throughout the Thomas story; and, in some respects, the screen demonstrates superiority over the older medium in conveying the points of the plot.

A generous portion of the credit for this result should be given to C. Aubrey Smith, the force whose personality and the earnestness and skill of whose acting go far in achieving this result. On the other hand, much of the beauty and delicate charm surrounding the romance in the life of Justice Prentice, which Russ Whythal indicated with such consummate art when a member of the original cast, is lost in the screen version. Lewis Sealy, who plays the part in the present production, is dignified and attentive, but the soul of the man that the author drew and the fragrance of the spray of the mignonette that has sweetened his days, are lacking.

Marie Shotwell is sympathetic and capable as Helen Whipple, and Robert Conness is a wise selection for the role of Frank Hardmuth. Freeman Barnes, William Melville, Robert Ayerton, Helen Arnold and Etta De Groff all aid materially in the play's success. Jack Sherrill is not equal to the part of Clay Whipple. Liberality and good taste mark the mounting of the production.

"The Yellow Pawn"

Tense Situation and Dramatic Surprises Mark Five-Reel Drama Produced by Lasky for Paramount—Cleo Ridgley and Wallace Reid Featured.

Reviewed by Ben. H. Grimm.

CONSISTENTLY leading up through a series of tense situations to a climax that holds the spectator's every iota of attention captive with expectation and curiosity as to the outcome, "The Yellow Pawn," a five-reel photodrama from the studios of Jesse L. Lasky, is an unusual, strong offering.

Scene from "The Yellow Pawn" (Lasky).

Cleo Ridgley and Wallace Reid are the featured players, and both acquit themselves in a manner that leaves no doubt as to their ability to grasp and to convey, through the medium of the screen, a dramatic situation. And the story by Frederick Arnold Kummer, adapted for the screen by Margaret Turnbull, abounds with dramatic situations and surprises. At no time during the running of the five reels is the spectator able to guess what the next play in the game with human pawns will be.

The picture shows, too, the length to which prosecuting officials are willing to go to wring a confession from the accused; but in this case the "third degree" proves a boomerang. We are logically brought up to the point where a successful artist is accused of murdering his cousin. The cousin has been stabbed by a Japanese servant when the former tries to steal from the artist's strong box. The artist is in love with a girl who has married the district attorney, so that her sister would be cared for. The two had met once, separated for several years, and had met again at a studio party. Each loves the other, but the wife is loyal to her vows, and comes to the artist's studio to tell him to cease his attentions because of her husband's jealousy—this on the night of the murder, but before the crime had been committed. Believing that either his wife or sister-in-law had been in the artist's rooms the night of the murder, the district attorney plans a "third degree." The two women are put in an ante-room. The district attorney is concealed on a balcony. The artist is just about to shoot himself rather than reveal the woman's name when the wife rushes out and frustrates him. Seeing this, the district attorney is made wild with jealousy, and is just about to shoot the artist when stabbed by the servant, who confesses the other crime. These scenes are brought out forcefully and logically.

The supporting cast to the two leads handle well the parts assigned. William Conklin is the district attorney, Mr. Kuwa the servant, Tom Forman the assistant district attorney, Irene Aldwin the wife's sister, George Webb the cousin, and C. H. Geldert, the girls' father. Some of the lightings are especially good, as are the exteriors. Directed by George H. Melford.

First Three Episodes of "Pearl of the Army," the New Serial Starring Pearl White, and "The Great Sacrifice," No. 11 of "The Shielding Shadow"—The Latest Pathe Serial a Plea for Preparedness.

"Pearl of the Army."

OPENING with several arresting bits of propaganda for national preparedness, "Pearl of the Army," the new Pathe serial in which Pearl White is starred, loses no time, once the start is made, in getting into the story. The first three episodes are called "The Traitor," "Found Guilty," and "The Silent Menace." The part played by Miss White is that of a modern Joan of Arc, who is instrumental in saving her country from the dangers incited by a foreign foe. The scenes are laid in the United States, at the present time, and the hero is an army officer who is caught in a trap by the secret agents of another power and branded as a traitor. Frankly melodramatic in treatment, the first three episodes of "Pearl of the Army" are filled with strenuous action on the part of all concerned. The murder of a foreign ambassador; a court marshal and the drumming of the disgraced officer out of the service; a railroad wreck, in which the officer is supposed to lose his life; a fight between the heroine and an unknown man; a plunge from a high cliff into the water, and a mystery that is bound to keep the interest at concert pitch, are some of the main incidents of the story. Stolen plans of the fortifications at the Panama Canal also play an important part in the plot.

From the foregoing statement it will easily be seen that the new Pathe serial is built along the lines which insure the success of preceding pictures of the same class, produced by this company. The workmanship in all branches of its manufacture is up to the Pathe standard. Pearl White and her support take hold of their task in the right spirit, and sustain the action at the proper pace. Ralph Kellard, Theodore Friebus, W. T. Carleton and Marie Wayne are prominent names connected with the cast.

The eleventh episode of "The Shielding Shadow" has no lack of thrills. There have been marvelous escapes of the good and the bad folk during the progress of the serial, but it is doubtful if even the ingenuity of the author of "The Shielding Shadow" can find a way of rescuing the two men that take refuge in an opening in a huge cliff and are still there when it is blown up with dynamite. It is a startling bit of business, to say the least. The great sacrifice is made by Bianca, who loses her life in an effort to save Ravengar from being blown to pieces. A flying leap from the roof of a house into a distant tree and a breakneck fall, made by Leontine's husband, starts the two reels off with a rush

"All Man"

Peerless Production of Five-Reel Western Melodrama Written by Willard Mack, and Released by World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

ROBERT WARWICK and Mollie King are the stars in "All Man," a five-reel melodrama of Western life, produced by Peerless and released by World Film Corporation. Willard Mack is the author of the story. The hero is a young New Yorker with nothing to do but spend money. His father ships him to Montana, and young Blake's experiences in the cow country work the usual transformation. He thrashes the bully, saves the life of the heroine, and puts through a deal that shows he is smart enough to beat a railroad president. In fact, the picture contains all the elements of the neatly turned machine-made melodrama, including a realistic railroad collision. Variety of scene and incident is also to be found in the story, and several of the characters possess an agreeable sense of humor. This quality applies especially to the heroine, who has an engaging way of eating sweetmeats when she does not feel any particular interest in a proposal of marriage. "All Man" belongs to respectable middle-class melodrama, and has but one object in life—to interest that large body of moving picture devotees who ask only to be entertained. With this fact in view, the performance given by Robert Warwick of Jim Blake, the hero, is quite in the proper key. His impersonation is wholly a work of art, the art of taking advantage of every opportunity to show his ability to ride and to shoot, to make love and to fight and indulge his liking for theatric displays.

Mollie King makes a distinct characterization of Alice Maynard, and endows that young woman with the proper amount of real feeling whenever the situation demanded that she be serious. Gerda Holmes plays the jealous sister capitally, and other well-acted parts are contributed by Louis Grisel, Charles Duncan, Alec B. Francis, George McQuarrie, Johnny Hines and Henry West.

"A Rose of the South"

A Meritorious Blue Ribbon Vitagraph Feature in Which a Notable Cast Provides Splendid Entertainment.

A VERY pretty feature; full of charm and pathos and love with an ending which courageously departs from the conventional idea that just before the drop of the curtain they "get married and live happily ever after." It's not a gloomy or sombre ending by any means, it is true to life as life is lived in reality. That's why it is convincing; that's why it reconciles us with the story.

The cast is a roster of good names: Charles Kent, Mary Maurice, Antonio Moreno and Peggy Hyland. All of them quite evidently were in love with their parts and gave the best that was in them, which is considerable. The feature is in narrative rather than dramatic form, a gentleman of the old school dating back to ante-bellum days wanders into the room which he had occupied more than a generation ago. He finds two youngsters living in it such as he and his friend were years before. When he explains the reason for his coming the two young students listen with sympathetic attention. The old man calls their attention to a bullet hole in the door and this leads up to the story which deals with the days of the Civil War. The story then begins to run in well worn channels, but the interest never lags entirely. The splendid acting of the principals, the lovely settings, the scenes in and about the college hold the spectator's attention to the end.

There are at least two original ideas in the play, of minor importance to be sure, but very acceptable to the audience. Some of the titles are excellent, some are superfluous. The last title is an obvious anti-climax and had better be omitted.

"A Message to Garcia"

Five-Reel Drama Produced by Edison Founded on Elbert Hubbard's Preachment—Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness Featured.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm

VISUALIZED in five reels from Elbert Hubbard's preachment of the same name, "A Message to Garcia," produced by the Thomas Edison studios for release by K-E-S-E, is only an average offering. The film never reaches the heights attained by the author, nor is the screened message as striking or as convincing a one as is the written essay. The production's saving grace is an abundance of excellent and true-to-the-story exterior scenes, photographed in Cuba. Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness are seen in the leading roles. More plot material and more action would have helped considerably and would have aided the picture without detracting from the author's main purpose—the driving home of the fact that the world needs more men who can "carry a message to Garcia."

The author had as his inspiration the turbulent times in Cuba preceding the Spanish-American war. Garcia is the leader of the insurgents against Spanish oppression and cruelty. In the film the U. S. S. Maine is blown up by one of the men who have suffered at the Spaniard's hands. This causes the crisis preceding the war. Dolores (Miss Trunnelle), a Cuban girl whose father is executed, kills the commandant when he forces his attentions on her. She tells Garcia (Charles Sutton). Of the many men who are called, Lieutenant Rowan (Mr. Conness) is chosen to carry a message to Garcia. A woman spy tries to effect his arrest when near Havana, but the lieutenant escapes and swims to shore. He overpowers a Spanish soldier, and in the stolen uniform comes upon Dolores. They set out for Garcia's hiding place in the mountains. Dolores becomes tired and Lieutenant Rowan continues on his journey. Once more the girl kills a Spanish officer. The girl and the lieutenant get together again and, a short distance from Garcia, the lieutenant is made a prisoner, but freed by the girl. Near Garcia's house they are ambushed by soldiers. Dolores keeps firing at the soldiers to make them believe Rowan is still there. He has gone on to Garcia's house, and the girl sacrifices her life for her country.

In addition to the exteriors photographed in Cuba there are some good ones taken at Fort Myer. Richard Ridgely directed. Others in the cast than those named are Helen Strickland, Herbert Prior, Robert Kegerreis, Bradley Sutton, Paul Everton, Ray Fairchild and Bigelow Cooper.

"The Martyrdom of Philip Strong"

Five-Reel Paramount, Featuring Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS quite like reviewing one of the best Edison releases to sit at a presentation of this picture. The fine selective taste of Richard Ridgely is at once in evidence and persists throughout the beautiful settings; Mabel Trunnelle is at her best so far as appearance is concerned; Robert Conness gives a highly intelligent interpretation of the clergyman who attempted to follow Christ's teachings to the letter. Herbert Prior is intense in the role of a derelict, and William Wadsworth is a very human saloon keeper. It is like attending a reunion to see these highly capable members of an old organization nicely grouped once more, but there are others who are not so well cast. It is not his fault that Bigelow Cooper does not measure up to the ideal Christ. It is the result of a mistaken conception.

Those who have studied the personality of Christ from all logical viewpoints agree that he was a tall and powerful man. Whether or not the Archo Volumne may be believed, he was taller than the average. He is here made shorter than the leading character, and an artistic loss is the result. He fails to be as impressive as he should in the reincarnation. As to teaching a lesson in a story, there was never a great drama without a purpose. The art is in getting that purpose over through other means than preachment. The principal faults of this release lie, first, in making the purpose too obvious, second, in not making the Christ physically more impressive, and third, in subordinating spiritual effects to the material. The sum total of value is not only high, however, but it is of great promise.

"The Deep Purple"

Five-Reel Paragon Screen Version of the Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner Stage Success, Starring Clara Kimball Young—Released by the World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

THE first statement to be made relative to the five-reel Paragon screen version of "The Deep Purple" is the agreeable information that, leaving out the question of lineage and taking the picture solely on its own merits, it constitutes an excellent grade of entertainment. The maker of the scenario has started out to furnish Clara Kimball Young with an adequate starring vehicle, and not to transfer, as nearly as possible, the Armstrong-Mizner drama to the screen. From this angle of the matter he has executed his task with skill. Discarding the material in the play that would in any way hamper the object he had in view, the adapter has built up a logically developed screen drama that opens quietly in the home of a country clergyman, shows how the clergyman's daughter was lured to the city, fell among thieves and is rescued by a handsome young hero, who is seen at the end of the last reel bending over her as she plays the organ in her father's church. The steady increase of interest and dramatic tension is dexterously maintained up to the end of the fourth reel; the last thousand feet brings the story to a pleasant and easily anticipated finish.

Comparison between the original work and the photoplay brings out the several interesting features. "The Deep Purple" as first written was a remarkable study in criminology. Although provided with an adequate story, it was its keen study of character, the variety and authenticity of its underworld types, that gave the play its vogue; in the screen drama the story comes first and the fate of the heroine takes precedence over everything else. Two parts that are mere shadows of their former selves are Frisco Kate and the Westerner "who killed his man." In the play they were drawn with great power and were acted with consummate art by Ada Dwyer and Emmet Corrigan. The one member of the original cast to be found in the photoplay is W. J. Ferguson, who repeats his inimitable performance of "pop."

Scene from "The Deep Purple" (World).

The entire cast is a good one. Clara Kimball Young plays Doris Moore, the clergyman's daughter. To an actress of her charm and ability the task is not difficult. Milton Sills, E. H. Kimball, Crawford Kent, Fred Truesdale, Grace Aylesworth and Mrs. E. M. Kimball are others who assist in the picture's success. The direction of James Young is high grade.

The illustrated sub-titles used in the picture are of doubtful value. The time taken in deciphering their meaning interferes with the steady movement of the story.

Two Kalems

"Border Wolves," An Episode of "The Girl From 'Frisco" Series, and "The Wizard's Plot," a Number of the "Grant, Police Reporter" Series.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THE seventeenth two-reel episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco" series by Robert Welles Ritchie, titled "Border Wolves," is an exciting Western and an altogether acceptable offering of its type. Fast action marks the two reels, and there is found in the film an abundance of that power to excite that is so well liked by persons who want melodramatic thrills and plenty of them. The screened story has as its locale the border line between Mexico and the United States, and it shows raids by the bandits on the surrounding territory. The story of this film concerns itself with the intrigues of a bandit chieftain who kidnaps Barbara, her father and John Wallace.

Marin Sais and True Boardman are again seen in the leads. As Barbara and John they accompany Barbara's father to a ranch at the border which he intends to buy. They are kidnapped by Mexican bandits and held for ransom. Barbara manages to get out of the chieftan's house, and, disguised as a Mexican woman, tries to make her escape. She is cornered but later aided by Wallace, who has gone to town for the ransom money. The bandit band is routed by the cowboys. During the course of the fighting several good scenes are registered. In the cast with Miss Sais and Mr. Boardman are Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, Josephine West, Hart Hoxie, Jack Rahm and Edward Clisbee. Directed by James W. Horne.

"The Wizard's Plot."

This episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series is practically all action and makes a good one-reel offering. George Larkin and Director Robert Ellis get across several thrills during the course of the action. The big thrill in this reel is when Mr. Larkin, swinging on a broken rope ladder high up in a ship's rigging, plunges over the ship's side into the sea, in pursuit of an anarchist. Much fighting takes place on the ship and in amongst the ship's rigging, also near the top of the mast. The story is interesting, and tells of an anarchist masking as a mechanical chess player. The reporter makes the "wizard" show his hand, and it is in pursuit of him that the exciting moments come. In the cast Ollie Kirkby is also seen. Others are Harry Gordon and William McKey.

OF INTERESTING theme, that involving the approach of two decidedly opposite characters in the crucible of a leveling experience, and handled with a fine conception of what appeals to the eye in the matter of picturesque beauty, "A Gamble in Souls" has in addition two interpreters of attractive personality in Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond. But the intimate relation of a full-blooded man and a woman of light morality cast away on a desert island is quite as replete with peril to the producer as to the people of the story. The man is a fanatical clergyman of manly appearance and lofty aims, the girl a healthy and alluring young lady from the Barbary Coast in San Francisco. He has attempted her regeneration, while she has mocked at his futile prayers.

There is an abundance of incident on the way to the isolation of these two people, most realistic, but the toy ship, used to indicate that the vessel on which they happen to be sailing for Australia at the same time, goes down, is in poor accord with the rest of the shipwreck business. There are plenty of incidents in the island life of these two, but the effects of their mutual conversion, he to a more generous view of humanity, she to a finer reverence for her maker, are lacking

We are not made to know convincingly what mental changes she passes through, nor given a clear view of his own. The director is an artist—his selective taste makes that apparent—but his future advance in the art should be toward soul revelation.

One of the noticeably good points about the production lies in the fact that scenes containing unpleasant pictures, such as Hop Li's opium den, appear only in flashes, and under half light.

Hobart Henley and Gertrude Selby have the principal roles, pronounced interest in the production as it unfolds from the very first, due to the unique character of the girl detective.

Ruth Stonehoouse appears in the detective role. As Nellie Gleason she gives the part a certain naive ingenuousness, calculated to deceive the most hardened and suspicious criminal. In the opening scenes, just as proof of her ability, she brings to justice one Lefty Frank, who has done a "jewel" job on Fifth avenue. The girl lands him in a simple way by going to a wine room and throwing herself in his path. Miss Stonehouse is very pleasing in this part, which affords quite a character study in its way.

The main part of the story concerns the girl's pursuit of Kinkaid, a badly wanted fellow, who has fled across the Mexican line and is running a gambling casino. Her round-up of this individual, and the way in which she falls in love with him, makes an entertaining narrative. R. A. Cavin is strong in the gambler's role. The Mexican scenes are picturesque and full of atmosphere.

Marie Van Vorst's Story Picturized for Metro by Yorke Players—Story Interests—Shows Lack of Artistic Tact.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson

IN CASTING accounts for this picture, "Big Tremaine," from the story of Marie Van Vorst, and made by the Yorke Players for the Metro program, we find that the story, especially after the middle of the third reel, is both new and interesting. As produced it gets along pretty fast although it is not free from uninteresting close-ups. There are a pleasing number of artistic scenes, such as the heroine seated by the fire or an evening picture of a lighted room seen from outside through the glass of a window. That it is not made convincing is, perhaps, largely because there is little feeling for character in the players. This story is not player-proof.

The average spectator is not a keen judge of acting. He and she want pleasing leads and want the characters to be fair, but they want most of all the story—self-consciousness in good looking leads is not an unforgivable drawback. The chief burden that this picture bends under is lack of artistic tact. This tactlessness is more of a hindrance in the sidelights than in the action. Here we find it occasionally in both. As an instance of the former, the heroine comes dancing down stairs in a happy mood. Her father is seated reading the paper. She joyously takes the handle of her riding whip and sweeps it out of his hands or to the floor. Then she steps aside so that he can rise and pick up what she had rudely snatched from him. It is good stuff, but out of character. Tactlessness in the plot-making is shown by the not unexpected yet sudden way the eventual love story is opened. This love interest is crudely developed and crudeness is a heavy burden for romance to bear.

May Allison plays the heroine and Harold Lockwood the hero. Lester Cuneo as a southern gentleman, father of the heroine, is convincing and by far the best character in the picture. Lillian Hayward plays the mother of "Big Tremaine" and is undoubtedly an excellent actress. Virginia Southern is good to look on, but is too self-conscious to be a really acceptable character actress. Josephine Rice plays as a mammy

He breaks into the studio, reduces the offending statue to a shapeless mass and is only prevented from performing a like operation on the sculptor by the timely arrival of a man-servant, and is rewarded with the hand of the lady at the finish. Save for on brief instant, the incident is handled discreetly, most of the action being taken up with the harmless pranks of the boarding school girls, who indulge in the usual midnight feasts, pajama parties and tricks upon the prim maiden lady teachers with which this order of story is always plentifully supplied.

The picture is well produced and very well acted. June Caprice and her companions in mischief enter into the spirit of the story with zest, and the male contingent of the cast is competent.

First Three "Patria" Episodes

that it will be well received by audiences who have an appetite for melodrama. This appetite will be satisfied if the audiences are willing to forego the seasoning of logicality in their melodramatic food. Undoubtedly the name of Mrs. Castle will bring patrons to your house, but as a motion picture actress she does not rank nearly so high as she does as a dancer. Women spectators, however, will be interested in the clothes she wears. The leading male player in the serial is Milton Sills. Others in the cast are Warner Oland, George Majeroni and Allan Murnane.

The first chapter of the serial is in three reels, succeeding episodes in two. The initial number is titled "The Last of the Fighting Channings." In it Patria (Mrs. Castle) is introduced as the last of a long line of American fighters. At Newport she meets Captain Parr, of the U. S. Secret Service, who is on the trail of Baron Huroki and Juan De Lima, representing a Mexican-Japanese alliance against the United States. The Channing estate own the largest munitions manufacturing plant in the country, but refuse to sell to anyone but the government. The Japanese and the Mexican endeavor to prevent Patria and Captain Parr from reaching New York, when Patria gets an urgent telephone message. Here several thrills are furnished. We see a motorboat blown up and an exciting race between a racing automobile and a train. The automobile, containing Patria and Captain Parr, crashes through railroad gates and escapes destruction by the train by a matter of inches. Meanwhile, in New York, the trustee of the Channing estate has been murdered by Japanese spies in the secret vault under the house, which contains $100,000,000 in gold.

The second episode is titled "Treasure." It shows the arrival at the New York house of Patria and Captain Parr. They find the trustee of the estate dead. A letter informs them that Patria is heiress to the gold, which is a fund for National defense. By a secret passage through the fireplace they reach the vault. Baron Huroki and his followers enter the house, but not before the butler has closed the fireplace. The butler is killed and to cover the crime the plotters set fire to the house. Patria and Captain Parr are locked in the vault. They discover a secret passage behind a picture that leads them out under the sidewalk. They are seen by one of the plotters. Captain Parr summons other Secret Service men. An attachment has sprung up between Patria and Captain Parr. Here the second chapter ends.

"Winged Millions" is the title of the third release. The Secret Service men are forced to cut their way back into the vault by means of an acetylene torch. They find that the treasure is gone. It has been carried away by the plotters through the house next door. Captain Parr investigates and is followed by Patria. She crosses the roof of her partly burned house and is captured in the house next door. She frustrates an attempt to blow the house up by shooting away the lighted end of a fuse. Parr has followed the van in which the money has been carried away. The gold is loaded aboard a Japanese steamer. He surreptitiously climbs aboard just as the boat sails. The steamer is held up by fog, and Parr manages to get a message to Patria. He is overpowered by the crew, and, bound, is put in the hold. Patria reaches the ship in her motorboat, having notified the Secret Service men. She is set upon by the crew, but dives into the water and reaches her motorboat just in time to escape. The fog lifts and Patria sights a U. S. revenue cutter. She hurries to it and the cutter takes up the chase. A shot is sent across the steamer's bows and the Japanese open her sea cocks. Parr is rescued by the crew of the cutter, and Huroki and his followers escape to the shore.

Sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky"

First of the Four Chapters Promised in the Sequel to Popular Serial Well Staged and Entertaining.

Reviewed by Margaret MacDonald.

THE title of the first of the four chapters of the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" is entitled "Fate and Death." In its opening scenes it introduces us to Arthur and Esther Stanley in their Virginia home, having at last become possessors of the illustrious diamond. A little son has come to them in the meantime to add to their happiness, and they are about to start on a journey abroad, taking the diamond with them.

Quabba, the gypsy, plays an important part in this chapter, which is well made and entertaining. It falls to the faithful gypsy's lot to be at hand when the train on which the Stanleys are traveling is wrecked, and the Stanleys are among the killed. The little son, surviving, is picked up by De Vaux, robbed of the diamond which hung about his neck and is carried to an institution where the injured have been taken. The gypsy, keeping an eye on De Vaux's movements, follows him to the moment when he throws the child from a cliff into the water below. The close of the chapter leaves us in suspense, wondering whether the child really drowns or is rescued by the gypsy.

Nov. 27 is the date set for the release of the first chapter. The sequel promises to be quite as interesting as the serial which ran on the Mutual program something like a year ago.

GAUMONT DECEMBER RELEASES.

The Gaumont Company has announced its releases for the first two weeks in December. There will be two installments of the Mutual photo-novel, "The Vampires." The first will be the third episode, "The Ghost," released Dec. 7. A week later, Dec. 14, "The Dead Man's Escape," will be issued. Each episode is complete in three acts. There are nine episodes in "The Vampires," the final one not being released until Jan. 18

The first of the single-reel releases is "Reel Life," No. 31, Dec. 3. It will contain pictures of a passenger-carrying aeroplane, "Modish Coiffures" dressed by a Fifth-avenue hairdresser, the prune industry in California, and how to dance the Biltmore waltz, one of the season's new dances.

"Tours Around the World," No. 5, released Dec. 5, will take spectators for a visit to Venice, Senegal, France's West Africa colony, and Jersey, the largest of Britain's Channel Islands.

The fourth Gaumont single-reel of the week is The Mutual Weekly.

The second week in December opens with "Reel Life," No. 32. This release of Dec. 10 shows the olive industry in California, how to preserve the teeth to insure good health, how turpentine is made from waste timber, and how to dance the Two Two, a novelty dance..

"Tours Around the World," No. 6, released Dec. 12, show the Nile river, Carcassonne, a feudal town of France, and Lake Lucerne, Switzerland.

"See America First," No. 66, released Dec. 13, shows Pasadena, Cal., known as the "city of roses." On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, animated, by Harry Palmer.

The fourth single-reel of the week is The Mutual Weekly.

SELIG'S ATHLETICS MAKING RECORDS.

That Selig's film record of the 1916 World's Championship Baseball Games is "delivering the goods" in the territories served by George Kleine's twenty-three distributing offices in the United States and Canada, is made strikingly patent by the fact that before the feature had been in service three weeks it was necessary to print a second edition of posters, the original supply having been completely exhausted in that time. The demand for the baseball pictures eclipsed even the estimates of the manufacturer and distributors, and several of the Kleine offices were forced to call for additional prints in order to fill applications for dates. In the picture Bert goes fishing instead of chopping wood. He lands a ten pounder and, despite his efforts to sell the fish, is unsuccessful. The reel closes with Bert being led back to the woodpile.

SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 93, 1916 (Selig), Nov. 20.—Men of U. S. S. New York presented with cup for marksmanship, New York; woman chauffeur operates commercial auto, Philadelphia; new steamship service between United States and Honolulu established, San Francisco; crippled children given auto outing, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Vivian Reed, Selig star, poses for fashion section; Harvard defeats Princeton, Cambridge, Mass.; cross-country season used in with six-mile run, Long Island City, N. Y.; peeps behind scenes of opera house during rehearsal of ballet, Chicago; U. S. S. Arizona leaves Brooklyn Navy Yard to join Atlantic fleet.

SOME BRAVERY (Essanay), Nov. 22.—A fair comedy reel with Ben Turpin as a bell-hop. All the guests want ice water, and in delivering the water the bell-hop manages to get it outside as well as inside of the guests. The action is quite fast and the reel finishes with a fire, during the course of which the bell-hop uses the hose to deliver water. He is commended by the guests for this.

THE GOOD STENOGRAPHER (Vim), Nov. 23.—The story of this number of the Vim Features Comedies does not give Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby opportunities to get across much comedy. It tells of a jealous wife becoming her husband's stenographer, and of how he made her quit the job. The usual novel settings of Mr. Myers help somewhat.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 94, 1916 (Selig), Nov. 23.—Racing auto hits touring car, New Orleans; University of Pennsylvania students give football team send-off, Philadelphia; Mrs. W. C. Tyler, who will sit in electoral college, Los Angeles; High School girls in hockey game, Brooklyn, N. Y.; girls sell pennants in good roads campaign, Oakland, Cal; Boy Scouts demonstrating first aid methods; latest fashions; winter racing season at Tia Juana, Mexico, begins; Ruth Law in military biplane, Chicago; Santa Clara defeats Stanford at Rugby, San Francisco; freak election bet, New Orleans; scenes of the militiamen at border, El Paso.

MOTHER'S CHILD (Vim), Nov. 23.—A quite fast knockabout comedy reel, with Babe Hardy and Kate Price the leaders. Babe goes to college and falls for one of the co-eds. This brings him before the upper classmen, who haze him considerable, but the tables are turned when mother gets on the job and, disguised, gives the classmen some of their own medicine. Also in the cast are Joe Cohan and Florence McLaughlin.

THE HOUSE OF THREE DEUCES (Kalem), Nov. 24.—The thrill in this number of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series comes when George Larkin and Director Robert Ellis engage in a fight on a weak fire escape. The fire escape collapses, and Mr. Larkin is left swinging in the air, suspended on the fire escape ladder—a dare-devil feat. The story tells of the solution of a mysterious murder. Reviewed in the issue of December 2 page 1346

THE FORGOTTEN TRAIN ORDER (Kalem), Nov. 25.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Helen Gibson, in this reel, is seen racing on a motorcycle with and beating a train and later using the same means of overtaking the speeding train and causing the engineer to take a siding. This prevents a collision between two trains, which, through a forgotten order, would otherwise have collided. The reel is up to the standard of the series. Besides Miss Gibson there are seen on the screen P. S. Pembroke, G. A. Williams and George Routh.

HEDGE OF HEART'S DESIRE (Selig), Nov. 25.—This reel was evidently made some time ago, and shows it. The acting is unconvincing and broad. The story concerns an unscrupulous youth who pays court to an heiress. Next to the heiress lives a girl in a squalid house who has a true sweetheart. The adventurer kills a man and later, in a struggle, injures Peggy. The heiress follows him and shoots him. In the cast are Virginia Kirtley, Robyn Adair, Eugenie Forde, E. J. Brady and Lillian Hamilton.

General Film Company Specials

HIS MORAL CODE (Essanay), Nov. 18.—There is sufficient materials in this three-reel drama to hold interest. The film is an acceptable short-length feature. It tells the story of a nurse in love with an interne. A wealthy patient, also in love with the nurse, tells the young man of how much better off the girl would be with him, and the young doctor sacrifices himself for the girl. The marriage proves a failure, but things are adjusted happily several years later. The cast is composed of Lillian Drew, E. H. Calvert and Edward Arnold.

THE SHERIFF'S BLUNDER (Selig), Nov. 20.—Tom Mix is again seen in this three-reel Western indulging in exciting stunts of horsemanship. It is his riding and the riding of other members of the cast that make the picture acceptable. The climax is rather surprising and unusual. An outlaw, caught by the sheriff's posse, tells the sheriff that it is his twin brother who stole the money and that he (the captured man) is the outlaw's twin brother on his way to see his dying sweetheart. The sheriff releases him and learns that he really is the outlaw. With Tom Mix in the cast are Victoria Forde and Sid Jordan.

OIL AND WATER (Biograph), Nov. 21.—Blanche Sweet, Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore and Walter Miller are seen in this two-reel reissue. The picture tells of an idealist who marries an actress whom he believes symbolizes his idea of life. But "oil and water" do not mix, and the actress goes back to her old life. She is led to her husband by her child. The husband is willing to take his wife back, but "oil and water" return to their own element.

UNTO THE LEAST OF THESE (Essanay), Nov. 21.—A two-reel drama with enough heart interest to make it a good short-laugh subject. The work of Mary V. McAlister, a little girl, is especially pleasing. With her in the cast are Frankie Raymond and John Cossar. The story tells of a poor family made rich when, through the little girl's kindness to an old miser, they inherit his wealth. Subsequently the child is neglected because of social activities of the parents.

THE FIGHT FOR PARADISE VALLEY (Kalem), Nov. 22.—No. 16 of Robert Welles Ritchie's "The Girl From 'Frisco" series. A review printed on page 1346 of the issue of December 2 states that "this number is a Western of the type that should please almost any motion picture audience. Several good scenes of irrigation projects are seen in the film, and there also take place several gun fights.

TWIN SOULS (Knockerbocker Star Feature), Nov. 24—A rather absurd three-reel drama in which R. Henry Grey is featured, and in which he plays three characters. There are several good double-exposure scenes. The story concerns a girl who believes in reincarnation and "twin souls." She marries a respectable man, is abducted by her husband's twin soul in the person of Bad Lonie, and later, in Egypt, runs away with a third man who she believes to be the real soul of her husband. Her husband fights the Egyptian and they are reconciled. In the cast are also seen Lillian West, Mollie McConnell and Charles Dudley.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE EAGLE'S WINGS, December.—This five-reel screen drama in a plea for preparedness. The subject is handled with force and the picture is entertaining. Villa raid is one of the dramatic incidents. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE SIGN OF THE POPPY, Dec. 4.—A five-part melodrama, the story of which was written by J. Grubb Alexander. It concerns the vengeance of a chinaman on an American. He steals one of the twin sons of the American, rears him an opium fiend, and afterwards loses his life at the hand of the younger man. Hobart Henley plays a double role very cleverly in this picture, while Gertrude Selby plays charmingly the feminine lead. A full review of the story appears elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation

THE MISCHIEF MAKER (Fox), Nov. 27.—This five-reel photoplay was written to suit the personality of June Caprice and succeeds in its mission. It is filled with scenes from boarding school life, and the plot is made up chiefly of incidents of a comedy nature. An extended review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE SCARLET RUNNER, NO. 10 (Vitagraph), Dec. 4.—An unusually interesting number of this serial, entitled "The Lost Girl," in which Christopher Race takes a flight in his friend Paul Western's balloon for the purpose of rescuing Western's sweetheart. They witness from the balloon a weird scene in the home of the young woman's uncle with whom she is imprisoned, and arrive at court via the Scarlet Runner in time to prove themselves the best of witnesses and to prove the girl's innocence of the charge of murder laid against her.

International Film Service, Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 1916, Nov. 24. Making Christmas toys, Winchendon Mass.; Congressman Blakley, of Pennsylvania, flies in aeroplane to Washington from Philadelphia; thousands of Thanksgiving turkeys being raised at Calexico, Cal.; largest chair, replica of Executive chair, to be shipped to Philadelphia; herd of deer in wooded spot near Fort Sam Houston, Texas; girls sell pennants for better roads, Oakland, Cal.; fashion section; Ruth Law sleeps on hotel roof, Chicago; ex-slaves and former owners meet in convention at Washington; Dario Resta wins Vanderbilt cup at Santa Monica, Cal.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

THE BREAKER (Essanay), Dec. 4.—A visualized story of exceptional interest, well directed and photographed. Bryant Washburn, Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain do meritorious work in the leading parts. The appeal of this Essanay feature should be wide. An extended review appears in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation

BIG TREMAINE (Yorke), Nov. 20.—This five-reel picture, made by the Yorke Players, tells a story that is worth looking at, but is produced in a rather tactless way. The acting is not much above fair. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

THE FLIRT, November.—A one-reel farce, made by Billy Quirk, that is full of farcical action and the funny faces one expects and looks for in this kind of Keystone-like picture. It is an acceptable lightener for a program

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 99 (Mutual), Nov. 22.—Interesting items of this issue are a new tractor attachment that will turn a Ford car into a useful farm implement; Sir Ernest Shackleton arriving in San Francisco en route to the Antarctic to save his companions marooned on Ross Island; President Wilson's re-election being celebrated at Anchorage, Alaska; the destruction by fire of the home of F. W. Woolworth at Glen Cove, N. Y.; and the elevation and placing of the heroic statue of "Electricity" atop the new Telephone and Telegraph building, New York City.

AN ARTFUL DODGER (Novelty), Nov. 25.—One of the kind of farce comedies that it would be well to suppress. In so far as the male representation in the picture is concerned it is a drunken brawl from beginning to end, introducing also an indecent feminine element. In some instances where indecent suggestion would have failed to carry, in the action of the picture, the sub-titles have been made to convey it. The story of the film concerns the struggle of a man to avoid being served with papers in divorce suit which is being brought against him by his wife because he has stayed out all night carousing at a stag party, where, according to the subtitle, "every stag must have his doe."

REEL LIFE, NO. 30 (Gaumont), Nov. 26.—This issue of Reel Life contains articles on "Gathering Cocoa," showing the harvesting of the cocoa, the opening of the buds and extracting of the bean, the transportation of the beans by pack saddle on oxen, the fermenting, drying and hauling to the nearest depot for shipment; "Monkey Tricks," a short study showing a monkey playing a piano, a violin, and doing various other amusing tricks; fashions designed by Chas. Presley and posed by Loris Melford, and a detailed illustration of how scallops are caught and prepared for the market.

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 4 (Gaumont), Nov. 28.—This number is devoted entirely to a beautifully pictured trip through the Swiss Alps, extending from Gramosina Falls to the village of Amsteg. Special drawings guide the observer through the maze of gorges, tunnels and picturesque scenes. The subject makes a strong travel number.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 64 (Gaumont), Nov. 29.—In this number an interesting illustration of mountain climbing in Oregon with the summit of Mount Hood as the objective point appears. The ascent and descent of the mountain amid fields of eternal snow and ice are thrillingly depicted. The reel closes with an entertaining silhouette entitled "Haystack Horace."

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

THE STARBUCKS (American), Nov. 23.—This is a reissue of a two-part adaptation of the Opie Read's play of the same name, which was made in 1912 and released under the title of "The Tennessee Judge." Opie Read is featured in this production, and, it may be added, his work holds its own beside the picture work of today. His support, however, is somewhat amateurish in action. The play itself is interesting in theme, and would stand repetition on a larger scale.

LONE STAR (Mutual Star Production), Nov. 23.—An excellent five-part drama, featuring William Russell as a young Indian whose ambitions led him to enter as a student at a medical college to learn the arts of the white medicine man. He is remarkably successful, and finally, after revealing many of the shortcomings of the white man, he is rewarded by being acclaimed worthy of the daughter of a wealthy white man. The plot is interesting, and the picture is well made. Charlotte Burton plays the feminine lead.

SEQUEL TO "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY" (American), Nov. 27.—"Fate and Death" is the title of this first of the four chapters of which the sequel consists. In it we meet again the same faces and same characters as in the serial of something like a year ago. The Stanleys and their little boy are passengers on a train that is wrecked, and the child is the only survivor of the family. The gypsy sees De Vaux pick the child up, steal the diamond that hangs about his neck, carry him to an institution, where the injured are being cared for, and later throw the child from a cliff into the water. We are then left in suspense pending the appearance of the next chapter. An excellent beginning.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

NANETTE OF THE WILDS (Famous Players), Nov. 27. -One of the dullest plays in which Pauline Frederick has ever appeared, merely a dragging and attenuated story affording her scant opportunity.

THE MARTYRDOM OF PHILIP STRONG (Paramount), Nov. 30.—A story of impressive theme, gathering together some of the best players of a former organization. Admirably interpreted by them as a rule and capable of holding an audience in spite of the too obvious lesson conveyed.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

LUKE'S MODEL MOVIE (Rolin), Dec. 3.—A very funny burlesque on the way in which moving picture theaters are conducted, this one-reel comedy will secure any amount of laughs.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials

PEARL OF THE ARMY (Astra), Dec. 3.—The first three installments of the new Pathe serial, in which Pearl White is starred, give the picture an excellent start. As the title implies, the serial deals with army life, the secret agents of a foreign government being implicated in an attempt to steal the plans of the fortifications at the Panama Canal. There is something doing nearly all the time. An extended review is printed on another page of this issue.

DIVORCE AND THE DAUGHTER (Gold Rooster), Dec. 3.—There is good moral foundation to this five-reel photoplay in which Florence La Badie has the leading part. The atmosphere and incidents are excellent and the picture has been well produced. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation

THE WHARF RAT (Fine Arts), Dec. 9.—A rather weak attempt at the Cinderella class of story, with Mae Marsh ineffectual in the guise of a boy.

BAWBS O' BLUE RIDGE (Ince), Dec. 9.—A Cinderella story of modern times, with Bessie Barriscale in the leading role.

Unity Sales Corporation

THE YELLOW MENACE, NO. 14, Dec. 4.—Episode fourteen is entitled "The Interrupted Nuptials" and treats of how, after the kidnapping of Najla, which takes place in the thirteenth episode, she is terrorized in the home of Ali Singh into consenting to marriage with Hong Kong Harry. When Ali Singh is at the point of performing the last rites of the marriage ceremony the house is attacked and the carrying out of Ali Singh's plan is frustrated.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 47 (Universal), Nov. 23.—Entertainments for the benefit of wounded soldiers by the English royalty leads this number. Numerous other war sidelights are pictured and numerous American scenes are also included.

EAT AND GROW HUNGRY (L-KO), Nov. 29).—A comic number, picturing the exploits of a janitor and one other man, both of eccentric types. They both lose their trousers in the course of the action, which is rough in character throughout, though quite laughable at times. This is a little too broad for particular houses.

SCRAPPILY MARRIED (Joker), Dec. 2.—A character comedy, by Harry Wulze, featuring Chas. Conklin, Lillian Peacock, Wm. Franey and Gale Henry. The married man becomes jealous of the young man who calls to see the maid, not understanding the object of his attentions. He seeks revenge on the operating table and a wild chase follows. This has no particular novelty in plot, but some of the small business is laughable. It makes an average offering of the type.

PASS THE PRUNES (Nestor), Dec. 4.—A comedy number, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Priscilla Dean. The scenes take place on a health farm and are uproariously funny. A pleasing light subject, with laughs strung all the way through it.

HIS GOLDEN HOUR (Victor), Dec. 5.—Ed Sedgwick accounts for a few laughs in this burlesque, otherwise it might be difficult to find an excuse for the picture's presentation. The situations are too hackneyed even for a comedy of this description, and most of the attempts at humor are foolish without being funny.

OH, YOU HONEYMOON (Nestor), Dec. 8.—A one-reel comedy, by Capt. L. T. Peacocke, picturing the experience of a young married couple. They meet with all sorts of tricks played by their friends, and finally arrive at a small hotel, where the groom is entertained at a wine dinner and the bride has further troubles. Slightly risque, but generally pleasing.

THE TRAMP CHEF (Joker), Dec. 9.—Wm. Franey and Chas. Conklin appear in this number as two hobos. They wake up in a haystack and go out in search for food. One lands in jail and the other is forced to chop wood by a farmer's daughter at the point of a gun. This lacks any definite plot, but gathers some smiles in the eccentric comedy work.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

GUILTY (Imp), Nov. 17.—A two-reel slum story by Bess Cohn and Wm. Parker. Harry Carey, Edith Johnson, Lee Hill, Marc Fenton, and Hoyt Sattler are featured. The plot shows the murder of a tenement owner, who has caused the ejection of an Italian and his family. The hero is a young novelist, who falls in love with the murdered man's daughter. This is familiar in theme and possesses no great novelty. Some of the melodrama is good, though not exceptional. A number of about average strength.

JUST HER LUCK (Victor), Dec. 3.—A two-reel comedy drama, by Arthur Maude and Constance Crowley, featuring Irene Hunt, Lee Hill and Mina Cunard. This pictures the adventures of a girl who leaves home because her father interferes in her love affair. She has a number of experiences, both difficult and amusing, but comes out happily in the end. There are some original and enjoyable situations in this. It makes an acceptable offering of the type.

KINKAID, GAMBLER (Red Feather), Dec. 4.—A picturesque and satisfying story with its beginnings in New York and leading to the Mexican border line. Ruth Stonehouse plays the part of a girl detective, who worms her way into the hearts of criminals and brings them to justice. She succeeds in landing Kinkaid, but his story so affects her that she releases him again and follows him back to Mexico. The manner of this is very entertaining, though little drama takes place, except in the first and last reels. R. A. Cavin is strong in the leading male part, but the strong feature is the work of the "flapper" detective. Raymond Wells wrote and directed the production.

THE TRAIL OF BLOOD (Special Universal), Dec. 4.—No. 17 of the "Liberty" series. This number is devoted to the further struggles of Liberty and Pedro in their efforts to escape from the old Spanish prison. They manage to get out of the poison pool and Pedro finds a loose stone which promises a way out. They follow this lead and think they have made good in their escape, when they drop back to the cell again. They do manage to get away later, after being tortured in a room with movable walls. A stirring, characteristic number.

ASHES (Gold Seal), Dec. 5.—A three-reel number, by Robert F. Hill, featuring Claire Mesereau, Stanley Walpole, Helen Slosson and Joseph Granby. The story concerns a pretty servant girl, whose father dies in the Klondike, leaving her fortune in charge of his young partner. The latter comes to New York and finds the girl. He prevents three persons, a man and two women, from obtaining the fortune under false pretenses. This is not developed with any special strength, but has good, entertaining story value.

A HIGH DIVER'S CURSE (L-KO), Dec. 6.—A two-reel comic number, featuring Dan Russell and Fatty Voss. Dan is scene shifter at a theater and Fatty the strong man. Some burlesque vaudeville and a three-part drama bring out many laughs. This is clean and lively and winds up with a hilarious chase.

SEEDS OF REDEMPTION (Big U), Dec. 7.—A two-reel subject, by Robert F. Hill, featuring Claire Mesereau, Stanley Walpole, Johnnie Walker and Marguerite Strasselle. The relationship of characters is vague at the beginning, but when this clears up the story is very entertaining. A child mistakes a string of pearls for garden seeds and is disappointed because they do not grow. In the meantime the maid is suspected of theft. The settings are attractive and the cast pleasing. The number is a good one in spite of some faults in construction.

THE SHADOW (Victor), Dec. 7.—A two-reel number, featuring Alan J. Holubar, Harry Carter, Neva Gerber and Helen Wright. In the opening scenes a detective is seen shadowing a crook at a reception. Jewels disappear rapidly, but there is not much conviction in this part of the story. The observer is not entirely surprised when it turns out that the thief is only a club man carrying out a wager. The subject is one of fair strength.

THE CALL OF THE UNBORN (Imp), Dec. 8.—A two-reel number, by Millard K. Wilson, featuring the author, Edith Roberts, Lillian Concord and Malcolm Blevins. This is a story of simple elements, picturing the way in which two Italian musicians get their matrimonial affairs entangled. The coming of a child to one of the wives restores the happiness of all concerned. This has no special dramatic strength and is made entertaining largely by the work of the four principals. An average number.

THE GOOD WOMAN (Bison), Dec. 9.—A two-reel subject by Wm. V. Mong, who plays the leading role, a silk hat gambler of the early Western days. Nellie Allen appears as the "only good woman in the camp." The atmosphere is good and the action interesting, though brutal in several scenes. The episode pictured is powerful in its way, but will offend sensitive observers in certain scenes.

World Pictures

ALL MAN (Peerless), Dec. 4.—Robert Warwick and Mollie King are the stars in this five-reel western drama, written by Willard Mack. The story is full of action and contains considerable comedy. A railroad wreck is one of the sensational features. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE WITCHING HOUR (Frohman), December.—A six-reel screen version of the successful stage play by Augustus Thomas, this photoplay has many excellent features. The story is novel and strong in motive, mental telepathy playing an important part in the plot. C. Aubrey Smith has the leading role. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Powell to Produce for Mutual

Will Have Studio at College Point—John R. Freuler to Be President of New Company.

FRANK POWELL has placed under contract for a series of pictures Marjorie Rambeau, star of "Cheating Cheaters," current at the Eltinge theater, New York, and Nance O'Neil, one of the most gifted stage and screen stars in this country. These stars will each be presented in a series of feature pictures produced under Mr. Powell's direction by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, of which John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, is president, and Frank Powell, vice-president and director general.

Marjorie Rambeau.

The pictures made by Mr. Powell will be distributed through the Mutual Film Corporation, but the Frank Powell Producing Corporation will be a distinct organization and maintain the offices in the Times Building, now occupied by Frank Powell Productions, Inc., which concern the Frank Powell Producing Corporation has taken over.

Miss O'Neil will first be presented in a picturization of "Mrs. Balfame," the widely read novel by Gertrude Atherton, and the first of Mrs. Atherton's novels which this famous author has allowed to be picturized. Following "Mrs. Balfame," Miss O'Neil will be presented by Mr. Powell in a series of screen adaptations of novels by famous authors.

Miss Rambeau, who makes her screen debut under Mr. Powell's direction, will first be seen in a picturization of "The Greater Woman," a play by Algernon Boyesen, whose plays have been very successful in Europe, where they have been acted in several languages.

The studio of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation will be at College Point, Long Island. Mr. Powell has leased for a term of years, with the option of purchase, Donnelly's Grove and pavilions, comprising in all fourteen acres of ground on the water front at College Point. This property, which has long been used as a summer resort, lends itself readily for adaptation as a motion picture studio. The building to be used as the studio proper has a working floor space of 16,000 square feet and will be one of the largest buildings devoted exclusively to the making of motion pictures in the vicinity of New York. In addition there are on the property several smaller buildings which will be utilized as carpenter shops, printing and developing plants and the like. In the fourteen acres surrounding the main building are a bathing beach, a football field, baseball diamond and other accessories to a summer outing place which will be utilized at various times. A large force of men are now at work installing lights and other equipment necessary to furnish complete in every detail a modern studio of the best type.

Associated with Mr. Powell will be the same staff that surrounded him with Frank Powell Productions, Inc.

"JIMMIE DALE" BOOKING HEAVILY.

It is announced by Ike Schlank, president of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, that the Monmouth Film Corporation series, "Jimmie Dale," alias "The Grey Seal," is being booked heavily throughout the country through Unicorn channels. The recent tour of the United States made by Vice-President and General Manager Jules Burnstein of the Monmouth concern produced splendid results. The "Jimmie Dale" series, which consists of sixteen episodes of two reels each, is a radically different serial from the ordinary variety, inasmuch as it deals with the adventures of a young millionaire bachelor who is urged to all sorts of bizarre crimes against society by a mysterious guiding voice known as "Le Tocsin." E. K. Lincoln, Edna Hunter, Paul Panzer and Doris Mitchell enact the principal roles in "Jimmie Dale."

It is reported by Mr. Burnstein that 1,200 leading newspapers of the country will carry the novelized version of "Jimmie Dale," which was written by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man."

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Bennett in Strong Subject

Popular Mutual Star Heads List of Players for Week of December 4.

FOR the week beginning December 4, the Mutual Corporation offers as its five-reel Mutual Star Production "The Valley of Decision," a human interest drama featuring the noted star, Richard Bennett. This is without a doubt the most intense dramatic production that Bennett has ever appeared in.

The story of "The Valley of Decision" deals with the undisputed fact that the highest good in life is parenthood. This is a high moral city play with an allegorical prelude in which young manhood, love and the child are shown to excel even wealth, ambition, fame or power.

This production is beautiful in both story and photography and Mr. Bennett is supported by an able cast including Adrienne Morrison (Mrs. Richard Bennett), Blanche Hanson and George Periolat.

On Monday, December 4, a two-reel drama, "The Turn of the Wheel," featuring Dorothy Davenport, is scheduled for release. This is a strong story telling of the love of Arnold Grey, a secret service agent, for Alice, the daughter of Major Harper. The major and his daughter reaching the end of their resources are treated rather cooly by their friends. Grey proposes to the girl, but she, thinking the proposal is more out of charity than love, refuses him. Later she and her father take a room in a tenement. After many odd situations she is brought to realize that Grey really loves her and he takes her and her father home again.

"Mutual Tours Around the World" is scheduled for December 5. This reel takes you through the St. Gothard tunnel of the Swiss Alps.

"His Uncle's Ward," a two-reel comedy featuring Sydney Mason in conjunction with a one-reel drama, title unannounced, are scheduled for Thursday, December 7.

"Uncle Sam's Defenders," a one-reel subject dealing with the making of a citizen into a soldier, will be released on Friday, December 8. This reel shows the Rookies encampment at Plattsburg, New York, the business men on the day they received their uniforms and left for the camp. It also shows the mobilizing of militia at Van Cortlandt Park, New York, the motor squad and engineering corps building a platoon bridge and the New York troops taking the oath of allegiance. The last part of the reel shows the making of an army recruit: His applying for entrance to the army, his examination, his being sworn in, and after fifteen days the marked improvement in his military tactics.

On Saturday, December 9, "Admirers Three," a one-reel comedy, featuring Ruth Shepley, is scheduled for release.

Paddy McQuire and Ben Turpin in "Shot in the Fracas," a two-reel Vogue comedy, full of laughs and the ever comic actions of these well-known comedians will be released on Sunday, December 20.

Three one-reel scenics and magazine reels from the Gaumont Company's studios, will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation the same week. Mutual Weekly, Number 101, containing the latest and most important news in the world, and "See America First," the split-reel scenic, picturing leading and interesting American spots, and Harry Palmer's "Kartoon Komics" will be released on Wednesday, December 6. "Reel Life," showing pictures of the olive industry, will appear on Sunday, December 10.

"THE VIXEN" (Fox).

If ever there was a hardened, heartless love pirate, a woman to whom truth was always repugnant; to whom lying was a constant delight, Elsie Drummond, whose role Theda Bara enacts with her usual skill and fervor, was she. The zest which the famous William Fox star plays the part, proves unquestionably that for screen purposes, she is certainly the world's wickedest woman.

This photoplay, portraying the wiles of a fascinating woman, is released on December 4 by Mr. Fox, under the particularly appropriate title, "The Vixen." Director J. Gordon Edwards filmed the production. Chief among the supporting cast are Herbert Heyes, who played Bertie Cecil, the leading male role in "Under Two Flags," William Fox's remarkable picturization of Ouida's novel; A. H. Van Buren, one of America's best known actors in stock, and Mary Martin, who has scored sucesses in each of her many pictureplays.

George Clarke, the Admiral Drummond of this newest Fox feature, has had the distinction of acting before two Kings of England and two Presidents of United States. At the Garrick Theater in London, he appeared before King Edward and Queen Alexandra and King George and Queen Mary; in America, before Presidents Taft and Wilson. It is worthy of note that the scenes in the Drummond home were snapped in a six-room set erected in William Fox's Fort Lee studios. "The Vixen" is the first photodrama in which Mary Martin has had an unmarried part, although she has been in many films.

NEW SELIG FEATURES STARTED.

Director Colin Campbell has begun the production of an eight-reel feature drama at the Los Angeles studios of the Selig Company. Gilson Willets is the author of the play and the theme centers about the inner workings of a perfectly organized syndicate of criminals, whose members live in luxury and move in the highest social circles while preying upon their wealthy victims. While the story is sensational there is a strong vein of love interest running through it. Every role, no matter how small, is in the hands of an actor of known and unquestioned ability, and the cast includes such stars as Fritzi Brunette, Edward Coxen, Vivian Rich, Bessie Eyton, Tom Santschi, Eugenie Besserer, Jack Richardson, Harry Lonsdale, Frank Clark, Al. Filson and others.

The Week at Fox Studios

New Photoplays Started and Others Completed at Eastern and Western Plants.

Two new photoplays were completed last week in William Fox's Eastern studios, by June Caprice and Virginia Pearson. On the West Coast Gladys Brockwell has finished her work for director Frank Lloyd and has commenced on another production with Richard Stanton. Mr. Stanton filmed "The Beast" and directed the picture featuring Gretchen Hartman and Alan Hale.

Under the direction of James Vincent, Virginia Pearson has already started on her seventh William Fox photodrama. Valeska Suratt's sixth feature was put in work by Kenean Buel, who made all the Pearson subjects for Mr. Fox except "A Tortured Heart."

June Caprice is also before the camera, after a brief respite. Playing opposite her is Frank Morgan, formerly with the Vitagraph Company, whom William Fox has just engaged. Others in the cast will be Grace Stevens, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Margaret Prendergast and Tom Brooke. Miss Florence Auer, author of many motion picture scenarios, wrote the 'script.

A small part in the Caprice subject goes to Flick, a beautiful yellow angora cat which a New Orleans fan sent to the William Fox star, with the request that it be used in a photoplay, if possible.

Flick will have to give an exceptionally fine performance to outdo that of Don, George Walsh's dog, who sets a new mark for canine intelligence in the movies, in "The Island of Desire." This is Mr. Walsh's newest starring vehicle, a story of romance resulting from exciting adventures in a South Sea pearl hunt. The picture moves as rapidly as any production released this year, and the cast, plot, photography, acting and direction are all superb. Besides Mr. Walsh, the photoplay has Anna Luther, Margaret Gibson, Herschel Mayall, William Burress, Willard Louis, Hector Sarno and Samuel Searles. Otis Turner screened it. Miss Gibson, who has had leads for many companies, makes her first appearance in Fox films.

The release date of "The Island of Desire" has been set for December 18.

Theda Bara in "The Vixen," on December 4, is William Fox's first December photoplay. "The Vixen" marks Miss Bara's return to the vampire role for which she is famed. As Elsie Drummond, she had the part of a woman wholly without conscience. The supporting cast includes A. H. Van Buren, Herbert Heyes, Mary Martin, George Clarke and Carl Gerard. Miss Martin has the role of an unmarried woman for the first time in her long movie career.

Following "The Vixen," William Fox announces Gladys Coburn in "The Battle of Life," for the week of December 11. "The Battle of Life' 'is a forceful photodrama of present day conditions. Art Acord will be seen opposite Miss Coburn. Others in the cast are William Sheer, Frank Evans, Richard Neill, Alex Shannon and Violet de Riccari, all of whom have done excellent work in William Fox productions.

BRIEF STORIES OF TRIANGLE DECEMBER 17TH RELEASES.

Frank Keenan with Margery Wilson and Douglas Fairbanks are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for the week of December 17th. Frank Keenan and Miss Wilson appear in a Kay Bee production of modern city life entitled "The Sin Ye Do," written by John Lynch and directed by Walter Edwards. Douglas Fairbanks is starred in a Fine Arts play called "The Matrimaniac," written by Octavius Roy Cohen and Anita Loos and directed by Paul Powell. Constance Talmadge will appear in his support.

"The Sin Ye Do" concerns itself with the entangled lives of Barret Steele, a brilliant lawyer with a well-earned reputation for doubtful morals, Dace Whitlock, his boom companion, who also lives for the mere gratification of his selfish desires; Alice Ward, a beautiful and inexperienced stenographer in Whitlock's employ, and the mother of Alice, who is really Barret Steel's deserted wife.

As "The Matrimaniac" Douglas Fairbanks will be seen in a comedy that gives him many unusual opportunities to exploit his aptitude for rapidfire action and laughter- provoking situations. The story opens with an elopement.

PATHE'S "THE CHALLENGE."

In "The Challenge" Pathe releases another A. H. Woods stage success which has been adapted into a highly dramatic Gold Rooster Play. The original production, with Bare Post as the star ran for an entire season and played all the large cities of the country. Edward Charles Carpenter, the author of "The Cinderella Man," wrote it.

Donald Mackenzie, of Astra, who directed the picture selected an excellent cast which includes Charles Gotthold, Montague Love and Helen Chadwick. Messrs. Gotthold and Love are well-known on the speaking stage. Miss Chadwick is a "find" of Mr. Gasnier's, and makes her professional debut in this picture. She is very young but her work is most promising. She is very attractive in appearance, and as the unsophisticated and artless little Western girl, presents a most appealing figure. "The Challenge" is full of out-of-doors atmosphere, primitive passions and sensational incidents. The scenario was written by Bertram Millhauser. The release date is December 10.

ARGOSY FILMS SHOW UP GOOD.

From [illegible] of "Where D'ye Get That Stuff," a five-reel feature film burlesque from the Argosy Films, Inc., are seen indications that the picture is going to be one of the best laugh producers of the season. The showings met with spontaneous outbursts of laughter at a presentation in a neighborhood house, and when presented in a theater in the shadow of Broadway. The celluloid nightmare was written by W. C. Witwer, whose stories in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines have amused thousands, and H. H. Van Loan, who is recognized as one of the greatest humorists in the film world.

The picture was first shown at the Stanley theater, on Seventh avenue, near Forty-second street. It was received with enthusiasm, and hearty laughter was heard throughout the running of the film. Then it was projected at the North Star theater, Fifth avenue and 106th street, where is was acclaimed by the management as "the funniest picture ever seen."

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff" was produced entirely with the object of creating laughs, and it is a distinct departure from the hackneyed slapstick, pie-throwing, funny-walk type of comedy. This is the first of the Argosy comedies, and indicates that there are to follow a new departure—a welcome departure in comedies of feature length.

"JERRY'S BIG DOINGS" (Cub).

Swift moving action is the characteristic feature of the third of the new series of Cub Comedies, featuring George Ovey, which David Horsley is releasing through the Mutual. The subject is called "Jerry's Big Doings," and the laughable action begins with the first scene and continues throughout without cessation until the final fade-out.

The principal figure in the story is Jerry, played by George Ovey, who, penniless and hungry, is in the throes of despair. His spirits rise with his luck, though, for he finds a pocketbook filled with money, but his prosperity is short-lived, as two policemen who have been watching him relieve him of the discovery. The action is good enough for laughs through the entire time the picture is run, but, being founded on a lot of original business, the fun will be all the more compelling. The scenes atop the telegraph pole are particularly laughable.

The whole Cub Comedy company, including George George, John McCarty, Tom Riley, Arthur Mund, Ray Lincoln, Arthur Jackson, Claire Alexander and Helen Gilmore, assists George Ovey. Milton Fahrney did the directing. The release date is set for Friday, December 8.

"A FAILURE AT FIFTY"—ESSANAY.

The world is filled with failures and their plight is naught but tragic. Driven down by misfortune, with all youthful ambitions wrecked on the rocks of life's battle, there are thousands of these deserving fathers of families in every city and town of our country. In this play, however, the down-and-out comes back—after reaching the half-century mark—makes a comfortable fortune and has the final laugh on those who drove him down. Throughout the picture the simple tastes of the old man, who even in the days of his greatest wealth is so unconscious of his success that he contents himself with his favorite smoking tobacco, makes for humor.

Scene from "A Failure at Fifty" (Essanay).

Thomas Commerford, the Essanay veteran, has, in this play, what he may consider his greatest part. The love interest is handled by Alice McChesney and Royal Douglas. Many of the scenes are laid in a factory where the character lead is superintendent. Such elements true to life as the holding of stop watches on the men are pictured. This play should have an appeal anywhere, but an especial one to patrons in any manufacturing city. Screen Time on this play is approximately 45 minutes.

Universal Excellence

That's the Keynote of the Program Subjects for the Week of December 4.

EXCELLENCE marks the program of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the week of December 4. Excellence in story; excellence in cast and excellence in productions. From the feature down to the one-act comedy every release fits in its proper niche, and rounds out one of the best balanced programs ever offered by the Universal.

Topping the list of releases is the Red Feather five-act feature production, "The Law and the Lady," in which dashing Ruth Stonehouse is the star. The story is by Raymond Wells and the scenario from the virile pen of Fred Myton. This feature was produced under the direction of Raymond Wells and will be presented to the public on December 4.

"The Law and the Lady" is a photodrama of unusual power, which moves from the beginning with force and rapidity to one of the most thrilling climaxes ever seen in a film drama. The work of the star alone would make this a great picture. Cast in the role which affords here many opportunities for tense emotional expression, she rises to great heights and gives a really splendid performance. In the supporting cast are such well-known screen artists as Raymond Whittaker, R. A. Cavin, Noble Johnson, Cleo Loring, Harry Griffith and others.

An important release on the program is the seventeenth episode of the serial "Liberty," which brings this thrilling and interesting patriotic photoplay nearer its end. The situations in this week's episode are ingenius and exciting. Marie Walcamp in the stellar role continues her remarkable acting and the other members of the cast which include Eddie Polo, Jack Holt, Neal Hart, L. M. Wells and G. Raymond Nye give rare exhibitions of screen acting.

On December 4 there will be released beside the Red Feather feature a screamingly funny Nestor comedy entitled "Pass the Prunes," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean as the chief funmakers. This comedy which was written by Bess Meredyth and L. W. Chaudet, marks a new type of one-act comedies.

"Ashes," a three-act human interest drama, written and produced by Robert F. Hill, is the release for Tuesday, December 5. Claire Mersereau has the leading role in this pleasing drama of everyday life. She is supported by Joseph Granby, Fred Hearn, Stanley Walpole, Nellie Slattery, Helen Slosson and other noted players.

On the same date the Victor comedy, "His Golden Hour," written by Henry Wulze and produced by Roy Clements, will appear. In the cast are Ed Sedgwick, Belle Bennett, Walter Belasco and Harry Mann.

The Universal Animated Weekly with its live, wide-awake, right-up-to-the-minute picturization of important events, will be released on Wednesday, December 7. On the same day will appear the Special Laemmle drama, "The Children Shall Pay," with Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley. This is a vital story of domestic life with a moral that all should follow. Another release on this day is the two-act L-Ko comedy, "The High Diver's Curse," with Dan Russell in the leading comedy role.

Thursday, December 7, the Victor two-act mystery drama, "The Shadow," and the big Indian drama, "Seeds of Jealousy," are released. The former is a powerful drama from the story of E. B. Lewis, and scenario of E. Mangus Ingleton, directed by Allen Holubar, who also plays opposite Neva Gerber. Others in the cast are: Harry Carter, Olive Adair, Helen Wright and William Cantfield. The latter is an Indian drama, enacted by full-blooded Indian screen artists, headed by Mona Darkfeather, recognized as the greatest actress of her race.

The second issue of the Universal Screen Magazine makes its appearance on Friday, December 8. This is a program feature which promises to be exceedingly popular, as it performs the unusual function of combining entertainment with instruction. On the same day will be released "The Call of the Unborn," an Imp two-act drama written and produced by M. K. Wilson, who plays the leading role opposite Edith Roberts. Under the Nestor brand on this day will appear a one-act comedy, "Oh, You Honeymoon," written and produced by Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke, with Alida Hayman and William Wayne in the chief roles of building laughs.

"The Good Woman," a Bison two-act Western drama of novel plot and stirring climax, written and produced by William V. Mong, will be released Saturday, December 9. This is an exceptionally strong release. In the case are William V. Mong, Nellie Allen, Harry M. Holden, George Pearce, Frank Whiston and Annabella Mourese. "The Story From Life," a one-act drama, with Jane Gail and Matt Moore, and the Joker comedy, "The Tramp Chef," with Gale Henry and William Franey, appear on the same day.

The feature release for Sunday is the Rex two-act drama, "The Penalty of Treason," a story of military life written by Helen Jones, scenarioized by Maie Harvey and produced by Douglas Gerrard. Prominent in the case are Ruth Clifford, Douglas Gerrard, George Gebhardt and Dave Kershow. "The Trials of a Movie Cartoonist" and "Superstitious Ceylon," as seen by Dr. Dorsey, and educational split reel and special Imp drama, "Bubbles," produced by Herbert Brenon, complete this extraordinary program.

ART DRAMAS CHIEF'S PLEASED WITH OUTLOOK.

Announce Applications for Distributing Franchises Received from Practically Every Independent Exchange.

CONFIRMATION of the Art Dramas theory of film distribution is seen by the officials of that company in the great number of applications for the territorial rights that have been received by them. Despite the fact that the advertising matter of the company carries the names of the distributors who are to handle Art Dramas pictures, wires and telegrams are still pouring in.

The plan of operation of Art Dramas contemplates the elimination of the profits of the central exchange inasmuch as the company is owned directly by its producing factors. By reason of this also it is expected that Art Dramas features will be of a higher quality than is customary in the ordinary five-reel program pictures.

Speaking of the progress of the new organization since its inception a few months ago, one of the officials of the company said: "In all my experience as a manufacturer and distributor of motion pictures I have never seen such unanimity of opinion among the exchange men as exists in the case of the Art Dramas proposition. As is well known, the greater part of the territory for the disttribution of our pictures was sold before any public announcement was made concerning the formation of the company. The few states that had not been sold before the announcement were quickly purchased. As a result of the wide latitude which rested with us for our choice of distributors, we have secured as our representatives in the various territories a group of men whom we consider to be the foremost exchange people in the country.

"Evidently the names of our producers and their past records of successful picturemaking were strong enough to sell our product even before we had announced the names of our featured players and stories.

"Since the announcement of our first four releases, our exchange representatives have advised us of the great number of inquiries and advance bookings they have received from the exhibitors in their territories. Our first release, 'The Lash of Destiny,' featuring Gertrude McCoy, was manufactured by the Van Dyke Film Corporation. The release date of this production has been set for December 14. On the week following the United States Amusement Corporation production, 'Whoso Findeth a Wife,' featuring Jean Sothern, will be released.

"In addition to a strong story picturized from a well-known novel which was written in answer to Hall Caine's 'The Woman Thou Gavest Me,' this production will carry with it the advantage of a national publicity campaign inaugurated by the McCauley Company, who published the original book.

WILFRED LUCAS IN "JIM BLUDSO."

Wilfred Lucas will make his next appearance on the Triangle program in a Fine Arts version odf "Jim Bludso," one of the most famous of the Pike County ballads by John Hay. It was this picturesque poem that first attracted widespread attention to the great American diplomat and secretary of Lincoln—long before he had dreamed that he would some day rank as our albest modern secretary of state.

This will be the first feature that Lucas has attempted since the completion of "The Microscope Mystery." Following that production he was laid up for about two weeks with an attack of pneumonia, and has only recently recovered his accustomed vigor. It is expected that "Jim Bludso" will test his stamina to the limit, as the story is a swiftly moving series of events in the life of a two-fisted steamboat engineer on the Mississippi River. As all readers of the John Hay classic will recall, the climax represents the burning of the big passenger steamer, "The Prairie Belle."

In order to secure the essential realism for this effect the Fine Arts Company has purchased the largest side-wheel river steamer obtainable at a cost of several thousands of dollars, and will proceed to burn it to the water's edge for the delectation of Triangle patrons.

Lucas will direct his own production, assisted by Tod Browning. Olga Grey will take the lead in his support.

"The Brand of Cain."

"The Brand of Cain" is the title of a very meritorious drama released in General Film Company's regular service on Monday, December 4th. It was directed by Colin Campbell and features an all-star cast, including Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and Harry Lonsdale.

The story has to do with the gold fields and the sea. A remittance man plunges into reckless dissipation in a mining camp; is discovered by a fellow countryman, who later makes the remittance man his partner in the working of a mining claim. How the remittance man, succumbing again to the temptation of alchol, takes the life of his friend and then endeavors to cover up his crime is just one episode in a very exciting story. The remittance man cannot forget the betrayal of friendship and his conscience gives him no rest. Finally retribution comes to him in a most unusual way.

Colin Campbell has put some of his most artistic efforts into the production of this drama, which, indeed, is a worthy release. Beautiful one-sheets in five colors of Kathlyn Williams, together with three and six-sheets, are issued with "The Brand of Cain."

Thanhouser's Plans for New Year

Has Contracted for Two Five-Reel Features for Pathe Exchange Service.

HAVING completed all the features that are to be released in 1916 through the Pathe exchanges, Edwin Thanhouser already has laid most important plans for his productions for the year 1917.

Mr. Thanhouser will close the year with two of the finest pictures ever turned out of the New Rochelle studio, features equal to any that have been produced by any manufacturer. Florence La Badie in "Divorce and the Daughter" has been unanimously praised by the critics. Frederick Warde in "King Lear," the second Thanhouser-Pathe December release, is expected to set a new standard for Shakespearian productions.

Mr. Thanhouser has contracted to release two five-reel features a month through Pathe and he promises that the twenty-four releases in 1917 will be of a quality even better than that of the Thanhouser-made Pathe Gold Rooster plays now in the hands of the exchanges.

January will see Gladys Hulette in "Her New York," and Valkyrien in "The Image Maker," from the Thanhouser studios. "Her New York" is by Agnes C. Johnston and is expected to be an even greater success than "The Shine Girl," which brought such fame to Thanhouser, Miss Hulette and Miss Johnston. "The Image Maker" is a unique story of reincarnation in which Valkyrien is a persecuted Egyptian maid whose soul is reborn in modern times. Eugene Moore is the director. Harris Gordon is the leading man. It contains thrilling scenes and beautiful settings. The tale is told in an out of the ordinary fashion.

Doris Grey and Wayne Arey in "Her Beloved Enemy," from a story by Lloyd Lonergan, will serve to introduce these two stars, who are new to the Pathe program. Ernest Warde directed the play, which is a virile drama of today.

Mr. Lonergan also is the author of "A Modern Monte Cristo," in which Vincent Serrano, famous as leading man in "Arizona," is starred. Mr. Lonergan has put into both these scripts the sort of action and humor and sympathy that the moving picture patron demands. Famous as the author of "The Million Dollar Mystery," he knows how to build an absorbing story, and both "Her Beloved Enemy" and "A Modern Monte Cristo" are examples of his best work.

Florence La Badie has appeared upon the Thanhouser-Pathe list of releases more often than any other star. There is a constant demand for Florence La Badie features and that demand will be supplied. Miss La Badie is just finishing "The Girl Who Wanted to Live," a story of prison reform, by Philip Lonergan, and within a few weeks will begin upon another play by Miss Johnston.

Gladys Hulette's "Her New York" will be followed by another story by Miss Johnston, especially suited to Miss Hulette, in which she will be supported by a notable cast, including Doris Grey and Wayne Arey. In this picture Miss Hulette will play a waif who has to support two little sisters and a smaller brother.

Charlotte Walker is now engaged in making "Mary Lawson's Secret," from a scenario by Lloyd Lonergan. John B. O'Brien is directing Miss Walker. Mr. Thanhouser expects the combination of Miss Walker, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Lonergan to produce that much sought rarity, a perfect picture.

Frederick Warde is now engaged under the direction of Ernest Warde, his son, in producing a film version of "The Vicar of Wakefield," that Mr. Thanhouser promises will outdo in every particular Mr. Warde's extremely successful "Silas Marner."

Mr. Warde will take many months in the making and Goldsmith's lively story will be told faithfully in all its humor and in all its sympathy. The incident of the green spectacles, remembered by every reader of "The Vicar," as well as the tragedy of the burning of the Vicar's home, will be related in the photoplay.

Mr. Thanhouser expects to engage other eminent stars for other productions and will continue to concentrate his organization upon the making of exceptionally fine features.

SHADOWGRAPH NOVELTIES PROMISED BY GAUMONT.

Recognizing that novelty gives added zest to any split reel, the Gaumont Company has announced that it will at intervals replace its Gaumont Kartoon Komic by a Gaumont Shadowgraph. This will be upon the weekly reel which also contains the scenic series "See America First." The first of the Shadowgraphs were released some time ago, a burlesque melodrama in black and white written by Rea Irwin and directed by Harry Palmer. Mr. Palmer, who animates the Gaumont Kartoon Komics, has both written and directed the Shadowgraph which reaches the screen November 29. This is called "Haystack Horace, a Knight of the Road."

Haystack Horace is a Weary Willie. He falls asleep and dreams a wonderful dream of a statuesque beauty who dwells in some etherial realm protected by an honest-to-goodness lion. The dream effect permits the author-director to introduce a number of unusual situations which would not be plausible were the exploits of the tramp supposed to be real. Among the players in this silhouette story are Jack Bell, Miss Hope Leslie, Tom Ward and Joe Lasher.

"THE BLACK BUTTERFLY" (Metro).

"The Black Butterfly," the new Metro-Popular Plays and Players production, dealing with love and the war in Europe, in which Mme. Petrova is the star, will be released Dec. 4. In "The Black Butterfly" Mme. Petrova has one of the most superb screen plays in which she has appeared. Burton L. King directed the play, which was written by L. Case Russell and adapted for the screen by Wallace C. Clifton.

Unusual photography marks this five-act Metro wonderplay.

Scene from "The Black Butterfly" (Metro).

Cameraman Andre Barlatier has achieved some excellent light effects, and in one scene has made a remarkable double exposure of Mme. Petrova as "the black butterfly" and as her daughter.

Rural Russia, peasant France, gayest Paris and the battle trenches of Europe are shown in this gripping photodrama, which gives Mme. Petrova an unparalleled opportunity for her unusual talents. As simple village girl, as the favorite of Paris music-halls and toast of the cafes, as a carefully brought up child of the convent, and as Red Cross nurse, Mme. Petrova runs the whole gamut of delineation of character. To say that she is more than equal to all her opportunities is superfluous.

Mme. Petrova's supporting cast is a strong one, including Mahlon Hamilton, Edward Brennan, Roy Pilcher, Evelyn Dumo, John Hopkins, Violet Reed, Count Lewenhaupt, Morgan Jones, Anthony Merlo and Norman Kaiser.

TWELFTH EPISODE OF "THE YELLOW MENACE."

Under the title of "The Aeroplane Accident," Unity will release the Twelfth Episode of "The Yellow Menace," this week. In this episode especially spectacular aeroplane scenes are shown and the excitement of the audience will be keyed to a high pitch.

Mingled with the aeroplane scenes and working through the entire episode, as a motive, the hatred and treachery of Hong Kong Harry is shown in its most violent form. The half-breed becomes madly jealous of Errol Manning and the rest of Najla's cultured friends and, although hating Ali Singh with all his soul, he resolves to betray Manning and Najla and warns Ali Singh of a plot which would have meant the Demon's death.

Manning and the miltary authorities have learned that Ali Singh plans to steal an army plane which is equipped with a stabilizing device, but they resolve to let him succeed with his scheme because he must surely bring about his own destruction, owing to certain known defects in the machine. Hong Kong Harry, however, treacherously betrays this plan to Ali Singh, who manages to escape and save himself although two of his trusted helpers are dashed to pieces as the aeroplane falls to the ground.

The destruction of the machine forms a thrilling climax to the spectacular action contained in this episode and maintains the interest of the picture which seems to lose none of its intensity as the serial approaches its crest.

MOROSCO COMPLETES "REDEEMING LOVE."

The completion of "The Redeeming Love" at the Morosco studio and the scheduling of the photoplay for release on the Paramount Program for December 28 marks a double stellar debut. Kathlyn Williams, one of the most popular stars on the screen, makes her debut as a Morosco player, and Thomas Holding, who co-stars with her, appears for the first time under the banner of that producing company. In the case of Miss Williams, the picture represents her first appearance on the Paramount Program, but Mr. Holding has been identified with Famous Players productions ever since he appeared in support of Pauline Frederick in an adaptation of Hall Caine's "The Eternal City." Other important members of the cast are Herbert Standing, Wyndham Standing, Helen Eddy, Jane Keckley and Don Bailey.

Essanay December Releases

Said by Mr. Spohr to Offer an Excellent Example of His Future Plans.

THE Essanay releases for December, in the opinion of President George K. Spoor, offer an excellent example of his plans for the future. Three strong features, one Henry B. Walthall superfeature, top the offering which is powerfully supplemented by the inauguration of two new brands of shorter photoplays.

"The Breaker," on December 4, is the first big offering of the month. Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig, with Ernest Maupain heading the support, are the principals in this picturization of Arthur Stringer's story in The Saturday Evening Post.

Richard C. Travers will appear in a feature offering for December 18. It will be "The Phantom Buccaneer," taken from Victor Bridges' novel, "Another Man's Shoes." Gertrude Glover will be seen in the feminine lead.

On December 25 "The Truant Soul," Henry B. Walthall's superfeature—designed for a screen time of approximately two hours—will be released. The play, which was taken from a story by Victor Rousseau, the famous novelist, is now being assembled at Essanay and prints will shortly be shipped to all branches of Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service for trade showing. It is a photoplay of intense power, one extremely suitable for Mr. Walthall, and officials of Essanay and a few others who have seen it are prepared to call it the best example of the star's dramatic talent ever projected on a screen.

The next of the shorter Essanay releases will be "The Final Fraud," released December 2. Bryant Washburn will take the leading role, appearing for the first time in several months in a program production. Ernest Maupain and Gertrude Glover also will appear.

"The Egg," the first of the Black Cat features, will be released December 5. Richard C. Travers and Marguerite Clayton are the stars in this light comedy.

"A Waiting Game," a Ben Turpin serio-comedy, will be released December 6. On December 9th "A Failure at Fifty," with Thomas Commerford and Alice McChesney, will be ready for exhibitors.

On the following Tuesday, December 12, the second Black Cat feature, "In a Looking Glass," will be released. Richard C. Travers, Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain are in the leading roles.

"Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 20," a Wallace A. Carlson cartoon, will be released December 13.

The first of Essanay's series under the general title: "Is Marriage Sacred?" will be "The Burning Band," for release December 16. As in the Black Cat features, each drama of this series will be a complete story. All of them will be performed by the Essanay stock company, composed of Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold and Thomas Commerford. One of this series will be released every Tuesday.

"The Little Brown Mole" will be the third Black Cat feature, for release December 19. Lillian Drew and Sydney Ainsworth appear in this mystery story.

Another Ben Turpin comedy, "Taking the Count," will be released December 21. The next of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series will be "Dancing with Folly," for release December 23.

"The Girl God Made for Jones," the fourth Black Cat feature, will be ready December 26.

The Weekly Canimated Nooz will follow, December 27, and another "Is Marriage Sacred?" entitled "Wife in Sunshine," on December 30.

Screen time on the shorter productions is approximately 33 minutes.

"The Deemster" Nearly Finished

Hall Caine's Masterpiece Now Nearly Cut and Assembled—Over 100,000 Feet of Negative Taken.

THE Arrow Film Company's super-production of Hall Caine's famous book, "The Deemster," is rapidly nearing completion, and it is anticipated that it will be ready for a screen showing before very long. During a period of over four months the entire cast has been working day and night at Block Island, and at the Arrow Film Corporation's studio located at Yonkers, N. Y. Over 100,000 feet of negative have been taken, and it is expected that the picture will be released in from seven to ten reels.

Dramatically this story is one of the most unique ever put on the screen, as it opens up a new field of production in dramatic treatment. Hall Caine's characterizations are probably the most vivid and unique of any author extant, and he is certainly one of the greatest students of human nature. The interpretation of his work has been left entirely to his son, Derwent Hall Caine, who is cast in the leading role of "The Deemster." This is Derwent Hall Caine's initial appearance on the screen in America, although he is one of the most popular actors in the British Empire. His style and dramatic treatment before the camera proved a revelation to his director, Howell Hansel, who anticipated trouble, because the English school of acting is as a rule so radically different from that of this country. Derwent Hall Caine's interpretation of his father's work has certainly refuted the axiom that "genius does not beget genius" as the son in his field will undoubtedly prove himself to be one of the foremost screen actors. His natural aptitude and his keen insight into dramatics, coupled with his inherent love of the arts, will endear him to the American audiences the same as he is looked up to abroad.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, is not yet ready to discuss the means of distribution to be used with "The Deemster."

Five Lasky Pictures for January

Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Fannie Ward, Marie Doro, Anita King and Wallace Reid to Appear on Paramount Program in Month.

SIX stars, Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Fannie Ward, Marie Doro, Anita King and Wallace Reid, will appear in the Lasky productions on the Paramount program during the month of January. Miss Sweet is to star in "The Evil Eye" on January 24; Mae Murray in "A Mormon Maid" on the eleventh; Fannie Ward in "Betty to the Rescue" on the fifteenth; Marie Doro in "Lost and Won" on the twenty-second, and Anita King will co-star with Wallace Reid in "Golden Fetters" on the twenty-fifth of the month. "The Evil Eye" is a story of Mexico, written by Hector Turnbull.

Paul West is the author of "A Mormon Maid," which depicts Miss Murray in most thrilling dramatic situations in the justly celebrated state of Utah. It is a tale of the "Fifties" when the Mormons were establishing their kingdom in the wilderness in defiance of the attenuated authority of Washington. The frightful work of the "Avenging Angels" in their effort to prevent the escape from the colony of those who might bear unsavory tales of some of the phases of Mormons, plays an important part in the story, which deals with the experiences of a Gentile family which is forced by an Indian raid to take refuge with a Mormon caravan.

"Betty to the Rescue," which was written jointly by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun, is set in the orange groves and the mining districts of California. It is the tale of a gold mine that is first declared worthless by a crooked engineer and then salted by some of the boys in order to fool Fannie Ward—alias Betty Sherwin—into believing that she had struck gold. When the "salt" nuggets ar counted, a stranger is found among them and that leads to an important discovery which changes the life history of three people.

Marie Doro is Cinders in "Won and Lost," a story written especially for her by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, who have collaborated so successfully in a number of big stage hits. "Won and Lost" has to do with a little newspaper waif whose spirit so attracts the admiration of a wealthy clubman that he wagers $50,000 that in one year he can make such a society belle of her that many of his friends will be suitors for her hand. He loses his wager but wins freedom from false arrest and other things which he values much more.

"The Golden Fetters," in which Anita King and Wallace Reid co-stared, is the story of an Alaska gold mine that contains no gold. It does, however, yield plenty of adventure in which outlaws are concerned, a multiplicity of comedy, and a thrilling drama that is filled with action.

"A CREAM PUFF ROMANCE" (Keystone).

At the Triangle studios out on the coast, active work is about completed on the new Roscoe Arbuckle comedy, "A Cream Puff Romance." Alice Lake is being featured in support of "Fatty," and most of the amusing incidents in which they figure take place in the bakery and about the soda fountain set that are used in the story. Several barrels of flour, and numerous drayloads of bakers' and confectioners' supplies have also been utilized in giving atmosphere to the Arbuckle vehicle, despite the high cost of foodstuffs.

"Fatty" is said to have evolved much novel business in his handling of the various cream puff and chocolate sundae episodes that characterize the plot. Throughout most of the picture he is garbed in a large plaid shirt and the apron and cap considered in keeping with a culinary comedy.

Spectators who witnessed the filming of this new feature declare that "Fatty" has achieved his most laughable effects since he romped through the various complications of "The Waiters' Ball."

"MASQUE OF LIFE" IN CHICAGO.

That a real novelty in the films can always be depended upon to make itself popular with the public has been demonstrated once again in the case of "The Masque of Life," an Italian-created spectacular production which has been made entirely suitable to the American market by thorough re-editing, artistic re-titling, and the introduction of "marionette" scenes by Rita Jolivet and Hamilton Revelle. At the Park Theater, New York, where the first presentation in American took place, the picture won instant popular approval, which success it has duplicated at the La Salle Theater, Chicago.

HEYES, VAN BUREN, AND MARY MARTIN IN "THE VIXEN."

Herbert Heyes, A. H. Van Buren and Mary Martin have prominent parts in "The Vixen," which William Fox will release on December 4. The production is J. Gordon Edwards' thirteenth for Mr. Fox.

Bluebirds For Two Months

Advance Program Covering December and January Reveals a Diversity of Subjects.

FROM an abundance of subjects awaiting release, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has scheduled its program well into January. The variety of themes will insure a diversified offering, and in winding up its first year of the series Bluebird is planning itself upon the merits of its forthcoming releases. The early December features, as previously noted, include "The Sign of the Poppy," with Hobart Henley, Dec. 4, and Dorothy Phillips, in "The Price of Silence," Dec. 11.

"The Right to Be Happy" is the title that has been definitely agreed to the Dec. 18 Bluebird, based on Charles Dickens' immortal classic, "A Christmas Carol." Rupert Julian, who directed the production from E. J. Clawson's adaption, will be featured along with Francelia Billington and Agnes Vernon. This release will be particularly timely, as opposition to Christmas shopping and be right in the subject as well.

"The Shriveled Soul," scheduled for Christmas week, was written and directed by Lynn Reynolds and produced with Val Paul, Myrtle Gonzales and George Hernandez in the principal roles. Jack Curtis, Frederick Montague, Harvey Griffith, Francis Lee and Edward J. Brady complete the cast.

New Year's week will bring Cleo Madison back among the Bluebirds in the Rex Ingram production, "Black Orchids." It was intended to change this title to "Flowers of Doom," but the original caption has been definitely determined upon. Wedgewood Nowell and Francis McDonald will be prominent in Miss Madison's support.

Violet Messereau, one of the earliest stars in the series, will probably be presented in "The Greatest of These," a Bluebird No. 52 on Jan. 15, although Dorothy Phillips in "The Piper's Price" may be selected to end Bluebird's first year. Between these two features, however, lies the attractions for Jan. 8 and 15. The series will begin its second year on Jan. 22 with an appropriate feature duly chosen, but not ready now to be announced.

Meanwhile the special Bluebird, to be released Dec. 4, independent of the program, is beginning to be in great demand among exhibitors. Several theaters throughout the country have contracted to pre-release this "industrial preparedness" feature. The various Bluebird exchanges are handling this subject along state right lines, and the reported demand is so encouraging that Bluebird will undoubtedly follow this special with other appropriate subjects to be marketed outside of the program.

MARY PICKFORD IN "THE LASS OF KILLEAN."

One of the most interesting releases in the early part of the coming year will certainly be "The Lass of Killean," in which Mary Pickford is being directed by Maurice Tourneur. The story is one where the action takes place on an island on the west coast of Scotland, a part of the world with which Mr. Tourneur is quite familiar. The village in which the action takes place was reconstructed at Marblehead Neck, Massachusetts, and attracted an enormous amount of local attention, the high-road skirting the location being crowded every day by scores of automobiles filled with Mary Pickford's admirers. The scene every day at the end of work, when Miss Pickford retreated to her hotel, was something that recalled a reception at Shadow Lawn, terminating with a procession of automobiles. The combination of Maurice Tourneur and Mary Pickford has been a peculiarly happy selection, both having admired each others work for a long time, but never having worked together, and Mr. Tourneur expressed himself on many occasions as being delighted with the co-operation.

GAUMONT SPLIT-REEL PROVING POPULAR FOR MATINEES.

The Mutual branches report that film of Gaumont's split-reel "See America First" and Gaumont Kartoon Komics, never lies upon the shelf after what is regarded as the natural life of the film. These reels are in great demand because of the happy combination of American scenery and humor. They are proving especially popular for children's matinees and morning performances. The advantage lies in the fact that the child's interest is aroused and its imagination stimulated by some well taken pictures of historic importance or scenic beauty, and then comes Harry Palmer's animated cartoons with their naive and appealing sense of humor. Since adults are but children of a larger growth, the pictures enjoy the same popularity with them, and at the same time make an even greater appeal.

GRAUMAN GETS "MASQUE OF LIFE."

D. J. Grauman, of San Francisco, the noted Coast buyer of big features, is at the Hotel Astor, New York, and announces that he has secured the rights to J. L. Kempner's big spectacular film, "The Masque of Life," for the States of California, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Oregon, Washington and Idaho. He came all the way from San Francisco to see the film and says that he feels that it will make a real hit in the territory which he controls.

TWO DREW-METRO COMEDIES.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Metro stars, are busy finishing up work on two of their popular one-act domestic comedies, "Reliable Henry" and "Her Obsession" are the titles of the sketches and both are certain to set new laugh records even [illegible] of Metro Drew [illegible]

In "Reliable Henry" Mr. Drew plays the part of the husband who runs errands for his wife, tends to all her shopping and is generally henpecked. The [illegible] makes a mistake and is always reliable and sure. Then one day he decides that he'll call a strike. He is to purchase and mail a whiskey flask as a birthday remembrance to a favorite uncle, and also send a bib to a baby. When he gets the two presents hoplessly mixed up and demonstrates how unreliable he can be, he regains his own place of authority in the home.

"Her Obsession" has to do with the troubles and fears of a wife growing stout. Mrs. Drew is at her very best in the part and the story of how her husband uses mental suggestion to relieve her anxiety in amusing from start to finish.

MOSS CHANGES RELEASE DATE.

Announcement is made by B. S. Moss, concerning a change in the schedule of his one-a-month policy. Instead of releasing "The Woman Redeemed" on December 1, Mr. Moss realizing that the trend of the people calls for a propaganda subject, will release a big photodrama dealing with a much discussed and popular topic. Stars of international fame will figure in the presentment.

MOTION PICTURE THEATER LIGHTING.

The National X-Ray Reflector Company, of 235 West Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, has issued a series of detail plates of which that represented by the minature production shown herewith is of particular interest to proprietors of motion picture theaters.

This plate shows the details of installation of the Eye

Comfort Lighting System for motion picture houses, which allows of the flooding of the house with daylight without visible lights or the obstruction of hanging fixtures.

The National X-Ray Reflector Company also issues a fifty-two page portfolio telling how to plan and specify an indirect lighting system. This portfolio, as well as the full size original of the accompanying miniature plate, will be sent free to those of our readers who will mention the Moving Picture World when writing for same.

Class in Paramount Program

"Oliver Twist," Starring Marie Doro, and "The Victoria Cross," Starring Lou-Tellegen, Are the Big Features on the Paramount Program, Week of Dec. 11.

UNDOUBTEDLY the most imposing production that has come from the Lasky studio in the past six months will be the screen revival of Charles Dickens' immortal "Oliver Twist," which has been faithfully adapted for the Paramount program, with Marie Doro playing the part of Oliver Twist, and an all-star cast, to be released the week of Dec. 11. The other feature on the program is the Lasky production of "The Victoria Cross," a story laid in India, dealing with the uprisings of the natives against the English, in which the famous dramatic actor, Lou-Tellegen, plays the leading role.

The faithful adaptation of Dickens' classic reimmortalizes the characters that have been handed down in literature to the present day by the greatest and most famous English story writer. Miss Doro is supported by an all-star cast in this production, including Hobart Bosworth as Bill Sykes, Tully Marshall as Fagin, Raymond Hatton as The Artful Dodger, James Neill as Mr. Brownlow, Elsie Jane Wilson as Nancy Sykes, Harry Rattenbury as Mr. Bumble, Carl Stockdale as Monks and W. S. Van Dyke as Charles Dickens.

Director Young has almost outdone Dickens himself in producing the types for this production. The story has been given most elaborate attention, and the English atmosphere of that period most admirably preserved. This production marks the return of Hobart Bosworth to the Paramount program.

"The Victory of Conscience," in which Lou-Tellegen recently starred, has also appeared in the Lasky production of "The Explorer" and "The Unknown") will be seen in "The Victoria Cross," from the play by Paul Potter. This gripping drama is founded on the massacre of the English at Cawnpore during the Sepoy rebellion, and is one of the most unusual stories ever written for the screen, and in which four of Los Angeles society girl pupils of Ruth St. Denis appear as oriental dancers. These young ladies were trained especially by Miss St. Denis for this production. Besides Lou-Tellegen, the cast includes Cleo Ridgley, Ernest Joy, Sessue Hayakawa, Mabel Van Buren, Frank Lanning and Harold Skinner.

Surrounding the Paramount program for the week of Dec. 11 are four short reel features of unusual excellence, the forty-fourth edition of Paramount pictographs the magazine-on-the-screen, in which there is shown "Modeling from Life," "First Aid to the Four-Footed," "The Beauties of Lake Orta," and "Taking the Bumps Out of the Ocean"; the forty-fifth of the series of "Weekly Trips Around the World," by Burton Holmes, the world's most distinguished traveler, in which he takes his fellow journeyers to the Upper Nile; the Paramount-Bray cartoon from the pen of Earl Hurd entitled "Bobby Bumps Helps a Book Agent," and the Paramount Black Diamond comedy, entitled "His Ivory Dome."

The Black Diamond comedy for the week of Dec. 11, released by Paramount, is "His Ivory Dome," into which there is projected a great deal of trick photography, which style of motion picture work has been brought to the highest degree by the producers of these "little features" for Paramount. The comedy tells of Black Hand Bill and one of his gang, who for some mysterious reason are pursuing a fair damsel in the attempt to kidnap her. Committing the crime they scheme in every possible way to evade the law, until they sink deeper into the mire of their predicaments as the production grows longer.

Paramount has arranged a great deal of special publicity for all of the productions for this week, all of which are designed as exhibitors' aids in their endeavor to have the theaters presenting these pictures do so upon the highest standard possible. Book dealers of every country are co-operating with Paramount in the promotion of the screen revival of "Oliver Twist," and many special performances will be held by literary societies in different communities in honor of this great picture. New types of one, three and six sheets are being issued in connection with these productions and a great deal of special publicity material has been prepared by the advertising and publicity departments of the Lasky Company and Paramount.

SHERRILL OBTAINS RIGHTS ON TWO SUBJECTS.

William L. Sherrill, the president of the feature producing company that bears his name, announces that he has bought the screen rights to "The Rainbow," written as a play by E. A. Thomas, and "Once to Every Man," one of the best sellers of a year ago, for production and release on the Art Dramas program.

"The Rainbow" was first produced as a Broadway attraction at the Liberty theater in March of 1912, with Henry Miller and Ruth Chatterton in the leading roles. It had a most successful run there, staying for over a year, and has been touring the country ever since. Dorothy Bernard, Jack Sherrill and Robert Conness will have the leading parts.

"Once to Every Man" first appeared serially in the Metropolitan Magazine, where an installment of it appeared every month for a year. It was then published in book form, and was so successful that it ran through four editions within the first six months after its issue. It was written by Larry Evans, who is also the author of "Then I'll Come Back to You," which was screened so successfully by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, with Jack Sherrill and Alice Brady in the leading parts.

General Film Program

First of Essanay's "Black Cat" Features Makes Its Appearance Beginning the Week of Dec. 5.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY announces that beginning Dec. 5 Essanay will release the initial "Black Cat" feature, "The Egg." Each feature is a complete story in itself, having no relation to the other stories except that they all possess the same distinctive style. Kathlyn Williams is starred in the two-reel Selig production, "The Brand of Cain," which will head the General Film Service releases for the week of Dec. 4-9, inclusive. Many of the scenes in this picture were taken while the company was en route to Panama to film the "Ne'er-Do-Well," and they will form a wonderful background for this gripping story. "Where Is Your Friend?" a one-reel comedy from the Vitagraph studios, will precede the always enlightening Selig-Tribune and a one-reel drama, "My Baby," reissued by Biograph, featuring Mary Pickford, will close the program for the day.

Two of Essanay's big stars, Richard Travers and Marguerite Clayton, will provide the fun in the first "Black Cat" feature comedy, "The Egg." Then to round out the laugh, Kalem supplies "Jailbirds," a one-reel comedy with an all-star cast, including Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch. "A Bit of Human Driftwood," a Biograph drama in two acts, with Irene Howley in the titular role, will close the program for Tuesday.

Ben Turpin will be seen in "A Waiting Game," an Essanay one-reel comedy scheduled for release Wednesday, the 6th, followed by a one-reel Vim comedy. Then will come the 18th episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," under the caption, "The Poisoned Dart," featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman.

The offerings for Thursday include the Selig-Tribune showing pictorially all the big events of the day from all parts of the world, and "The Guilty One," a one-reel Vim comedy, featuring Babe Hardy and Kate Price.

A Knickerbocker star feature three-reel drama will usher in Friday's program, followed by the eighth adventure of Kalem's "Grant, Police Reporter," in which daring George Larkin and winsome Ollie Kirkby are featured, entitled "The Trunk Mystery." "His Wife's Allowance," a Vitagraph one-reel comedy, in which Corrine Griffith and Carlton Weatherby are starred, will precede "A Rare Boarder," a Vim comedy of the same length, featuring the ever funny Pokes and Jabbs.

Thimos Commerford and Alice McChesney are featured in the first picture screened Saturday, Dec. 9, "A Failure at Fifty," a comedy-drama in three reels. This picture teaches both the old and young a lesson worth learning and dries up the tears with smiles. "The Lineman's Peril," an episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Series," featuring venturesome Helen Gibson, precedes "The Purchase Price," a one-reel Selig drama, starring Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley.

"Race Suicide" Bookings

Hundreds of Offers for Bookings Have Been Made Within a Week After the Phax Picture Company's Announcement.

Ever since the Phax Pictures Co. of 220 W. 42nd street, New York City, have announced their purchase of "Race Suicide" for Greater New York and State, Samuel Cummins, general manager, has been deluged with hundreds of offers of bookings for this feature. So great has been the demand for booking this feature in Greater New York and State that he has decided to use ten prints. The exhibitors have had applications in for this picture ever since its announcement many months ago.

The picture was booked for a large Broadway theater, but has been held up on account of objections of the license bureau some time ago. Since then obstacles with that department were removed and complied with. The picture has a record to be proud of. Playing to capacity wherever it has been shown, through the South and Middle West, as well as the Coast.

Unlike all other sensational pictures that have recently been shown to the public, this picture is unusual in that it is novel in its theme, with superb photography and an elaborate cast at an expense of $17,500. The policy of the Phax Pictures Co. is to promote pictures of the highest caliber, and will play no favoritism with exhibitors, but will book "first come, first served." The lobby display and paper as well as the publicity campaign is considered the best that has ever been promoted along with films.

CRANE WILBUR FEATURES.

A series of eight five-reel feature productions, written by and starring Crane Wilbur, is now in the process of making at David Horsley's studios in Los Angeles. The general title of the series is "The Morals of Men." Each of the eight pictures will be a distinct story, of course, but all will have a morality theme which comes under the heading of the general title. The first subject to be offered is called "The Painted Lie." The series, which is now more than half completed, is being made on a bigger scale than anything in which the star has appeared heretofore. The release dates of the different subjects will be announced later.

"THE PRICE OF SILENCE" (Bluebird).

Departing from the customary "triangle" in problem plays, Bluebird will introduce to its program in "The Price of Silence," on Dec 11, what might be paraphrased as "the emotional quadrille." There is a husband, his wife, the villain and a young daughter concerned in the denouement, and the woman's secret, by a cleverly contrived plot, remains unexploited, thus developing the much desired happy ending.

Dorothy Phillips, the featured one, Lon Chaney, Vola Smith and Frank Whitson will constitute a mixed foursome of artistry in convincingly presenting a gripping story. During the past summer W. Carey Wonderly's narrative of the same title was printed in a popular fiction magazine, and on this basis Ida May Park built the scenario from which Joseph De Grasse directed Miss Phillips and her associates.

To start the trouble there is shown a most realistic storm of rain and wind, during which a stroke of lightning descends upon a wayside tavern to kill a young man and expose the heroine in a most compromising situation. Later on there is a stirring sensation provided by an automobile accident, the machine tumbling down a steep embankment, to pin the villain under the shallow waters of a stream just long enough to drown what life the attendant accident had not jolted out of him. These incidents practically start and finish the presentation and the intervening episodes provide an emotional drama of forceful and logical procedure.

SMALLWOOD ANNOUNCES NEW SERIAL.

The Ess-Ess Producing Company is the latest organization formed for the purpose of making and exploiting serial films. The company announces as its first super-serial a melodramatic production which will be made in sixteen episodes. The story abounds in big thrills. The cast will include five motion picture stars of international fame. Production will begin soon and will be under the supervision of Arthur N. Smallwood. The direction of the picture will be handled by two well-known directors who will handle alternating episodes, one director supervising the cutting of his story, selection of locations and sets, while the other directs. A well equipped studio has been acquired in New York City, although it is possible that some of the exteriors will be made in Florida. Arrangements have been made to release the serial through one of the feature programs beginning the latter part of February.

NEW YORK RIGHTS TO WITCHING HOUR SOLD.

With a combination of capital contributed largely by several men interested in the automobile industry, headed by Julius Lichtenstein, Morris H. Tobias has organized a corporation to exploit and book the "Witching Hour," just released by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, a private exhibition of which was given last Wednesday at the Strand theater in New York.

"The Witching Hour" has been released as an extraordinary seven-part attraction, and Mr. Tobias, on behalf of his associates, lost no time in securing an option on the production with the rights for New York State and Northern New Jersey. The deal was closed at the office of William L. Sherrill, president and general manager of the Frohman Company, Friday afternoon.

Mr. Tobias' company has not as yet been incorporated, but the plans and interests of that company have been determined upon. Mr. Lichtenstein will occupy the office of president and will assume active control of the company's affairs. Mr. Tobias will sever his present connections and will occupy the position of manager of exploitation and booking, assisted by Julius Levine. Quarters will be chosen in the film district and other extraordinary attractions will be sought.

"THE LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR" (Pathe).

The superb seven-reel photoplay production in natural colors, Pathe's "The Life of Our Saviour," will be released as an extra holiday attraction on December 3. This world famous picture besides being marvellously realistic cannot be too highly praised for the reverent and delicate manner in which the life of the "Man of Sorrows" has been handled. Over-acting, frivolity and indifference would have been fatal. The fact that scene after scene, dealing with Christ's life from the nativity to the ascension, fades from the screen while audiences sit spellbound and often in tears, testifies to the intelligence and religious spirit in which the picture was produced.

"THE LOTTERY MAN" (Unity).

The Unity Service Corporation, under the direction of Messrs. H. W. Harwell and W. L. Merrill, will release, beginning Monday, "The Lottery Man," the comedy-drama in five reels, made from the well-known Broadway play of the same name. Thurlow Bergen and Elsie Esmond are featured in this production, which is sure to prove popular with movie picture fans wherever it is shown.

KLEINE-SELIG FEATURE SCORES.

The twenty-three distributing offices of George Kleine, now booking Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, report tremendous success with the first release of the new program, Selig's "The Country That God Forgot." This feature is booking heavily in all parts of the country, and the various Kleine offices are receiving many commendatory letters from exhibitors who have already played it.

WILLIAM FOX ANNOUNCES DECEMBER RELEASES.

William Fox announces three notably attractive productions for the early part of December. These are the releases scheduled: December 4, Theda Bara in "The Vixen," portraying the wiles of a fascinating woman. December 11, Gladys Coburn in "The Battle of Life," the premiere pictureplay of a new star. December 18, George Walsh in "The Island of Desire," the finest story of romantic adventure filmed this year.

This is a story without names. A certain group of New York society girls have fallen under the facination of the films. They are not content with being ardent admirers of Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark—they want to act themselves. They have wealth, social position, good looks, good clothes—all of the qualities that would make them stars—but each has parents who grow horrified at the thought of a member of their family acting in the movies.

One of the girls, however, knows a woman who has made it her business to supply motion picture studios with players. She calls at this friend's office the other day, and while she was there a request came from Edison's Studio for a dozen girls to play the part of veiled beauties in a harem scene in Scene from "Wrath" (McClure).

"Wrath," one of the McClure series, "Seven Deadly Sins." "Veiled beauties!" The girl saw opportunity. Here was a chance for her and her madcap mates to act in the "movies" without their parents being one bit the wiser. See if you recognize in the accompanying illustration the two girls whose backs are turned to the camera, or the girls whose features are almost entirely veiled. If you do recognize them, remember not to compliment them—at least when their parents are around.

Trade News of the Week

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

Fox's Terminal Theater Opened

New Picture House on Park Place, Newark, Has a Most Promising Premier on November 13—Is a Beautiful Theater—Excellent Music and Good Pictures Are in Evidence—Personnel of the House Staff.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent.

NEWARK, N. J.—Under auspices of the most auspicious nature, William Fox opened his new Terminal theater on Park place, November 13. If the reception given the new house by the Newark public can be taken as a criterion, the success from a patronage standpoint is practically assured. Mr. Fox in catering to the better class of clientele has introduced the art of music as an adjunct to the pictures.

The old Proctor's theater is hardly recognizable, so improved and decorated has the place been. The entire front has been changed, the old marquee having been removed, and a new one erected. The lobby has been also entirely renovated, and pictures of well-known Fox stars adorn the sides of the same. The stage is an exact replica of Fox's Academy of Music, New York.

Music plays no little part in the program of the house. The concert orchestra, consisting of twelve pieces, is recruited from among the finest local musicians. Charles Case is the conductor of the orchestra. Mr. Fox has also installed a costly pipe organ under the direction of Herbert Jores. During the opening week Roger King, a Boston Opera Company member, rendered several pleasing tenor solos. Carmen Goni, a Spanish violinist, offered a varied program of musical compositions.

The staff of the new house consists of experienced film men. John Zanft is the general representative of Mr. Fox, while Samuel Weisel will assume the active management of the house. W. R. Wilkerson has been doing all the publicity work for the Terminal, and has been exceedingly fortunate in securing the publishing of his stories.

Palace Theater Changes Hands.

Irvington, N. J.—The Palace theater, 1059 Clinton avenue, has been purchased by a company in which Morris Finkelstein is interested. Meyer Tarshis has been placed in charge of the house. Many improvements have been made, especially in the projection department, where the latest model Simplex machines have been installed to supersede the old equipment. Julius Hegel is in charge of projection. The house seats 500, and now shows pictures of the larger producing companies.

Permit Film Conditionally.

Somerville, N. J.—A committee of clergymen and laymen, consisting of Rev. Roy E. Vale, Rev. Frederick Blazer, Dr. Francis McConaughy, Hugh D. Madole, P. C. Van Nuys and E. J. Shaughnessy, made application to Mayor William V. Steele to prohibit the exhibition of the photo play, "Where Are My Children?" advertised to be shown at a local theater. The management of the theater offered to give a special exhibition of the picture so that the committee could pass upon the picture. The offer was accepted, and the clergymen, after viewing the production, decided that while the picture had several objectionable features, it carried with it a powerful moral lesson. They also said that the picture should be shown to each sex separately, and that no person under eighteen be admitted to the theater. Mr. Shaughnessy was the sole member of the committee to disagree with the decision.

"The Crisis" in New Jersey.

Newark, N. J.—The Master Photoplay Attractions, Fred W. Falkner, manager, has arranged for the organization of the Crisis Production Company, Inc., to exploit the film spectacle of "The Crisis." Offices have been opened at 52 Proctor's theater building. A company to tour the state will soon be organized and put on the road.

Jack Unger Managing Clintonia.

Newark, N. J.—Jack Unger has been named the new manager of the Clintonia theater, 436 Clinton avenue, which is owned by H. D. Mate. Various renovations and improvements have been made. The projection is in charge of John Carchio, formerly with the Greater New York Film Rental Company.

G. R. Carter a "Daddy."

Newark, N. J.—George R. Carter, manager of the Bluebird nest, is receiving congratulations from his many friends upon the arrival of his latest and best feature—a baby boy, who has been christened George R., junior. This is junior's first press notice, but since he expects to follow papa's footsteps, publicity won't harm him.

E. A. Brown in Town.

Newark, N. J.—E. A. Brown, a well-known and popular exchange man of Toronto, Canada, was in town recently looking over the local territory. He was here as the guest of Lester W. Adler, manager of the World Film's Newark office. Mr. Brown is considering several flattering offers to locate in the East.

Private Showing of Bluebird.

Newark, N. J.—George R. Carter, Newark manager of Bluebird, announces that a private showing of the special Bluebird, "Eagle's Wings," will be held soon at one of the large down-town houses. Mr. Carter has had numerous inquiries about the special feature.

Miss Dana at Loew's.

Newark, N. J.—Miss Viola Dana, the little Edison star, appearing in her latest film, "The Cossack Whip," was at Loew's Newark theater, 99 Springfield avenue, Wednesday evening, November 15, and received a hearty reception from her many admirers.

Believes in Ballyhoo.

Newark, N. J.—Edward J. Corcoran, who is now promoting moving picture houses in this city, is a great believer in ballyhoo. We produce herewith a picture of the scene in front of the American theater, 95 Market street, of which Mr. Corcoran was formerly manager. When Mr. Corcoran exhibited a "Villa" picture. "It's the flash that gets the transient trade," said Mr. Corcoran in the course of an interview. "You've naturally got to induce the public to come to your houses. By ballyhooing and advertising, the people will come to know your theater." Mr. Corcoran gained his publicity experience at Luna Park, Coney Island, where he was for seven years. He was also for many years resident manager of Proctor's various enterprises in this city. He is a well-known local man, and a member of Theatrical Mechanical Association, Local 28, Newark.

Operators' Ball a Success.

Newark, N. J.—The third annual ball of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local No. 244, held on November 17 at Kreuger's Auditorium, was a huge success both from a social and financial viewpoint. The large hall was taxed to its capacity with people eager to catch a glimpse of their favorite screen stars.

The committee in charge of the affair consisted of: Thomas E. Burns, chairman; August Benner, John C. Tasto, W. C. Uessler, Harold Shadbolt, Leonard Wolven, Joseph Ballentine, Nathan Zapol. John Michaels, Morris Lefkowitz, James Young, Arthur Cooper, Jack Walsh, Edward Wiggers, Henry Debus, Frederick Michaels. Much credit must be given the committee for the smooth manner in which they engineered the affair.

Appointments at Universal.

Newark, N. J.—Lee Gainsborg, manager of the Newark branch of the Universal, 286 Market street, announces that he has added several new employees to the office. Moe Grubel is one of the new faces seen at the Universal. Grubel has charge of the poster department.

Moe Cohen, who has been with the M. & S. Amusement Company, Proctor's, Empire in New York and other film concerns, is the new film examiner. Coleman is certainly a hustler, as besides his Universal connection he is also a moving picture operator. Last Saturday his engagement to Miss Sadie Lehman, of this city, took place. Congratulations, Moe!

DeWolfe Honored by Friends.

Newark, N. J.—Louis P. De Wolfe, manager of Fox's Carlton theater, Market and Halsey streets, was the recipient of a diamond ring from his friends and employees. The occasion was his second anniversary with the house. The gift came as a complete surprise.

Strand Has New Management.

Newark, N. J.—The Strand theater is now under new management. Sig Wachter, who has been associated with Mr. Spiegel in his burlesque enterprises, assumed the reins of management recently. As his assistant manager Joseph Prendergast, a well-known local and West Hoboken exhibitor, has joined the Strand. The new management has taken active hold of the playhouse, and has already introduced many new features, chief of which is an eleven-piece symphony orchestra.

"Joseph and His Brethren."

Newark, N. J.—George W. Jacobs and William B. Putnam, managers of the Paramount theater, Broad and Hill streets, have secured the rights to the spectacle, "Joseph and His Brethren." They will offer the production on a state rights basis, reserving such territory as they deem capable of handling themselves.

$20,000 Theater in Red Bank.

Red Bank, N. J.—Quackenbush and Leonard, of 36 Hudson avenue, have the general contract for the erection of a one-story hollow tile and brick moving picture theater, 50x100 feet, at Broad street and Linden place. The house, which will cost $20,000, is owned by the Coast Amusement Company, Asbury Park. E. A. Arend is the architect.

Files Trade Name.

Newark, N. J.—Charles S. Jamison, 382 Hunterdon street, and Charles Simon, 145 West 145th street, New York City, have filed as the trade name of the theater located at 402 Belleville avenue, "The Little Strand."

Miss Uslander at Universal.

Newark, N. J.—Miss Sallie Uslander is the new office assistant and stenographer at the Universal Film, 286 Market street. Miss Uslander is an experienced office assistant, she having come from the Hatch Film Service. Miss Uslander's ready smile and pleasant manner make her exceedingly popular among the Jersey exhibitors.

Baltimore Building Permits May Be Taxed

Charges for Permits to Build or Alter May Be Imposed—Deposit for Starting the Work and Reckoning When It Is Finished.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, Md.—On Monday night, November 20, an ordinance, which will provide the city of Baltimore with new sources of revenue was introduced in the first branch of the City Council by President O'Meara. The new ordinance is accredited to Mayor Preston and it provides that charges shall be made for permits for the erection of new buildings and the repairs or alterations to old ones.

This ordinance was drawn up by the Law Department and the requirements are that when applications for permits are made, that a deposit of $1 for each $1,000 of the estimated cost be made, the minimum deposit not to exceed $10. This charge will be imposed as a permit of license fee and the final charge will be made when the new building, repairs or alterations to an old building are completed and the actual cost of the work has been computed and reported to the building inspector.

The ordinance has been referred to the Committee on Building Regulations for investigation and it is expected that an avalanche of protests will come in, as no charges have ever been made before by this department. The recommendations which have been made by the special committee, recently appointed by Mayor Preston, to revise the building code, will soon be sent to the City Council in the shape of amendments and it is expected that the proposed changes will entirely modernize the code.

Strand Has Another Pilot.

Baltimore, Md.—T. T. Hildebrandt has taken the management of the Strand theater, 404-6 North Howard street, owned by the Howard Amusement Co. Mr. Hildebrandt is a live wire and he has been associated with the film industry for some time, having acted as assistant director for the Fox, World and Universal companies. Besides this, he was at one time casting director for F. X. Bushman at the Rolfe studios. He has entire charge of the theater and has arranged a one year uncancellable contract with the Fox company for exclusive first run pictures in Baltimore at the Strand. The price of admission is now 15 cents, having been reduced from 20. Many changes are contemplated. He plans to run a fashion show with live models, when he runs a Surratt picture, and as a unique feature expects to have about fifty feet of film made of the girls exhibiting the gowns and wraps, so that they can be screened and as the picture finishes the curtains will part and the live models will appear exactly as they are seen on the screen, thus showing the ladies in the audience how the clothes will look in a photograph as well as in reality.

New Theater at Hamilton.

Hamilton, Md.—The moving picture theater and community building which is being built by Capt. W. A. Blake and H. P. Mann on East Hamilton avenue in this city, is now nearing completion and when finished the theater will have a seating capacity of 450 people. Frank H. Durkee, a well-known theater owner and exhibitor of Baltimore, will equip this house with all that is the latest in the way of projection machines, screen and other accessories. As this is the only picture theater in Hamilton, it is expected that it will prove a great success. The Palace, Colonial and Plaza theaters of Baltimore are among the theaters owned by Mr. Durkee.

Ground Broken on East Fayette St.

Baltimore, Md.—Ground has been broken and the foundations have been laid for the new $10,000 moving picture theater which is being erected at 2238-43 East Fayette street. When finished the house will seat about 400.

"Lass of Lumberlands" Scores.

Baltimore, Md.—Chas. E. Anderson, manager and owner of the Grand theater, Highlandtown, who is now running the Mutual chapterplay "The Lass of the Lumberlands," states that he is highly pleased with this continued picture and that on Wednesday, November 21, when he screened the second chapter, the patrons were very enthusiastic in their comments. Large crowds attended the performances on Wednesday night.

If you are doing something new and interesting at your theatre let our correspondent know about it. It may help others and help you as well.
Helpfully yours,
THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Children's Matinees Resumed.

Baltimore, Md.—Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager of the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, has resumed the special Saturday morning matinees for children which were so successful at this house before the Health Department plague ban stopped the children from attending the theaters. Instead of changing the feature on Thursday of last week, Mr. Depkin ran the latest Mary Pickford release, "Less Than Dust," from Monday until Saturday.

Innovation at Nixon-Victoria.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles E. Thropp, manager of the Nixon-Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, has introduced a unique innovation into his lobby display for the purpose of informing the patrons of this house the exact time when the acts will go on. Along the walls on each side are hung handsome brass frames with a backing of green velvet, on which the photographs of the players and the names of their acts are placed. Now the unique feature is that beside each group of photographs he has a cardboard disc representing the face of a clock with movable hands, so that they can be pointed to any hour. The discs are artistically but inexpensively framed with a unique cardboard design at the top of which reads: "This act will be shown at," and the discs point to the time.

Roanoke, Va.—The Roanoke theater has been taken over by Elmer Hinz, who controls the American and Jefferson theaters in this city. This was formerly the Keith House. Mr. Hinz announced that he will change the entire policy of the theater, to take effect on or about January 1, 1917, and will thereafter exhibit high class motion pictures exclusively.

Operators Dance with Delegates as Guests

Seventh Annual Ball of Baltimore Operators' Local 181 Held at the Lyric—Decorations and Colored Spot Lights—Among Those Present.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On Wednesday night, November 15, at the Lyric, was held the seventh annual dance of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 181. This is usually held in January, but as the convention of the American Federation of Labor was in this city, the event was advanced and held in their honor.

The theater was lavishly decorated with bunting, pennants and banners. The affair began to liven up at about 11.45 p. m. and a screen was lowered on the stage. A slide reading, "Welcome, Delegates," was flashed and then followed a comedy and a Gaumont scenic. After this the band struck up a lively dance and while the people glided over the well waxed floor the colored and spot lights played upon them, making a wonderful futurist picture of the whole. The crowds in the balcony let loose a broadside of confetti. G. Kingston Howard was chairman of the committee of arrangements and S. Isaacson acted as secretary.

Among those present from the Federation and others were:

Mrs. Helen Goslin, a dancing instructor of England; Bunji Souki, of Japan; Secretary of Labor Wilson; Samuel Gompers, president of the A. F. of L.; B. A. Spellbring, Washington Operators' Union; C. A. Canavan, Detroit Operators' Union; Charles Chay, International Operators' Union; M. C. Higgins, same.

Philadelphia Considers Increase in Taxes

Picture Theaters and Film Exchanges May Be Chosen to Pay Bigger Percentage Than Formerly of the City's Tax Burden.

By F. V. Armate, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Whether to increase the tax rate on motion picture theaters and impose further assessments upon the film exchanges in the city in order to find new means of securing revenue, is reported to be one of the plans mentioned by the finance committee, who have conferred recently with the city councils.

Although no agreement has been reached at present it is understood that the increased burden of taxation will not only be imposed upon real estate alone for 1917.

Alice Brady Appears

Pretty and Talented Picture Star Honors Philadelphians by Coming to Belmont Theater.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Picture patrons of West Philadelphia were honored last week by a visit from film star of first magnitude when, on Monday evening, Alice Brady, the young star of Brady made photoplays, accompanied by her father, William A. Brady, made a flying trip to the Belmont theater, Fifty-second street, above Market. A crowd filled the theater and blocked the street to catch a glimpse of her. Both the Felt brothers, owners of the house were on hand in person to assist Manager Jacobs in handling the enormous throng.

Miss Brady received a real ovation when she arrived at the house at 8.45 p. m., accompanied by her father and Leander Richardson, the celebrated publicity promoter of the Brady forces. She was gowned in a striking evening frock of blue and wore a cape with an enormous white fur collar and a black tulle hat. She was introduced by Abe L. Einstein of the Stanley Company, and after a prolonged burst of applause had subsided made a graceful little speech and recalled to her hearers that she had been a light opera prima donna before she became a picture star by singing a graceful love song "For You Alone."

Holding a huge bouquet of American beauty roses, the gift of the Messrs. Felt, Miss Brady chatted for a few moments with local celebrities and then departed for New York.

The affair was arranged to commemorate the showing of the splendid feature picture "Bought and Pair For" in which Miss Brady is the star. The film has been doing fine business at the house all week.

Rome and Babylon Had Nothing on Little Old Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Baptist ministers of this city at their weekly meeting passed resolutions to take immediate action against "A Daughter of the Gods," which is in the midst of a successful run at the Chestnut Street opera house. Dr. Samuel Zane Batten, secretary of the social service department addressed the 100 ministers present, saying:

"I was amazed when I saw advertisements in some of the newspapers telling of a show in one theater in which a woman appeared nude. From what I read and the pictures I saw I tell you old Babylon and Rome had nothing on Philadelphia when it comes to shows of this kind.

"I believe it is high time we take decided action against this theater, its managers, the players and all others concerned, and also request the Philadelphia newspapers not to publish such shocking advertisements."

J. S. McSween, manager of the Opera House, when the matter was brought to his attention said:

"We welcome an investigation by the ministers. We invite them to come down and see for themselves that the play is artistic and not immoral. We feel that the State Board of Censors is capable of eliminating immorality without any outside aid and will continue the picture."

Great Northern Reopens.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Altered and enlarged at very considerable expense the Great Northern theater, at Broad street and Erie avenue, opened its doors once again on Thursday evening. As it now stands it is the acme of comfort and convenience and fitted to accommodate the elite of the Tioga section in which it is located.

Cigars Were on the Manager No Matter Who Won.

Philadelphia, Pa.—W. C. Hunt, who owns and operates three theaters in Wildwood, New Jersey, gave a midnight performance at his Avenue theater on last Election night. In addition to giving out the returns he distributed 1,000 cigars to the men present after 10 o'clock, and allowed everybody who wanted to smoke to enjoy themselves. He has two theaters on the Boardwalk, which are at present undergoing alterations.

Stanley Employes Looking at a $100.

Philadelphia, Pa.—One hundred dollars will be distributed as prizes to the employees of the Stanley theater company for the best suggestions received regarding better management, improvements, or anything else tending towards increasing the patronage at the different theaters under their control.

Features and Serials.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Dave Sablosky, manager of the Globe theater, Juniper and Market streets, finds Pathe's "The Shielding Shadow" serial a valuable attraction in conjunction with the vaudeville bills shown at the house. The theater plays to some 4,200 people a day and when "The Shielding Shadow" is shown, according to Mr. Sablosky "they all stick."

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Frankford, Coliseum and Cedar theaters have booked "The Crimson Stain Mystery" for early showing. The management of the Cross Keys, a prominent West Philadelphia vaudeville house, is now showing this serial and are well satisfied with its drawing power as an addition to the regular bill.

Philadelphia, Pa.—After several weeks of negotiation the Advisory Board of the local Exhibitors League has succeeded in closing a contract for the Pathe special picture "New York." This photoplay from William Hurlburt's stage success by A. H. Wood over which there was much controversy with the Board of Censors is said to be one of the big productions of the year and will be released by the Exhibitors League of Philadelphia to its members only. C. H. Goodwin, secretary of the league, states that over $1,000 will be spent in advertising the picture before it is released.

Maritime Provinces Letter

Preparing to Release Fox Comedies.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Maurice West, manager of the Montreal branch of the Fox Film, was in the city last week outlining the policy of the regular release of the two-reel comedies for Manager Carl Crawford. The company has been making these comedy films with the aid of four special companies for the past few months. In addition to the regular releases in this section, the new policy will enable regular Fox patrons to secure the twenty extra de luxe features without extra cost.

R. J. McAdam Recruits Orchestra.

Halifax, N. S.—R. J. McAdam, proprietor of the new $100,000 Casino theater was a recent visitor in Boston, recruiting an orchestra for the theater, which is to open the latter part of November. In addition to securing a large orchestra of finished artists, he purchased further equipment for his splendid new house.

Fox "Two Orphans" Twice a Hit.

Carleton, N. B.—For the second time within a few months, Billy Smith, manager and proprietor of the Empress secured a return engagement of the special Fox feature, "The Two Orphans." Mr. Smith says that the picture drew capacity houses for all performances.

Dave Richards Wants Serials.

Fredericton, N. B.—Dave Richards, proprietor of the Gem theater, recently made a trip to St. John to secure a new serial, the last installment of "Peg O' The Ring," having been shown the last week. Mr. Richards is an ardent believer in serial pictures as a drawing card, and says that he would not be without one. He is doing extensive interior renovating in the Gem, removing several pillars from the main floor that supported the balcony. The balcony is now supported by stringers from the ceiling. A short time ago Mr. Richards put in the revolving chairs, but found that the people did not take kindly to them, and he is now installing the latest word in stationary opera seats.

Fred W. Winters Visits St. John.

St. John, N. B.—Fred W. Winters of Torrie and Winters, owners of the Empress and Grand opera house, Moncton, N. B., was among the exhibitors who visited the local exchangemen last week, contracting for a winter program.

Royal at Yarmouth Closed.

Yarmouth, N. S.—The Royal opera house, which has been run here for several years by the Yarmouth Amusement Company, has been closed, and, it is understood, will not be reopened again by the same firm. Rumor has it, however, J. T. Kelty, who is running one theater here, may run it in conjunction with his other house.

Staples Reopens the Bijou.

St. Stephens, N. B.—After being closed for over two weeks on account of the infantile paralysis scare, Charles Staples has again opened his Bijou theater. The Bijou, which is in the heart of the business section of the city, is largely patronized by children, and it was felt by the health authorities that closing the theater for a few weeks might aid in stamping out the disease.

Orangemen Beautifying Their Theater.

McAdam, N. B.—Taking advantage of the compulsory closing on account of a diphtheria epidemic, the local Orange Lodge, proprietors of the only moving picture show in McAdam, are having their hall newly renovated and enlarged. The Orangemen are the only fraternal organization in this section to operate a photoplay theater for the benefit of the organization. That the scheme has proved successful is evidenced by the nature of the work being done on the building. It is expected that it will not be ready for business before another month.

Recent Visitors in Town.

St. John, N. B.—W. O. Fennety of the Gayety theater, Fredericton, George Frauley of the Imperial, St. George, and Warren Smith, who is building a new house in New Glasgow, were among the out-of-town exhibitors who were in the city on business during the past week.

Carolina and Virginia Letter

By Clarence L. Linz.

Fayettesville's New Strand.

LAYETTEVILLE, N. C.—Work is being rushed on the Strand theater being built here by Mr. Drake, that it may be ready for occupancy before the end of this month. This is a very handsome house, equipped with very attractive lobby and balcony, which, as well as the auditorium, is elaborately decorated and outfitted. Retiring rooms are being provided for both men and women patrons.

Tar Heel Notes of Interest.

Asheville, N. C.—Mr. and Mrs. L. Blumberg have returned to Asheville, after an extended trip to New York, Philadelphia and Washington. They combined business with pleasure and while in New York City viewed several of the new releases. Mr. Blumberg is the owner of the Strand theater here.

Greensboro, N. C.—The inability to get certain of the materials necessary in the construction of the house as well as parts of the equipment has delayed the opening of the Isis theater, being erected for Huff & Henderson, which was to have been opened on November 20. The delays are such that it may be impossible to have everything in readiness for the first exhibition within a month.

Wilmington, N. C.—The Royal theater, operated by Howard & Wells, has been closed down temporarily. This firm also operates the Bijou, Grand and Victoria theaters in this city, and apparently there are more shows than the people will support.

Arrington-Barrett Wedding.

Rocky Mount, N. C.—Charles H. Arrington, the younger of the two Arrington brothers, owners and managers of the two motion picture houses here, the Alamo and Grand, is receiving the congratulations of his many friends here as well as members of the trade throughout the territory who know him well, on his marriage to Miss Annie Barrett, of Wilson, N. C., on November 4. The happy bridegroom is one of the best known exhibitors in this section. Although only twenty-three years old, he has had a five years' experience in the moving picture game.

J. F. Sanderson a Benedict.

Lynchburg, Va.—Word has just been received here of a change in the status of J. F. Sanderson, who has deserted the order of the jolly bachelors to become a benedict, after having successfully wooed and won Miss Gladys Uhler, of Hagerstown, Md. Mr. Sanderson was formerly manager of the Gaiety theater in this city for Rockhill & Webber, looking after the destinies of the house for about four years. Some time ago the Palace theater was taken over and Mr. Webber's son placed in charge. Some six months ago it was decided to send Mr. Sanderson to Hagerstown to try and make the Palace a moneymaker. He has been highly successful and equally elated to the extent that his wedding will follow something less than a six months' campaign. The Moving Picture World correspondent is glad to carry the news, even though the young couple had intended keeping their marriage a secret until Christmas, but failed to keep out of the local newspapers the announcement of his securing a marriage license.

J. F. Sanderson.

Give Warning on Misleading Ads

New Titles Have Led Patrons to Expect New Pictures and the Practice in Washington Has Brought a Complaint and a Warning from Vigilance Committee of the Retail Merchants' Association.

By Clarence L. Linz, 922 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A warning has been issued to the members of the film industry in Washington by the Retail Merchants' Association of the city. Claiming that false, misleading and deceptive advertising is being practiced by certain motion picture theaters, the advertising vigilance committee of the association has started a campaign of investigation. Following a conference between Ross P. Andrews, president of the association, and Charles J. Columbus, the secretary, it was announced that a public warning would be given the alleged violators, and if this is not sufficient that summary legal action will be taken under the false advertising law.

The principal complaint has been brought about by "cross lights." It seems that some of the exhibitors have been in the habit of taking a film and giving it another name by placing the result of the rechristening above the proper cognomen. In other words, a picture entitled "Bill Smith's Son" might be given the more catchy title of "The Hero of a Double Life." The latter would be printed together with the word "or" and placed above the film's real name on the posters that would go with the show. This has resulted in thousands of people being "buncoed" into seeing the same show twice. A number of complaints have come in to the association as well as to some of the exhibitors of this action of "cross lining" taken by downtown houses and the show being exhibited under its proper name in a residential house.

When the exhibitor at the latter gets a complaint he hardly knows what to do, perhaps not having any knowledge of the christening ceremony at the first named theater. This is productive of many embarrassing controversies. Under the provision of the recently enacted Johnson fraudulent advertising law it is believed that this practice is illegal and will subject persons who essay to do these things to a fine and imprisonment. There is no getting around, either, as was evidenced recently in the trial of a haberdasher who drew down a fine of $300 for false advertising. From time to time there have appeared in the columns of The Moving Picture World articles based on the Johnson law. The Retail Merchants' Association are very much in earnest about the matter and there will be no half way measures.

Another matter which will receive attention along the same lines is what the association terms to be "abnormal and ridiculous attendance figures" used in a certain house to attract patronage. The writer is unable to say which of the theaters this is.

[The question of the right of an exhibitor to use a better title than the picture's maker furnished is interesting and important. Some pictures are better than their titles and exhibitors have been commended for the good business sense used in making not merely a more attractive title, but often one that more truthfully explains the kind of entertainment offered by their program. What a patron sees outside in the lobby is corrected by the title on the screen. Has he any right to kick if he forgets that he has seen a picture by its screen title? The truth is that a chance to kick is hard for some people to pass up.—Ed.]

Local Fox Office Prepares.

Washington, D. C.—Carl F. Senning, Washington manager for the Fox Film, is rearranging his office work to enable him to take care of the new Fox policies in effect the first of the year. After that Miss Mary Jeffries will be in charge of the regular releases, Miss Ethel Jeffries will be in charge of the 52 two-reel comedies which will come to the exchange at the rate of one a week, and Miss Stein will be in charge of the proposed feature releases. This means that Mr. Senning will have to increase his office force to some little extent.

The special pictures are to be features of a type heretofore unthought of by the company and, according to Mr. Senning, will probably surpass any previous undertaking. There are to be twenty of them released for rental to the concern's customers at the same prices as are now asked for the regular features.

New K-E-S-E Quarters.

Washington, D. C.—The K-E-S-E exchange is now in complete working order, and manager Berger is well pleased with the way things have shaped themselves since moving into the present quarters at Sixth and F streets, northwest.

Mr. Berger has ample cause for being well satisfied with the new quarters for the exchange runs back from F street for a depth of one hundred feet and all along the Sixth street side, as well as the front, there seems nothing but glass, for each of the several rooms is equipped with a display window.

The feature of the exchange is the fireproof vault with fourteen-inch walls at the extreme end of the building. In addition there is the outside wall of the building itself, which is also fourteen inches thick. The ceiling is of concrete with a vent to permit the escape of gases, and the floor is of concrete. There is a double iron door with a combination lock making it additionally fireproof. The racks are of iron and the vault is at present equipped to accommodate something more than two thousand reels.

W. H. Shipman Leaves Circle Theater.

Washington, D. C.—William H. Shipman, who for the past seven years has been manager of the Circle theater, at 2105 Pennsylvania avenue, northwest, has recently resigned his position in order to be able to take a much needed rest. Before his leaving the employ of the Circle company, its officers and employees gathered together in the theater to witness the presentation to Mr. Shipman of a written testimonial and a handsome silk umbrella on the handle of which his name had been engraved. He started in with the company at the time the land was bought and assisted in superintending the construction and finally assumed the entire management. He was well liked by the patrons of the house and had many friends among the exhibitors and exchange managers. In all probability, after he has obtained a rest, Mr. Shipman will again enter the moving picture business as manager of some local house.

Sidney B. Lust Incorporates.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, who controls the New Film Corporation, the old United Film Service and a number of state rights pictures, has incorporated his business with a capital stock of $25,000, divided into shares of a par value of $100. There are named in the incorporation papers, in addition to Mr. Lust, as trustees for the ensuing year, Celia Lust and David Wiener. The organization is to be known as Sidney B. Lust, Inc., and will engage in the selling, leasing, renting and exchanging of motion picture film exchanges and theaters, motion picture films and machinery, advertising matter, theater accessories, etc., at 903 E street, northwest, his present address. It is to be remembered that Mr. Lust recently secured the rights in this territory for the Clara Kimball Young pictures.

Specialty Takes Over a Business

Deal Gives to Specialty Film Company the Film Department of the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company—Includes Stock of 2,000 Reels of Film—Move to Larger Offices in the Film Exchange Building.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Specialty Film Company, which has been located for a number of years past at Fourth avenue and Ferry street, Pittsburgh, has leased new and larger quarters in the Film Exchange building, 938-940 Penn avenue, and moved to its new home on November 20. By one of the most important transactions in the local film trade for some time, the Specialty has taken over the film department of the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company, a pioneer exchange, which will hereafter confine itself to the moving picture supply business. The deal includes a stock of 2,000 reels of one and multiple-reel subjects, and the acquisition makes the Specialty one of the leading independent exchanges in the country. Messrs. Berger and Teplitz are the heads of this thriving concern.

The Specialty Film Company is now located in the heart of the film district, being the latest house to follow the drift away from the former center known as "old film row." The fifth floor of the new Film Exchange building affords attractive quarters and ample space for the expansion which the business has undergone.

The Feature Film and Calcium Light Company, which occupies the first floor of the Film Exchange building, continues at the same quarters, and Manager D. C. France has arranged to carry a larger stock of machines and supplies, utilizing the space heretofore occupied by the film department

Weilands Open Beautiful New Strand

Suburban Picture House at Knoxville Seats 1,000 Persons—Is Built and Decorated for Comfort and Pleasing Effect.

KNOXVILLE, PA.—The beautiful new Strand theater, in Knoxville, a suburb of Pittsburgh, has been opened by its owners, A. A. and J. A. Weiland, the well-known film men and exhibitors. The house was remodeled from the old Knoxville market house at a cost of $20,000 and is a fine example of modern theater construction. It embodies the latest ideas in arrangement and equipment, no expense having been spared in making it one of the most attractive picture theaters to be found anywhere.

The auditorium is built in the bleacher style and the seating capacity is 1,000. Both the exterior and interior of the Strand are pleasing to the eye, as the most tasteful and artistic lines are followed in the decorations throughout. The most approved system of heating and ventilation has been installed, and no detail looking to the comfort of the patron appears to have been neglected. Music is supplied by a Seeburg pipe organ, at which a prominent organist of Knoxville officiates.

The opening of the Strand was an auspicious event, being attended by a capacity audience among which were a number of exhibitors and other friends of the owners. The opening attraction was "The Tarantula," featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Morino. Numerous congratulations were received by the Weilands upon their very successful reentrance into the local exhibiting field.

Local General Film Moves.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pittsburgh branch of the General Film, 117-121 Ninth street, has leased large and handsome quarters in the new Seltzer Film building, Liberty avenue and Twelfth street, and will occupy them about December 1. When the removal has been completed the General will have one of the most up-to-date of exchanges. The third floor of the spacious fireproof building has been taken over, affording ample room for all departments. Manager Flarity is supervising the installation of systems and equipment that will greatly facilitate the handling of the local office's large volume of business. The new location will be a very convenient one for exhibitors, as it is directly across the street from the Union Railway station and near the express office and the sub-postoffice.

Trade Showings of "Patria."

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Manager McGurty, of the Pittsburgh International exchange, has announced that five trade showings of the great new preparedness serial, "Patria," featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle, will be given in this territory prior to the release date, December 4. Arrangements have been made for showing the first three episodes in Pittsburgh, Erie, Altoona, Johnstown and Wheeling, W. Va. Invitations are to be issued within the next few days.

Samuel Lurie Buys the Alpha.

Sharon, Pa.—The Alpha theater, State and Porter streets, Sharon, Pa., was purchased recently by Samuel Lurie from Sebastian Herrmann. Mr. Lurie is a prominent business man of Sharon. The house will continue under the successful management of the Claffey Brothers.

Bijou Changes Hands.

Clarksburg, W. Va.—The Bijou theater, Clarksburg, W. Va., was sold recently by the Simeral Amusement Company to Charles L. Giles, a well-known business man and a newcomer in the exhibiting field.

BUFFALO NOTES.

Savoy's Attractive Lobby.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.—The plan of dispensing with all posters at the front of his house is proving a success for Jack Griswold, who conducts the Savoy theater in South Warren street, Syracuse. Instead of posters Mr. Griswold uses attractive photographs of his attractions and stars. The pictures are in neat gilt frames. The Savoy has been remodeled throughout and has one of the neatest lobbies in the state. Mr. Griswold has substituted features for a single-reel service and has advanced his price from five to ten cents.

Merlin A. Myers Dies.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Merlin A. Myers, president of the Myers Amusement Company, died recently at his home, 843 Front avenue, Buffalo. He had been ill for a year and a half. His company conducts the Happy Hour and Park moving picture theaters, this city, and formerly ran the Linden and Airovict theaters here. The Myers Company will continue, with Fred A. Cole of Rochester as general manager.

Archie Moses Resigns.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Archie Moses has resigned as traveling representative of the Fox Film, Syracuse.

Charles P. Gilmore Takes Over Gem.

Oswego, N. Y.—Charles P. Gilmore has taken over the Gem theater, Oswego. He also controls the Orpheum, Richardson and Hippodrome theaters of that city.

D. H. Tobias Buys Princess at Corning.

Corning, N. Y.—J. J. Kelly has sold the Princess theater, Corning, to D. H. Tobias.

With Local Exhibitors.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Manager Franklin of the Family picture theater, Buffalo, believes in giving his audiences a full measure of entertainment for their money. His latest feature was a ten-piece symphony orchestra in connection with "The Straight Way," in which Valeska Surratt was starred.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Emmett Cornell of the Echo theater, Syracuse, recently visited the Buffalo exchanges. Mr. Cornell also has the Butternut theater, Syracuse, and he is building a house in Phoenix, N. Y.

On Sending Back That Box of Reels

It Is Exhibitor's Failure to Do It That Causes the Trouble and Slow Managers Are a Hindrance to the Business.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—We're talking about it in Buffalo, too. The conscientious exhibitor in this neighborhood also has to suffer for the shortcomings of the man who is slow and doesn't send back that right film as soon as he should. Exchange men around here often are put to expense and—well, they don't compliment the slipshod methods of some theater managers in returning shows. Some exhibitors in this territory seem to follow the plan of letting their operators ship back the films. George doesn't always attend to it. The film is resting snugly in the booth when it ought to be on exhibition in some other town. The exhibitor who goes to bed without giving the shipment of his shows any thought at all is a handicap to the business.

"The exhibitor, in order to get service from the exchanges, must co-operate with them and return shows promptly, so the films can be inspected and reshipped," said one exchange man in this city. "In order that an exchange man can carry on his business successfully, he is obliged to keep down his overhead expenses.

"We cannot make money if we have to buy two prints because some shows aren't returned promptly. When the films are not shipped we can't book our shows close. If the businesslike methods were followed by all we could make more money and give better service. It is a fact that the exhibitor who is careless about shipping always kicks the hardest when he doesn't get his show.

"Incompetent operators or those who are conscientious but whose machines are in poor condition also add to our losses by tearing our films to pieces. Only yesterday we had fifty feet torn from one of our features.

"Buffalo exchange men are noted for sanity, sobriety and satisfactory service. How long can they maintain this favorable reputation, when the careless exhibitor flaunts his 'I should worry' slogan and holds up our shows?"

Syracuse Hippodrome Sold.

Syracuse, N. Y.—J. M. Schine has sold the Hippodrome moving picture theater, Syracuse, to James Greig of Toronto.

E. O. Weinberg Managing the Elmwood.

"A double feature program every night" is the slogan of E. O. Weinberg, who recently became manager of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo. Mr. Weinberg uses space on his program to invite his patrons to have their names placed on the Elmwood mailing list. He says, "We will gladly mail you the week's program in advance. Fill out the space below with your name and address."

Mr. Weinberg has a strong list of attractions for Thanksgiving week.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Olympic theater, Buffalo, is showing the thirteenth episode of "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

Pine Tree State Letter

From John P. Flanagan, 147 Park View Ave., Bangor, Maine.

Cut in Admission Helped Jinx.

BANGOR, ME.—The Palace theater, Exchange street, Bangor, which has been under the management of the Acme Amusement Co., John Goodwin, treasurer, with Earl Bowen as resident manager, is having its troubles. Sam Stern is running the house this week and then another manager will probably be secured. When first opened four years ago the Palace was a money maker, but in recent years theatrical patronage has not gone in that direction. By a queer turn of affairs, when a manager recently changed the price of admission from ten to five cents, the number of patrons dropped off so that the attendance was next to nothing.

Where Short Pictures Are Popular.

Bangor, Me.—Charles M. Stern, manager of the New England Universal exchange in Bangor, has just returned from an automobile trip through northern Maine and reports that although competition is keener among exchangemen now than ever before, he is finding plenty of business and has a growing list of satisfied customers.

It is his experience that exhibitors in the small towns of northern Maine want more two and three-reel pictures than of any other kind. In the little towns, one show a night is the rule and that means that if a person comes in on the third reel of a five-act picture, he is not going to see the whole of that picture and cannot get the story. With two and three reel shows, it is easier for him to get an idea of the play and what he does see is entire or nearly so. Because of the winter season starting, many houses have closed.

During his visits to Upper Maine, Mr. Stern frequently visits the northernmost exhibitor in the United States, if we leave out Alaska. He is Fred Hamilton, proprietor of the Gem theater at Fort Kent, Me. The snow is a foot deep up there now and the mercury has already been down to the zero mark, but the people are hustlers and appreciate the best in pictures. Mr. Hamilton uses partial Universal service.

New Keegan Theater Makes Good.

Keegan, Me.—The Wonderland theater, recently opened in this town by Frank Watson, reports a good business. Keegan is booming and indications are that the population will increase in the near future, as a pulp mill is to be built here soon to give work to hundreds.

New Theater in Caribou.

Caribou, Me.—P. Powers is building a fireproof moving picture theater in this town to accommodate 700 spectators. It will be a beautiful house, justifying Mr. Powers' reputation as one of the most progressive and up-to-date exhibitors in the state of Maine.

Ontario Changes Ticket Tax

Soldiers No Longer Have to Pay Amusement Ticket Tax Except for Sweethearts and Wives—Children May Also Be Exempted—What Tax Brings in—Sale of Ticket Rolls and the Selling Margin.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St. E., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—The soldiers belonging to Canada's Overseas Army are not now required to pay a war tax when they purchase tickets of admission to moving picture theaters and other houses of amusement within the Province of Ontario as a result of the passing of an Order-in-Council by the Ontario Government on November 18. Members of the expeditionary force, wearing their service uniforms, do not need to pay the amusement levy, which ranges from one to ten cents, according to the value of ticket purchased. The soldiers must continue to pay the war tax on tickets for sweethearts, and wives, however.

The Ontario Government has also intimated that it is considering the exemption of children in the matter of amusement war tax as the latter is an apparent financial handicap to many of the kiddies.

Hon. T. G. McGarry, provincial treasurer, has estimated that the exemption of overseas soldiers will cost the Province about $25,000 per year. Incidentally the whole Amusement Tax is expected to bring $600,000 to the Province in one year as the revenue from this source has averaged $50,000 per month during the four months since the enactment of the measure.

Ontario Has Gone Dry.

As Ontario has gone dry, Hon. Mr. McGarry anticipates that the tax on theatergoers will make up for the loss in revenue through the cancellation of saloon licenses.

No official word is yet forthcoming regarding the expected abolishment of the tickets for the amusement war tax, but it is a fact that all film exchanges have discontinued the sale of the ticket rolls because the Government saw fit to reduce the selling margin from 2½ to only 1 percent. The profit became so small that the exchanges decided that the handling of the rolls was not worth while.

The result has been that all exhibitors are required to apply direct to the Government at Toronto for large or small lots of tickets.

Ontario Universal Notes.

Toronto.—W. A. Bach of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Toronto, has announced that thirty-seven different exhibitors of Ontario are now booking Bluebird features.

Gerald Ruck, special Universal representative, has closed with Manager McLean of the Columbia theater, the new house at St. Thomas, Ontario, to book Bluebird, Red Feather and Universal releases. This is particularly interesting because the new house was, in "wet" days, the Columbia hotel.

The Publicity Service Department of the Canadian Universal devoted its energies during the month of November in the circularizing of the trade with regard to the introduction of the new serial, "Purple Mask," in which Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are featured. During the month of December the campaign for this serial will be restricted to newspaper advertising, while Bach has lined up 800 moving picture fans around Ontario to ask the managers of their favored theaters to book the serial. Bach reports good results already.

The King George theater, Bloor and Bathurst streets, Toronto, has forsaken its patriotic name. It has become the Bluebird theater.

Censor's Irritating Lack of Humanity.

Toronto, Ont.—A sudden and belated move on the part of the Ontario Board of Censors with regard to the title of a five-reel Vitagraph feature caused considerable inconvenience in Toronto recently. The subject in question was "The Country God Forgot." The feature had been censored and passed and was booked for presentation at The Strand theater. On the morning of the first day of its release the Censor Board notified W. C. Gookin, Canadian Vitagraph manager, to change the title of the picture, as the wording was considered blasphemous. It was necessary to recall the picture and Manager Marvin of the Strand theater substituted with Pathe's "The Light That Failed," after all newspapers had carried large advertisements for the Vitagraph play.

The new name of the Vitagraph release will be "The Forgotten Country."

Hearst Films Not Barred.

Toronto, Ont.—Although all Hearst newspapers have been barred from Canada by the Federal Government for the duration of the war, the Hearst film releases may be booked in the Province of Ontario, according to an announcement made by the Ontario Board of Censors the other day. The so-called Hearst films are marketed by the International Film Service, Inc.

Mention is made of this fact because of many rumors in Toronto and elsewhere to the contrary. The first run of the Beatrice Fairfax serial has been booked by Toronto's newest large theater, The Regent. The story accompanying this serial is being printed in The Toronto Daily Star. The booking of International films in Canada is handled by the Paramount Company, 12 Queen street east, Toronto.

Toronto I. A. T. E. E. a 90 Per Cent. Organization.

Toronto, Ont.—C. A. McMahon, chief operator at Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, and head of Local 173, I. A. T. S. E., reports that the Toronto local is now a 90 per cent. organization, the membership being at its highest peak at present. The books of the union show an active membership of 137 operators, in spite of the number of operators who have enlisted in the army.

Universal Camera Co. Opens Branch.

Toronto, Ont.—The Universal Camera Company, Chicago, has established a branch in Toronto with Len. H. Roos, 20 Alice street, in charge. The Canadian branch is to be known as The Adanac Films, Limited. Mr. Roos is confining his activities to commercial work, specializing on titles.

Perkins Electric Opens New Branch.

Toronto, Ont.—The Perkins Electric Company, exclusive Canadian distributors for Powers and Simplex projection machines and Minuso gold fibre screens, now have branches in three Canadian cities—Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg—the office in the latter city having been opened recently at 217 McDermot avenue. The head office of the company is located at Montreal.

Regent Theater's Topical.

Toronto, Ont.—The second Toronto theater to inaugurate its own topical news weekly is the new Regent theater. The outside work in connection with this reel is being handled by W. James, a local camera man and press photographer, in conjunction with The Daily News. After its first run of three days at the Regent, the reel is released.

Warsaw's Beautiful New Theater

The New Widaman-McDonald Theater Is to Be Primarily a Picture House, but Has an Ample Stage—Some of Its Safety First Ideas—Will Seat 800 Persons in Comfort—Tom Gilliam Is the Manager.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis.

WARSAW, Ind.—The new Widaman-McDonald theater, Warsaw's beautiful motion picture house, at the corner of Center and Indiana streets, was formally opened Wednesday, November 15, and made a splendid impression on admirers of the film drama. Four shows were given, two in the afternoon and two in the evening, and the house was filled at each show. Everybody seemed pleased.

The new building is a fine improvement for the city and stands as a monument to the enterprise of the public spirited builders, Messrs. Widaman and McDonald. Persons who attended the opening say the new house includes everything that is needed to make it complete. The needs of the patrons are well cared for, especially along the lines of safety and convenience. There is no danger from fire, owing to the fireproof construction of the building and the adequate fire escapes; the ventilation is good, the air inside being constantly changed by automatic ventilators; and the house is comfortably heated by steam.

Tom Gilliam, formerly of Warsaw, who for the last several years has been employed by a film company in Chicago, has been engaged as manager.

The theater occupies the north half of the fine new building, and is connected with Center and Indiana streets by a spacious lobby. The walls and floor of the lobby have been beautifully decorated, giving a most attractive appearance.

Prettily decorated walls, handsome light chandeliers, floors carpeted with heavy Wilton carpet, fine comfortable opera seats and a stage with its beautiful scenery are features that make the interior of the place rank with the best theaters in the country. The house will seat about 800 people. The floors are elevated and the seats are so arranged that there is not a place in the entire house from which the whole stage will not be in full view.

In the construction of the theater the idea of "safety first" was kept constantly in mind. The place is as near fireproof as possible. Pyrona fireproof doors are hung at all openings. These doors, although having the appearance of the ordinary wooden door, have a lining of asbestos which make them absolutely secure against fire. People in the theater are protected against any fire that might start on the stage by an asbestos curtain with the additional protection of a water fire curtain. In case of a fire the entire stage can immediately be flooded. Steel doors, which are built to close automatically in case of fire, protect all other openings leading between the stage and the main part of the theater. A spacious fire escape gives adequate protection to the upper floor. All danger from film fire is eliminated by placing the picture machines in a fire proof room outside the theater building.

Although it is the intention of the management to make the new playhouse primarily a moving picture house, the stage if of sufficient size to stage the country's greatest productions. Below the stage are finely equipped dressing rooms, that may be used for home talent productions and the like.

Two motor driven picture machines have been installed.

Good music is to be made a special feature at the new theater. A fine motion picture house pipe organ, with thirty-five effects and 315 pipes, has been installed. Bur Maish a well known musician of Warsaw, has been engaged to play the instrument.

Preston Grubbs to Open Picture House.

Jeffersonville, Ind.—Preston Grubbs, proprietor and manager of the Star theater, has announced that he will close the theater after December 1, and will open a first class moving picture show on Court avenue, near the interurban station.

Family Theater in Deep Water.

Elkhart, Ind.—The Family theater, 421 South Main street, was placed in receivership last week on petition of James Bouras, partner of Peter Sarantos, who also demands an accounting. William Ormsby, of the Orpheum, was appointed receiver by Judge Harman and furnished a bond of $1,000.

Earle Metcalfe Here on Visit.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Earle Metcalfe visited with old friends in this city last week. It was his first visit to Indianapolis in six years. During his stay he appeared at several of the local photoplay houses and related some of his experiences as a player.

Mr. Metcalfe went from Indianapolis o Detroit, where he will appear in vaudeville for a few weeks before returning to his home in New York.

General Film Co., of Maine, Files Papers.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The General Film Company, of Maine, has filed papers with the secretary of state announcing that $19,600 of its capital stock of $1,000,000 is to be represented in Indiana.

Manager Holah Announces Formal Opening

Cincinnati International Service Will Release "Myra" Serial Locally At Once—One Feature a Week Present Policy.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 1st National Bank., Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—The formal opening of the new office of the International Film Service in Cincinnati was announced by Manager C. E. Holah through advertisements in the daily papers. An imposing string of productions is ready for release, although some of them will not appear for some time, as the company, it is understood, plans to release only one feature a week. The new International serial, "The Mysteries of Myra," will be booked in this territory at once, however, and judging from reports from exhibitors in the northern part of the state, will take high rank among the successful releases of this character. Arrangements are under way for connection with a downtown theater in Cincinnati which will have the first-run privilege for International films.

Manager Fined for Letting 'Em Stand.

Cincinnati, O.—Theater proprietors may very well join in the complaint which is now being made by many lines of business, to the effect that there is too much prosperity on hand to be handled easily, after what happened recently to John Popp, proprietor of the Main, at 1439 Main street. The Main is a popular house, with a thickly-inhabited district to draw upon for business, and big houses are the rule. In order to accommodate patrons the management has now and then made concessions in the matter of admitting people, but Mr. Popp has decided that he will have to adhere strictly to cold, hard rules, hereafter. The reason is that he was fined $25 and costs in the municipal court on the charge of allowing people to stand in the aisles, while another charge, of allowing the exits to be blocked with baby carriages, was dismissed. It is a clear case of too much prosperity, Mr. Popp admits.

Luke McLuke Writes "Whozoo" to Save Zoo.

Cincinnati, O.—The "Save the Zoo" campaign is to have the benefit of a moving-picture production based on a scenario written by one of the country's most popular humorists, the famous Luke McLuke, a local man. The scenario is called "Whozoo?" and is said to be a fine example of "McLuke" humor turned to the purposes of the film. This is the means adopted by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to aid the Zoo project, and the film, which is now in course of making, will be shown all through Southern Ohio for the benefit of the Zoo fund. A day at the Chamber of Commerce has also been set apart for the Exhibitors' League, on which they are to present "stunts," and receipts at the members' houses on that day will be divided with the Zoo. On the whole, it is probable that the exhibitors will manage to get together one of the largest donations received from any one organization in the Chamber of Commerce.

Local Mutual to Have Better Quarters.

Cincinnati, O.—The Mutual Film Co. is making arrangements for substantial increases in its local branch, having taken a lease on the building at 224 East Seventh street, a block from its present quarters. It will occupy the whole structure, which will give it a great deal more space than it has available at 111 East Seventh street, where it is now located. Possession will be given in a short time, and Manager Floyd Lewis is planning an arrangement of the space which will make it possible to handle business much more expeditiously than is now the case.

Mayor Livingston Bans "Unborn."

Newport, Ky—Mayor A. J. Livingston has forbidden the management of the Strand theater, on Monmouth street, to proceed with arrangements to exhibit the much-discussed picture, "The Unborn," which was booked for exhibition at the house named recently. According to the mayor's letter, "the advertisements themselves were sufficient to condemn the picture," which accordingly will not be shown in Newport. "The Unborn" has been shown all over Ohio, with the approval of the Ohio Board of Censors.

Tables Sunday Closing Petition.

Canton, Ohio.—A petition circulated by the W. C. T. U. for the purpose of securing Sunday closing of moving-picture shows, with 1,800 signatures, was recently presented to the city council for action accordingly, but the council at once decided that it had no jurisdiction in the matter, and the petition was filed. An opinion was heard from the city solicitor to the effect that moving-picture exhibitions are "theatrical performances" under the old Ohio statute which has been invoked in some instances, and he declared that any citizen can take steps to have such exhibitions stopped. The council refused to see the propriety of taking any steps, however, several members pointing out that many church members attend Sunday moving-picture shows as a matter of course, and that there appeared to be no public demand for the closing of the shows.

Cleveland News Letter

By Herbert Peters, Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, O.

Enjoins Musicians' Union.

CLEVELAND, O.—Charles Pappas, proprietor of the Milo theater, Miles avenue and East 100th street, is the latest Cleveland picture man to see fit to clash with the Picture Machine Operators' Union. Pappas, through Attorney Benjamin J. Sawyer, secured an injunction in the court of common pleas, November 14, restraining the Cleveland Federation of Labor and the Theatrical State Employees' and Musicians' Unions from circulating cards reciting that the Milo theater does not employ union labor. Judge Levine granted the injunction after hearing arguments of counsel for two days.

Pappas operates his own picture machine and has done so since the clash with the operators several months ago, when a new wage agreement granting an increase was signed by many theaters. The proprietors of about a dozen local theaters are operating their own machines.

The Lucier theater in Lakewood obtained a similar injunction a few weeks ago.

Screen Club Holds Smoker.

Cleveland, O.—The first annual smoker of the Cleveland Screen club was held the night of November 14, in the auditorium of the Elks' club. Chorus girls, vaudeville acts, comedians and cabaret maids from the Hippodrome, Miles, Empire, Star and other local theaters contributed the entertainment, which kept the crowd lively until well toward morning.

The entertainment program was arranged by George Erdman, president of the Screen club; Phil Isaac of the Empire, Manager Royal of the Hippodrome, Manager Drew of the Star, and George Cole of the Cleveland Leader.

The Screen club is now planning a banquet New Year's Eve.

Charity Day a Week Till Xmas.

Cleveland, O.—The Alhambra theater and the New Mall theater are to have a "charity day" as a regular feature each week between now and Christmas. Children will be admitted without charge on that day, but will be asked to bring a gift of food, toys or clothing for distribution to other children through the Associated Charities. The "charity days" have not yet been designated.

Reserve Proposes to Resume.

Cleveland, O.—According to M. E. Beckwith of the Reserve Photo Plays Company, that corporation is likely to resume productions of comedies in the near future. A stockholders' meeting was held November 18 to complete definite plans for the future of the company. The new studio on the sixth floor of the Wilshire building is still being maintained, but is little used.

DETROIT NOTES.

Plan Two Large Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—Wadlow & Wilkinson, owners of the Virginia Park theater, Detroit, not only will build a new house where this theater now stands, but they also plan a large theater, seating about 2,000, at Seward and Twelfth streets. Plans are now being drawn for both houses.

New Houses to Open.

Detroit, Mich.—The new Del-The theater, Mack and Holcom, Detroit, is scheduled to open about December 9th. It accommodates 1,100. The new Rialto, Gratiot and Mt. Elliott avenues, will open about December 18th.

Many Detroit Business Changes

Several Local Exchanges Have New Managers on Account of Resignations—City Will Miss Several of Those Who Have Led in Good-of-the-Business Work in this Place—Guy S. Trask Was President of Three Active Clubs.

By Leslie Smith, 402 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The past ten days have seen more changes in the management of the Detroit film exchanges than ever before. Those who resigned did so for the reason that they are making changes which they believe to be for their best interests. Some of the men have been active in the uplift of the local industry and their leaving is badly felt. Its does seem too bad that the managers of film exchanges can't stay longer, but then it's a "moving" business.

Guy S. Trask Leaves Local Mutual.

Guy S. Trask, for the past two years manager of the Detroit office of the Mutual, tendered his resignation, taking effect on Saturday, Nov. 18. During his administration the business developed to that stage where Detroit stood first of all the Mutual offices in the United States. Mr. Trask was well liked in Michigan. He was president of the Reel Fellows, Screen and F-I-L-M Clubs of Detroit, and was the man who made plans for a film building in Detroit. No announcement is ready as to his future connection. He left for New York on Nov. 21 to confer with a number of the New York producing companies. We certainly hope to see Mr. Trask back in the fold.

A. I. Shapiro Goes to Buffalo.

A. I. Shapiro, manager of the Triangle exchange in Detroit, has tendered his resignation to take effect the first of December. He has been in charge at the Triangle for the past eight months, and was previously manager of the Fox exchange in Detroit previous to which time he traveled New York state for Fox. He is resigning to manage the Buffalo exchange which will be opened at once by Lew Rogers. Mr. Rogers was with the Fox Film Corporation for eight years, and resigned to handle big features in New York state, outside of New York City. He will open offices in New York and Buffalo. Mr. Shapiro is getting a larger salary, and believes he has a better opportunity to get ahead. No successor has yet been appointed. We will certainly be sorry to see Shapiro leave us.

Louis Nathan Goes on Road.

Louis Nathan, manager of the K-E-S-E exchange, Peter Smith building, Detroit, has resigned to go on the road in Michigan. He is succeeded by W. H. Irvine, formerly at the New York office of George Kleine. Mr. Nathan came to Detroit about four months ago from Chicago. He will spend a part of each month at Detroit, assisting Mr. Irvine.

Dave Prince to Manage Local General.

E. M. Ames, for the past six months manager of the General Film exchange in Detroit, has resigned and has returned to New York City, his home. Mr. Ames succeeded A. J. Gilligham as manager in Detroit, having come from the New York office of the General. He is succeeded by Dave Prince, formerly manager at the company's office in Dallas, Texas.

Harry Dull Heeds International.

R. A. Von der Goltz has resigned as manager of the Detroit office of the International Film Service, and is succeeded by Harry Dull.

W. A. Ward to Manage Art Drama.

W. A. Ward, manager of the Detroit office of the Unicorn Film Service, 183 East Jefferson avenue, has resigned to become manager of the Detroit office of the Tri-State Film exchange, which controls the Art Drama productions in Michigan. Art W. Blankmeyer, president and general manager of the company, expects to have Detroit offices established by the end of the month.

Geo. J. DeButte Appointed Manager.

George J. DeButte, for the past five years at the Detroit office of the Mutual as assistant and formerly assistant manager at Toledo, has been appointed manager at Detroit, succeeding Mr. Trask. J. C. Mack, formerly manager of the Toledo office, takes the assistant managership at Detroit.

"War Brides" Opens in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—"War Brides" opened at the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, Sunday, Nov. 19, to tremendous business. In this connection it might be noted that Detroit was the second city in America to get "War Brides," being preceded by New York, where it is still showing at two-dollar prices. Harry I. Garson, who controls the Michigan rights to the Brenon productions, plans to put "War Brides" on the road as a traveling production, playing it on a percentage basis, and getting top admission prices. It will likely run from three to four weeks at the Broadway-Strand, after which it will play a week at the Liberty theater, Detroit, for a full week. The local newspapers spoke of "War Brides" as being even greater than the "Birth of a Nation."

Program Notes in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—John H. Kunsky has taken the first-run franchise in Detroit for World Film productions, and will show them at his downtown theaters, starting the first of the year. He has the option of showing them at the Liberty, Washington or New Madison. The latter house will not be completed before the middle of February, according to the present outlook. Mr. Kunsky still holds the first-run franchise on Greater Vitagraph productions. The week of Nov. 12, Samuel Dembow, manager of the Detroit World exchange, had two downtown theaters in Detroit showing the first-run World—the Broadway-Strand with "Bought and Paid For," and the Liberty, with "The Hidden Scar."

The first-run Metro franchise has been placed with the Majestic theater, Detroit, same becoming effective the first of January. Both the Metro Film Co. and M. W. McGee, manager of the Majestic, confirm the report. "Metro pictures will be shown in conjunction with our other pictures from other companies," said Mr. McGee. "We have added the program without disturbing our other booking arrangements."

Club Hears of New Film Building.

Detroit, Mich.—The F-I-L-M Club of Detroit at its regular meeting, Nov. 16th, listened to an address by Professor Colton of the National Safety First Society. He emphasized the great importance of taking every precaution in the handling of film, inspecting it, etc. His advice was timely and valuable. At this meeting the proposed film building was also discussed. It is definitely settled that the building will be erected on East Elizabeth street, near John R street, adjoining the Joseph Mack building. It will be ten stories high, fireproof and constructed absolutely in accordance with the requirements of the city ordinance. Work will start at once and same will be completed early in the spring. This is indeed good news to the exhibitors of Detroit and Michigan, as it will greatly facilitate their making calls.

Saenger Reunion at Shreveport

New Orleans Day Is Celebrated at Fair Grounds by Visit of 250 Saenger Forces —Speeches by Mayor Behrman and Other Notabilities—Some of the Prominent Picture Business People Who Were Present.

By N. E Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The reunion of the working forces of the Saenger Amusement Company at the Shreveport Fair Grounds, Sunday, November 5, was one of the feature events of the celebration of "New Orleans Day." The Saenger interests instructed their forces in Texarkana, Monroe, Alexandria and New Orleans to report at headquarters in Shreveport, and accordingly, nearly 250 men and women assembled at the Majestic theater.

Headed by E. V. Richards, general manager, the Saenger employees formed in line on reaching the Fair Grounds and marched through the midway and along the different avenues, stopping at the Coliseum, where a delightful repast was served. The employees were guests of the heads of the firm, Julian and A. D. Saenger, who spared no expense in making the Saenger celebration the great success recorded.

Al. G. Shear, representing the New Orleans office of the Consolidated, was toastmaster, and among those to briefly address the Saenger forces were Mayor Behrman of New Orleans, Mayor Ford of Shreveport, Commissioner Harold W. Newman of New Orleans, and "Ned" Rightor, also of New Orleans, grand exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In his talk to the Saenger forces, Mayor Behrman said he was especially gratified at the privilege to address the little army of Saenger employees. "I am doubly pleased with the honor," said the mayor, "for we are preparing to give you people a warm welcome when the Strand theater, being built by the Saenger interests at Baronne and Gravier streets, is opened about the middle of February. You are building a great theater there and I am sure the people of New Orleans will be glad to number you one of them."

The novel plan of bringing the Saenger forces to Shreveport to attend the fair and the family reunion attracted much attention at the fair grounds. The delegations from Texarkana was headed by Arthur Hardin, manager of the Saenger interests in that city; Park Moore represented the Monroe delegation, with J. E. Manning at the head of the Alexandria organization. Miss Eva Vernon, another of the popular managers engaged by the Saenger interests, also came to Shreveport to take part. The New Orleans-Saenger organization was represented by Commissioner Newman and Emile V. Stier, who will direct the company's publicity in New Orleans. The party included 250 men and women employed by Saenger Amusement Company.

The closing event at the hall was the taking of a motion picture of the Saengers, Mr. Richards, D L. Cornelius, assistant general manager; Mayor Behrman, Mayor Ford, Commissioner Newman, Mr. Rightor, James A. Robin, Walker Ross, Albertus Koch, Thomas McDermott and others of New Orleans. The picture was made as the New Orleans officials and the Saenger employees were leaving the Coliseum. This picture will be shown here in the Majestic theater and also will be used at the opening of the Saenger's Strand theater in New Orleans about the middle of February.

Harry M. Owens Heads Triangle Exchange.

New Orleans, La.—Harry M. Owens, of Atlanta, Ga., has taken charge of the local Triangle film exchange and has been busy for the past few days making the acquaintance of the exhibitors and becoming familiar with the details of the office.

A. W. Goff Hints at New Departures.

New Orleans, La.—A. W. Goff, of the New York offices of the Greater Vitagraph company, was a visitor here recently and spent the day going over the local situation with Manager Steinson. The Greater Vitagraph New Orelans territory has lately been largely increased by the addition of Mississippi and parts of other states, and the addition compels a lot of clerical work in getting it down to the usual smooth manner of conducting Vitagraph business. Office politics in the Vitagraph camp is the most unpopular form of amusement that can attract the attention of an aspiring employe. Merit is the only recognized standard for promotion, and Mr. Goff declares that he never allows a deserving man's antecedents to interfere with his advancement. Great change affecting the public's direct interest in photoplays are under contemplation, declares Mr. Goff.

Nat Ehrlick to Manage Isis.

New Orleans, La.—Nat Ehrlick, who since the establishment of the Triangle film exchange in this city has been its manager, has resigned to take over the management of the Isis theater, which has been without an experienced head since F. A. Blankenship resigned some weeks ago to ultimately become connected with Boehringer Amusement Company. Manager Ehrlick is the dean of the motion pictuee exchange men of New Orleans, having been connected with the film business for the past ten years. He has a host of friends in this section of the country, and is an expert showman. He doubtless will keep the Isis theater up to the high standard at which it was maintained under the Blankenship management, and that means that it is the best suburban theater in the city. He believes in the personal equation in the conduct of a neighborhood theater, and he will see to it that all of his patrons have the very best of treatment.

Nat Ehrlick.

College Theater Closes.

New Orleans, La.—The College theater, one of the prettiest and best appointed theaters on St. Charles street, which is close to the downtown quarter, has been closed by Manager Billiet, and the equipment is being sold. Ill health is the prime cause for the move, and unsatisfactory service added its quoto until the final determination to close was made.

Pushing Work on New Strand.

New Orleans, La.—So anxious are the builders of the Strand theater to push their house to completion that a night shift of steel workers is to be installed in the hope of gaing valuable time. This is almost an unprecedented move in building circles in this section for the people have that happy faculty of never allowing Old Father Time to chase them around very much. It is the expectation to make double speed by the employment of a night shift in the steel construction.

Atlanta News Letter

Criterion Starts Open Booking.

ATLANTA, GA.—A wide-open-door policy is this week announced by the Criterion theater.

The Criterion management state that from now on it will be wedded to no one service. On the other hand, it will strive to select the highest class attraction that all the services can offer. In this way it believes that it can furnish its great patronage with entertainments every day in the year that the patrons will really appreciate.

The Criterion theater opened its doors on its first Sunday show when the Atlanta lodge of Elks gave the second of a series of benefits for the purpose of raising a Christmas charity fund to be distributed among the poor of Atlanta.

Sig Samuels, owner, and Willard C. Patterson, manager of the theater are Elks, and for this reason they consented to open their theater Sunday.

J. R. Simpson Goes to Southern Paramount.

Atlanta, Ga.—John R. Simpson, Jr., formerly connected with the Central Bank and Trust Company, of Atlanta, has joined the Southern Paramount Company, in capacity of manager of the Strand Film Company, handling special features booked in the South.

Bellwood Benefit for Strikers.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Bellwood theater was open Sunday afternoon and night. The proceeds were used as a relief fund for the striking linemen and carmen of the Georgia Railway and Power company.

A committee of strikers were in charge and acted as ushers. No admission was charged, but all who entered gave liberally to the fund to buy coal, clothing and food for the strikers' families in Atlanta.

"Less Than the Dust" at the Criterion.

Atlanta, Ga.—The first showing of the Artcraft Corporation's productions in Atlanta will be "Less Than the Dust," at the Criterion theater, November 29th.

Vaudette Had Lawyer Guests.

Atlanta, Ga.—Members of the Atlanta Bar Association and law students of Atlanta were guests of the Vaudette theater at the first public showing in Atlanta of "And the Law Says" at the Vaudette theater Sunday afternoon.

H. F. Tucker Managing Local G. F.

Atlanta, Ga.—H. F. Tucker, formerly manager of the Jacksonville, Florida, office, has been appointed manager of the Atlanta office of the General Film, succeeding Mr. C. C. Ezell, who returns to Dallas, Texas, for the same company.

To Remodel the Strand.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Strand theater will be remodeled on the inside within the next few days. Preparations are being made to repaint and redecorate the house, and the lobby will be considerably brightened. The Strand is one of the most magnetic and attractive motion picture theaters in Dixie.

Mrs. Vail With Paramount Publicity Department.

Atlanta, Ga.—Mrs. Grace Wyndon Vail has joined the publicity department of the Southern Paramount Company, Atlanta. Mrs. Vail is one of the best-known publicity women in the United States.

Charley Kessnick, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, has returned from a trip over his territory.

Harry Groening Heads Atlanta Loew Interests.

Atlanta, Ga.—Harry Groening, who has been manager of the Loew house in St.

Paul, has been in Atlanta since the reopening of the Grand theater, and announcement is now made that Mr. Groening will be permanently in charge of the Loew interests in Atlanta. Mr. Groening will move his family to this city.

KENTUCKY NOTES.

A Good Run of Business.

Louisville, Ky.—Fine open weather so far this fall has been responsible for steady and large attendances at the down town theaters, and Sunday night business has been so good that standing room has been about all that the theaters have had to offer on Sunday for the past few weeks. Matinee and week-day evening performances have also brought better attendances than usual, and the exhibitors are rapidly making up for the quiet period during the excessively hot summer just passed through. Houses out in the state are also getting a good run of business in most cases. It is a question in the minds of some of the small-town exhibitors whether or not the returning skating rink craze will affect business to any extent, but at the most it will be for a very short time, as this form of amusement generally palls after a few weeks.

Lexington's Strand Stock Deal

M. Switow's Interest in the Largest Kentucky Picture House Being Transferred to Colonial Amusement Company—Deal Will Not Change the Control of the House—Changes to Be Made in the Theater Building.

Ohio Valley News Service, Correspondent, 1104 Starks Building.

LEXINGTON, KY.—J. B. Elliott, president of the Colonial Amusement Company, has been made general manager of the Strand theater, owned by the Phoenix Amusement Company, pending the final transfer of the stock held by M. Switow of Louisville, president and general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, to the Colonial Amusement Company, negotiations for which have been in progress for some time. The stock of Mr. Switow, however, does not give the Colonial Amusement Company controlling interest in the Phoenix. Slaughter Sparks, active manager of the Strand, is to continue in that position. The Strand theater, built about eighteen months ago, is the largest seating house in the state.

Plans have been completed for a number of changes in the theater, whereby the seating capacity will be decreased, and the first floor capacity cut to 900. The new leather seats are to be placed 38 inches from back to back, instead of 30 inches as is now the case. New carpets are to be laid throughout the aisles, and the box office is to be placed on a line with the sidewalk, instead of between the entrance and exit doors of the foyer. A new screen and two Powers' 6-B machines are also to be installed. The heating facilities of the theater are also to be improved, and the present pipe organ is to be used but fifteen minutes during each hour, and orchestra furnishing all additional music. It is also planned to improve the film service.

It is reported that the Phoenix Amusement Company and the Colonial Amusement Company will retain their individuality, although Mr. Eliott will administer the policy of both concerns. The Colonial company also controls a string of theaters in other cities in the Blue-grass section.

Jackson, Tennessee, a Live Picture City

State's Fifth City Has Four Moving Picture Theaters of Importance—Furnish the Best Shows Obtainable.

By J. L. Kay, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

JACKSON, TENN.—Four picture theaters of importance are located in Jackson, the state's fifth largest city. The principal house is the Lyric, with a seating capacity of 1,000, running seven reels of pictures daily, with one vaudeville act, for ten cents. Triangle, Fox, Kleine-Edison, World-Brady, and the "Yellow Menace," "Shielding Shadow," "Girl From Frisco," and "Who's Guilty" series round out a liberal program service. D. L. Williamson is owner and manager of the Lyric.

The Elite theater is a house of 350 capacity, and runs the Mutual program exclusively for five cents admission. This house is open from 1:00 to 11:00 P. M., without stopping at meal time, as is the case in connection with a large part of the houses throughout the state, outside of the principal cities. The Princess seats about 400, and also runs from 1:00 to 11:00 P. M., using the Greater Vitagraph, Metro and Universal service. The Marlowe is a combination road show and picture house, of which Mr. Williamson is lessee and manager. The Jackson public is loyal to the pictures, and patronage is consistent.

Artcraft at Knickerbocker.

Nashville, Tenn.—The first of the new Mary Pickford Artcraft pictures, "Less Than the Dust," will make its appearance at the Knickerbocker on December 4, and will run for an entire week. The popularity of Little Mary in Nashville gives assurance that a week will be required to satisfy the public demands. Manager Wassaman has also booked "The Lass of the Lumberlands," Helen Holmes' big series, at the Crystal, his other Nashville house.

Alpine a Live Suburban House.

Nashville, Tenn.—One of the most enterprising suburban theaters is the Alpine, located on Jefferson street. This is one of the few suburban houses advertising its programs in the daily newspapers, and is well patronized when others fail to attract. Best second run features are shown at five cents, with comedies and special music.

Webster on Road for United.

Memphis, Tenn.—Daniel Webster, special representative of the United Film Service, is traveling out of the Memphis office, making the rounds of northern Mississippi in the interest of "The Yellow Menace," "Mutt & Jeff," and "Hans & Fritz."

Bijou has Weekly Feature Night.

Nashville, Tenn.—Friday night of each week is set aside at the Bijou theater as "Colored Society Night," at which time special feature pictures and a full orchestra are provided. The Bijou is probably the largest house in the South operated exclusively for negroes, and Manager Milton Starr is furnishing his patrons with high class pictures.

Majestic Signs With Fox.

Memphis, Tenn.—A contract has been closed by the Majestic theater to show the William Fox Super-features, which are also booking heavily at other points in the state. This house also played to capacity during the four days run of Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law."

New Theater in Grenada, Miss.

Grenada, Miss.—The Majestic theater was opened for business on November 22, as a combination playhouse and moving picture show. The new house is under the management of Sam Stein, but active supervision of the pictures has been placed in charge of Miss M. E. Rollins. Miss Rollins is an experienced theater manager, having operated the small Majestic at this point for some time.

New Loew House for Birmingham.

Birmingham, Ala.—Following closely upon the announcement of a $700,000 theater for Memphis comes advice that E. A. Schiller, of the Schiller Amusement Company, and Marcus Loew, of the Loew Circuit, are preparing to operate a new house in Birmingham, and arrangements have practically been completed for the construction of a theater. Local capital is understood to be interested in the project. It is proposed to make the Birmingham house a part of a circuit composed in part of Memphis, Birmingham and Atlanta. Mr. Schiller now operates the Bijou in Birmingham, as well as a number of other important theaters in the South and West.

New Company for Colored House.

Louisville.—The Paradise Amusement Company, with a capital stock of $400 has been incorporated to operate "The Paradise," a colored moving picture theater at 104 East Green street, which has just come into the hands of the present incorporators, who are: R. H. Jewell, A. P. Wilson, J. Jewell and J. Mitchell.

Brownie Theater Opened.

Middleboro, Ky.—The Brown Amusement Company, on Saturday, November 25, opened its new theater "The Brownie" at 1918 Cumberland avenue, upon which work has been pushed for several months. The new theater takes the place of the "Amuzu," which was closed on November 9, 1916, after a prosperous run of five years. The old building is being remodelled into a restaurant, it having outgrown its usefulness due to its small seating capacity. The new house is modern in every respect and a credit to the city.

Reopening of Columbia at Paris.

Paris, Ky.—The Columbia theater, closed for several weeks while being remodelled, has been completed, refurnished and was recently opened under the management of Charles Taggart, of Cynthiana, assisted by Harry Mitchell, formerly with the Paris Grand. The Brady production, featuring Gail Kane in "Paying the Price," was the opening feature.

Says the Price Might as Well Be 25 Cents.

Louisville, Ky.—It's just as easy to get fifteen and twenty-five cents as a nickel, according to the management of the Casino theater, which has raised prices, and which at present is creating enough interest to make people want to see the shows. According to Johnson Mussellman, connected with the management, it makes no difference whether it is a burn or an opera house, the people will come and pay the price if you can get them interested. Last week the theater put on "Doc" Foster's "Chinatown San Francisco & Barbary Coast" pictures, using several supes who were dressed as Orientals to attract attention in the lobby. The latter was decorated with lanterns, streamers, etc., to carry out the Chinatown idea, and the people paid the price. This week "Fighting in France" was shown, several men being dressed as French soldiers, and posed in the lobby where numerous guns, special scenery, etc., was used. In addition a phonograph was kept busy playing the martial strains of "The Marseillaise."

Kansas City Local Censors

City's Film Men Were Dreaming of Co-operation When Out of the Blue Sky Two Exhibitors Are Arrested—"Called in" Film and the Work of the Local Board—Lobby Displays Are Attracting Attention.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Kansas City has had more experience and information with reference to censorship the past week than in many moons before. And the net result is rather a puzzle—sort of a cross between exasperation that censorship exists anywhere, and uneasiness that even further defects in the present systems may develop.

A Plan for Co-operation.

Things were going along nicely last week, with Miss Mary Gray Peck, connected with the National Board of Review, talking to the Parent Teachers' Association, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Atheneum and other organizations, on the duty of women to encourage the better pictures, and the need of a plan to get the best juveniles before the public. The women took to the suggestion well, and Miss Peck received great encouragement. She took the position that it was not censorship that the picture field needed, which would merely eliminate a few pictures that certain people thought were unfit. The real need was for some agency to put into circulation, and secure support for, the pictures that were really good. Her's was a constructive plan. Hardly a plan, though, since she did not tell exactly how this encouragement was to be given. She talked before the Screen Club one evening, suggesting the advantage of a circuit on which a juvenile program might be sent out. She asked that the film men help to solve the question of getting such a program on a circuit.

Two Exhibitors Arrested.

But the pleasant feelings left by Miss Peck's visit were offset by the arrest of two exhibitors and two film men on charges of showing pictures that lacked the approval of the local censors. The recreation department of the board's public welfare had "called in" the picture "Purity" for review. It was shown without review. Thereupon, while the first showing was being made, November 19, the manager of the Maze theater, and Mr. Eisen, who had the state rights and was booking the picture, were arrested, charged with violating the ordinance. The next day Manager Mason of the Rialto and Manager Goldberg of the Federal Film Service, were arrested on a similar charge, for showing "Save Your Daughter" without review. These cases are pending.

The arrests, and the local agitation with reference to pictures, are culminations of a condition that has been simmering some time. Last week many women and men called the censors, complaining of the advertising of pictures, and asking if the pictures were really as bad as the ads. stated, and as the pictures displayed in the lobby would indicate. F. F. McClure, head of the recreation department, of course, answered that pictures shown were in practically every case innocuous, whatever the advertisements might promise.

The two arrests for failure to submit possibly questionable, so far as was known, pictures to the censors, are exceptions in Kansas City, for, according to Mr. McClure, head of the censoring department, the film exchanges are exceedingly punctilious in such matters. The trouble, he said, was chiefly from states rights people, who allege ignorance of the city regulations.

"Calling In" for Review.

The Kansas City censors have no facilities for censoring all the pictures shown. Therefore, they call in for review, only pictures on which questions have been raised by the Chicago, New York or Kansas boards. This is simple enough for the managers of exchanges who understand it, but leaves a chance for trouble for newcomers. Because of these occasional difficulties, and the apparent impossibility of avoiding trouble with state rights people now and then on account of their ignorance of local conditions, it is likely that more help will be given local censors, so that they can establish a practice of censoring everything. If this is done, the exhibitor need not trust to anybody but himself as to the possibility of interference from the board—he can always know whether the local board has aproved the picture. Otherwise, there is always the chance that the exhibitor may not be fully informed as to his position.

Board of Welfare and Lobby Displays

It is quite sure that the board of welfare will take action shortly with reference to lobby displays of a questionable nature, perhaps on the ground that they advertise pictures which are not shown on the screen. In this, the board will have the assistance of the vigilance committee of the Ad Club.

E. R. Pearson Leaves Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—E. R. Pearson, manager of the Vitagraph Film Company at Kansas City, announced that his resignation is effective at the convenience of the company at any date prior to December 1. Mr. Pearson has been very active as chairman of the executive committee of the Amusement Association of Kansas, having to do with censorship in Kansas, particularly pertaining to legislation looking to a repeal of the entire law. His leaving causes his resignation of that position as well as treasurer of the Kansas City Screen Club. Mr. Pearson expresses himself as willing to return to Kansas at any time during the anti-censorship campaign of the present session of the Kansas Legislature, which may be quite possible since he has taken a month's vacation and first real rest for six busy years in the film business.

He will resume a connection with the film business in a responsible position with another firm about January 1. To his many friends, both exhibitors and exchangemen, Mr. Pearson is exceedingly grateful for their splendid co-operation and valued friendship, and he proposes to keep forever fresh in his memory his years of service with the Vitagraph Company as one of the most pleasant periods of his life. He also hopes to have the pleasure of being of future service.

Mr. Pearson expects to call a meeting of the committee of the Amusement Association of Kansas before leaving Kansas City to take his new position, at which he hopes to settle the censorship situation favorably to all concerned, and he will go to Topeka to get things in as good shape as possible before his leaving.

W. C. Gookin, formerly manager of the Vitagraph branch at Toronto, Canada, who was sent to Omaha with the intention of starting a branch there, will instead become the new manager at the Kansas City branch.

The Historical Society's Use of Films

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Alamo theater, one of the finest suburban houses in Kansas City, Mo., was the scene November 17 of a unique moving picture show—the first presentation of "Two Girls and One Bonnet." This is the first of the pictures produced by the Pageant-Film Corporation of Kansas City in collaboration with the Missouri Valley Historical Society.

One of the unique features was that the admission was one dollar—and 1,100 people paid the dollar to see the five reels.

"We are going to push the moving picture as a phase of our work, both for collection of reels for our archives, and for arousing local interest," said one of the officers.

"Two Girls and One Bonnet" will be released through the Pageant-Film Corporation direct to exhibitors, usually in connection with plans of the Society for local historical work in special districts. It is expected that the display of this picture, for instance, that tells a story around a series of scenes near Kansas City, Mo., will stimulate other communities to dig up historical incidents and costumes, and gather data about their own districts. All of which will be advantageous to the plans for the Missouri Centennial in 1920. The society will meet in Kansas City shortly, to make further plans for this centennial, and representatives will be present from 114 counties which have centennial societies. Plans will include the showing of this picture, and the making of others.

The Pageant-Film Corporation gives, from its share of the earnings and not from the net earnings of the exhibitor, a proportion to the Missouri Valley Historical Society.

The Exhibitor and His Neighborhood

A Kansas City Picture Man Who Keeps in Close Touch with His Local Parent-Teacher Association—How It Works.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—W. A. Morris has bought the lease of the Barrymore, Thirty-ninth and Summit streets, and is now operating it. Mr. Morris is an old-timer in the business. He established the Eagle moving picture house at 507 Minnesota avenue, Kansas City, Kan., in 1910; in 1912 he moved the show to Central avenue, and sold it at a profit. He has been out of the business since.

Mr. Morris is catering to the Parent-Teachers' Association of his district of the city. He meets with the associations weekly, and talks over with them the pictures they would like to see run. They prepare a list, from which he makes selections. In return for this practice, the women of the associations are pledged to recommend the Barrymore, and to patronize it. And he is getting much good advertising from it.

Mr. Morris says that he finds no difficulty whatever in making up programs good from the exhibitor's point of view, from the lists supplied by the associations.

The Barrymore idea is being watched with interest, for the reason that most of the houses that draw from the same district cater to the older boys and girls and give big features. Some of the other exhibitors have said pointedly that they do not want the patronage of children; that they can fill their houses without the children. Mr. Morris goes on the theory that the children will lead the older folks into his house, if he can get them started coming.

Ambitious Springfield Censors

Want Mayor to Appoint Board of Three with Absolute Powers to Handle Both Theaters and Shows—Seem to Think Mayor and the City Council Unable to Cope with the Difficult Problem of Deciding on Such Matters.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—A board of censorship was asked for by the Springfield School Clubs Council. The proposed ordinance in itself was objectionable because it planned to regulate the construction and operation of theaters, usurping the powers of the city building inspector and the city electrician. As if this were not enough the movement had barely got under way when one of the women proposed that all Sunday moving picture shows in the city be prohibited.

Just what pictures the agitators had in mind did not appear at the first important meeting. Attorney Fitzgerald, for the exhibitors insisted that the authors of the ordinance should state specifically the immoral pictures that have been shown in Springfield. Twenty persons spoke for the censorship, but not one named a film nor attacked a Springfield theater. The most conspicious objection was made by Rev. Frank Walker Allen, pastor of the First Christian Church. "There is too much kissing," he said. "Boys and girls see it; then try it themselves." The producers were attacked by Rabbi Bloom of the North Fifth street temple who declared that the production "is in the hands of mercenary men who cater to the passions."

All three of the local papers, the Springfield News-Recorder, Illinois State Journal and Illinois State Register, have come to the aid of the moving picture men. These papers contend that in the first place the local situation does not warrant any movement for local censorship. Besides all are opposed to the "un-American" principal of censorship. The present city ordinances are adequate to prevent exhibition of immoral films.

What the Board Would Be.

The proposed ordinance provides a license fee of $10 a year. A board of three to review motion pictures is provided, the members of the board to serve without pay and to be appointed by the [illegible] of police. [illegible] Springfield is the mayor.

Applications for licenses shall, according to the provision of the ordinance, be submitted in duplicate to the mayor and the commissioner of public health and safety, and shall specify a variety of facts, among them the location of the theater, seating capacity, number of exits, width of aisles, size, location and kind of machine booth, number and location of toilets, provisions for ventilation and provisions for lighting.

Licenses of motion picture theaters may be revoked by the board, subject to the approval of the city council at its next meeting.

Board members shall have the power at all times to inspect motion picture theaters and pictures, and to censor and eliminate all films or portions thereof considered objectionable to good morals and public peace, the ordinance provides.

It is also provided that board members shall have power to make arrests for violation of the provisions of any portion of the motion picture ordinance. Penalty for violation of the ordinance shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $50 or not more than $100 for each offense.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Interesting Notes from Filmdom.

Wautoma, Wis.—The W. J. Durham Lumber Company is erecting a new opera house here.

Advisory Board for Northwest

Selecting New Board to Represent Northwest in Work of the National Association of the Industry—Local Exchange Managers, Supply Men and Producers Chosen—Secretary Elliott Will Tell Board What It Is to Do.

By John L. Johnston, 814 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. While Lee A. Ochs was in this city last Tuesday, November 14, with Thomas Furniss, also a member of the executive board of the National Association of the Industry, an advisory board to represent the Northwest was selected from the exchange managers, producers and supply men gathered at the Pathe exchange. J. F. Cubberley, manager Universal exchange, was appointed temporary chairman of the advisory committee and W. K. Howard, manager, Vitagraph exchange, secretary. Mr. Howard was instructed to write National Secretary Elliott to ascertain the duties of the advisory board and then "get busy."

New Mutual Manager—Other Changes.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Another change in a national corporation's local branch film exchange was recorded last Saturday when R. E. Bishop succeeded Walter H. Stafford as manager of the Mutual offices at 22 North Sixth street. This is the seventh change in national organization exchanges within the last four months here.

Mr. Bishop was formerly manager of the Mutual exchange in Escanaba, Mich., and previous to that with the General exchange of Cincinnati. Mr. Stafford, a brother-in-law of J. R. Freuler, came here over a year ago from the Chicago Mutual office and is expected to return there.

With the announcement of Mr. Bishop's arrival comes word that George Lee, formerly with the General exchange of Winnipeg, is to become assistant manager to Mr. Bishop, that A. E. Hardy succeeds J. J. Poitras as cashier and that Ira Mantzke becomes Twin City salesman.

J. F. Cubberley, Universal; W. K. Howard, Vitagraph, R. L. Hewitt, Unicorn; J. E. Friedman, Pathe; J. R. Levy, World; Harry Graham, Kleine, are the other managers who have taken new positions within the last four months.

"Crisis" Will Open in Minneapolis.

The Elliott-Sherman Film Corp. has announced "The Crisis" will be shown for the first time in the United States at the E. & S. Lyric theater, Minneapolis, in December—a distinct beat for the Mill City—and remain at that house indefinitely. Edward Brehaney, son of General Manager Brehaney of the Elliott-Sherman forces will have charge of the first show and following the opening week's run of "The Crisis" at the Lyric he will go to Chicago for the opening run at that metropolis. C. J. Bulliet will have charge of the publicity work for "The Crisis."

Minneapolis Exchange Notes.

The Vitagraph exchange broke all records for business during last week according to a statement issued by Manager W. K. Howard.

Manager Harry Graham of the K.E.S.E. exchange has booked the Edison feature "The Cossack's Whip" in the Lyric theater, Minneapolis, and Strand, St. Paul.

Manie Gottleib, manager, Favorite Feature Film Co. exchange returned from Des Moines last Saturday and has left for a business trip through Northern Minnesota.

Manager H. E. Friedman of the Pathe exchange has received numerous requests for bookings of "The Life of Our Saviour" special Pathe feature. He also booked five Pathe colored features, Gold Rooster plays and Luke comedies in Mrs. T. H. Swenson's Grand theater at Hastings, Minn., recently.

The Favorite Feature Film Co. has obtained territorial rights for the feature "The Libertine."

Following a week's visit with Manager J. A. Bachman of the local DeLuxe exchange Adolph Eisner of the Chicago headquarters left for Kansas City.

M. C. Fagan of the Monmouth Film Corp., New York, spent a day with Manager R. L. Hewitt of the Unicorn exchange talking about the "Grey Seal" serial.

Visitors in Minneapolis.

Among the visitors in Minneapolis last week were: Lee Ochs, New York; Thomas Furniss, Duluth; Tom Foster, Stanley, Wis.; Mrs. H. A. Starkey, LeSeuer, Minn.; Mrs. T. H. Swenson, Hastings, Minn.; Frank Nemec, St. Cloud, Minn.; J. W. Dudley, Buffalo, Minn.; Miss F. Brown, Alexandria, Minn.; M. C. Fagan, New York; Ed Buckley, Foley, Minn.; Forest Secor, Forest City, Iowa.

Seattle News Letter.

By S. J. Anderson, Benvenuto, East Seattle, Wash.

Pathe Office Notes.

SEATTLE, Wash.—Fred C. Quimby, Pathe's Northwest manager, called in his flying squadron this week, viz., William Rankin, E. H. Caston, and P. L. Carrol, for a conference. Plans were made to wind up the bookings on "The Shielding Shadow" so as to have a clean slate for Pathe's new serial, "The Pearl of the Army." Mr. Quimby tells us that eighty-five per cent. of the theaters in the territory were booked on "The Shielding Shadow," and that they expect to do better still on "The Pearl of the Army."

Pathe's road men out of Seattle, who have been making their trips in automobiles, have been compelled to abandon their machines on account of the bad weather.

Manager Makes Theater Pleasanter.

Seattle, Wash.—Mrs. Inge Carstens, manager of the Fremont theater, has resolved to give her patrons something to stay at their home theater for. She has just had a new Hope-Jones Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra installed, and has contracted for Paramount service. We predict that Fremont people will not spend much time at downtown theaters this winter.

Fire in H. A. Johnson's Supply Store.

Seattle, Wash.—Smoke pouring from the windows and doors of the rooms occupied by the Johnson Seating Company in the building at 1214 Fourth avenue, where Metro, World, Fox and the De Luxe Film have their offices, was the cause of a wild fifteen minutes spent by the film men. Mike Rosenberg, manager of De Luxe, was coming down the street when he saw the smoke coming from the windows above his rooms. He dashed in, grabbed a box of his most valuable film, told one of his men to get another, and ran with it out to the end of the alley back of the building. In the other offices there was a scramble for film and valuable papers, while two or three fire engines were called. Eventually it was discovered that there was very little fire to cause so much smoke. It was soon put out with little damage done in Mr. Johnson's place, and none in the film offices.

Seattle Personals.

Seattle, Wash.—R. L. Redlich, coast division manager for Fox, recently arrived in the city, bringing with him Harry Arthur as a new road man for the Seattle office.

Dr. P. Metcalfe, brother of G. A. Metcalfe, is to be connected with the Seattle branch of the Metcalfe supply house.

Guy Navarre, road man for Artcraft, is away on an extended tour of Eastern Washington, Idaho and Montana.

William Mead, road man for Triangle, recently completed a trip through Eastern Washington and has just left for the Oregon territory.

Visitors on film row this week were: J. J. Ungar, special representative for Metro; H. D. Naugle, Coast division manager, Vitagraph; E. Shainwold, Peoples theater, Portland, Oregon; H. T. Moore, Colonial theater, Tacoma; Ed. Dolan, Weir theater, Aberdeen; F. L. Stanwood, Gem theater, Wenatchee; I. L. Williams, Orpheum theater, Snohomish; W. A. Ayres, Sunnyside theater, Portland, Ore.; Carl McKee, Orepheum theater, Everett; C. D. Stickley, Concrete theater, Concrete, Wash.; J. E. Farrel, Colonial theater, Ellensburg; Miss Helen Bideler, Liberty theater, Ellensburg; Madame A. Paul, Lyric theater, Shelton; W. C. Smith, Scenograph, Gresham; Carl Knutsen, American theater, Bellingham; J. V. Rice, Dream theater, Chehalis; J. E. Ferguson, Wenatchee theater, Wenatchee.

Change in Paramount Office.

Seattle, Wash.—C. F. Hill, until this week advertising manager of the Paramount exchange, has been made chief clerk, while J. V. Lynn, of Portland, has taken his former position. Mr. Lynn has had practical experience in the exhibiting end of the motion picture game, as well as years of work as an "ad" man.

Strand Announces Change.

Seattle, Wash.—W. H. Smyth, of The Strand, announcs a change to Mutual star features. The Strand began the new program with Margarita Fischer in "The Pearl of Paradise." Chaplin comedies will also be shown.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES.

Louis Weiss Visits California.

San Francisco, Cal.—Louis Weiss, representing the Moral Uplift Society of America, was a recent visitor here to dispose of state rights in the latest production of this organization. When he started on his trip he did not intend to come to the Pacific Coast, but found the market in the West in better shape than he thought it would be and has sold rights in every state he has visited.

The Lessers Confer on Big Deals.

San Francisco, Cal.—Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Golden Gate Film exchange and All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., arrived here recently to confer with his brother Sol L. Lesser, who returned from New York a short time ago. Plans for booking "The Libertine," "War Brides" and other large productions controlled by Sol L. Lesser were carefully gone over.

Walter Preddey to Move.

San Francisco, Cal.—Walter Preddey, who conducts a large machine and supply business on Eddy street, is preparing to remove to much larger and better located quarters. A lease has been secured in a building now in course of erection at Leavenworth street and Golden Gate avenue, and it is anticipated that the move can be made some time in February. Quite a brisk machine business has been done of late by Mr. Preddey, some of the most noteworthy installations being the equipment of the Bay Station theater, Alameda, recently purchased by A. R. Oberle, and new equipment for White's theater, Fresno, Cal.

California Briefs.

Woodland, Cal.—The moving picture theater of Robert Tuft was destroyed by fire on November 13th.

Los Gatos, Cal.—The Strand theater, a new house with a seating capacity of about 1,000 has been opened by M. Black. Music is furnished by an orchestra.

Buying Shows at the Exchange

In San Francisco Where the Exchange Territory Is 600 Miles Long by 150 Miles Wide Seventy-five Per Cent. of the Exhibitors Visit the Exchanges Every Month and Fifty Per Cent. Come into Film Row Every Week.

T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Film exchange men who come to this territory from other parts of the country find that in many ways business is transacted along different lines than is the rule elsewhere. One of the features most widely commented upon is the close association of exhibitors with exchange managers. It is pointed out that in many sections of the country exhibitors but rarely visit the cities from which they secure their films and film exchange managers depend largely upon their traveling salesmen to keep exhibitors in touch with what the exchanges are doing many of them being personally acquainted with but a small proportion of the theater owners in their territory. It is asserted that in many places no more than fifteen per cent of the exhibitors make regular visits to the film exchanges and that in but few territories do more than fifty per cent of the exhibitors come to the distributing centers.

It is estimated that in the San Francisco field, which comprises a territory fully six hundred miles long and one hundred and fifty miles wide, at least seventy-five per cent of the exhibitors come to the metropolis once a month and that half of them are here once a week. The records kept by traveling men indicate that in nine cases out of ten their failure to find an exhibitor at place of business is because of the presence of the latter in San Francisco. Some of these make trips that would be considered excessively long in other territories. There is an exhibitor who makes almost weekly trips from Fresno, two hundred miles away, while several come from Sacramento, almost one hundred and fifty miles, and others make frequent trips from points up to three hundred miles distant.

In analyzing the reason for this a prominent exchange manager has decided that it is first the desire of the exhibitor in California to keep thoroughly abreast of the times, to make a screen examination of the larger productions before booking them, to keep in touch with the methods of successful local exhibitors and lastly, to enjoy the attractions of the Coast metropolis. It is also pointed out that these frequent trips are made possible to many by the magnificent system of highways radiating from San Francisco, which encourages automobile travel. Almost all who have houses within a radius of fifty miles call for and deliver the films booked by them.

Warner Film Attractions Moves.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Warner Film Attractions, which recently opened headquarters at 120 Golden Gate avenue, has removed to the Pacific building at Fourth and Market streets, where four large rooms on the fifth floor have been taken. These overlook the site of the magnificent California theater, now in course of erection, and are near the offices of a number of large film exchanges. Manager J. L. Warner has fitted up the new quarters in sumptuous style and is now ready to receive bookings for "The Crisis," the rights for which are controlled in this territory.

Western Poster Company to Move.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Western Poster Company, now located on Eddy street in what was formerly the heart of the film and supply district, has secured a lease on an entire one-story brick building on Golden Gate avenue, above Leavenworth, between the building of the General Film and the structure being erected for the Fox Film. These quarters will be occupied about the first of December and it is planned to make the store one of the largest in the entire country devoted exclusively to advertising for moving picture exhibitors. The building has a full basement for storage purposes and is well adapted for this business. Arthur Aronson will probably go East at an early date to get ideas for expanding the business of the firm.

New Home for Big Concern.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. O. Edmonds, manager of the far western interests of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, has made arrangements for taking space in the fine fireproof structure now in course of erection on Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth street, having signed a lease for quarters adjoining those selected by the Mutual. A fine basement will be provided here and portion of this will be fitted up as an exhibition room, where prospective customers may view anything released by this firm. The present quarters are entirely too small, but they will be made to serve the needs of this branch until the new home is ready for occupancy early next March.

Charles Klopot Enlarges Offices.

San Francisco, Cal.—Charles Klopot, who formerly shared space at 120 Golden Gate avenue with the Warner Film, has taken over the space recently vacated by the latter and is expanding the scope of his business. In addition to handling the large line of comedies and short releases owned by him he is entering the state rights field and is now negotiating for several large productions and desires to bid on still others.

Business Improving.

San Francisco, Cal.—That the moving picture business in this territory is steadily improving is the opinion of H. H. Hicks, manager of the local branch of the General Film. Mr. Hicks states that this concern is now doing the best volume of business of any time this year and that conditions seem to be getting more stable all the time.

Former Stage Comedians Please.

San Francisco, Cal.—Kolb & Dill, whose antics on the legitimate stage a few years ago were enjoyed by thousands and who have a reputation as comedians second to none in the West, are proving to be a decided drawing card in moving pictures, as far as this part of California is concerned. They were seen recently at the Empress theater in a "Peck of Pickles," one of their great stage successes, and Sid Grauman, manager of this vaudeville house made this feature the headliner of the bill. Crowded houses at every performance attested to the popularity of these actors in their home city.

Local Film's Private Presentation.

San Francisco, Cal.—Miss Lolita Perine gave a private presentation of her production "The Lure of Venus," in the Theater St. Francis following the regular performance on the evening of November 16th, this being witnessed by the press and by society folks around the Bay who took part in the production. The film was made in Marin county and has attracted wide attention through the prominence of some of those taking part in it and the discussion in regard to placing it on the market.

Local Censor Gets No Life Job

Portland, Oregon, Secretary of Municipal Film Inspectors Will Hold Position by Appointment and Not One Under Civil Service—Ruling of the City Attorney Who Has Disposed of the Examination for the Position.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland Oregon.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—The fear that the men on Film Row have had for the past few weeks that Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, might hold her job for life by virtue of municipal civil service has been dispelled. A day or two before the examination that would place the job under civil service was to take place, the city attorney ruled that the examination could not be held owing to the wording of the ordinance.

The censor ordinance says that the censor board shall consist of seven members who shall serve without pay, the secretary, however, to be one of the seven, the salary for this job being $90 a month. The city attorney held that the job was not a competitive one inasmuch as only an appointed member of the censor board could serve in the capacity and therefore that it did not come under civil service.

Mrs. Colwell indicated that the effort to put the job under civil service and make it permanent was none of her doings nor of the mayor's.

It seemed to film men, however, a scheme to put the present secretary in office for life. Under the city attorney's ruling she may now be deposed by a new administration. Mrs. Colwell said she did not believe a new mayor would take her job from her, however, because she believed that over two thirds of the film men in Portland were favorable to her and her work in cleaning up pictures.

H. H. Brownell, well-known cameraman and film expert, had also filed his application to take the examination and would have been Mrs. Colwell's competitor for the position.

Family Film Matinees.

Portland, Oregon.—A movement has been started by the Federated Clubs to hold family film matinees in selected theaters. Films that appeal to the whole family are shown and the matinee is not billed as a children's show. The program is worked out by a committee from the Federated Clubs and may be the regular program at the selected theater. It is aimed to show three reels of drama, two of comedy and two educational.

The movement on the part of the Federated Clubs has nothing to do with censorship. The Columbia Theater, showing "Less Than Dust" and the Union Avenue with a picked program were the first two theaters selected to try out the scheme.

Song Bird Accompaniment.

Portland, Oregon.—Manager John A. Jennings has enlisted the services of five Hartz Mountain canaries to aid the melodious Sunset organ in its interpretation of the pictures. The birds pick up the tunes of the instrument perfectly and their trills and runs have been the subject of much favorable comment by the audiences. The canaries show streaks of temperment like a prima donna, however, and Manager Jennings has to keep things exactly right or they don't sing.

License Stir in the Valley.

Portland, Oregon.—Geo. Bligh, of Salem, paid his respects to Film Row recently, and said the city council of his town had tried to raise his license fee to $250 a year. After the ordinance was passed Mr. Bligh prevailed upon them to reconsider and now the license is back to where it was before.

In Dallas, where there has been a stiff license fight, O. C. Smith of the Orpheum has succeeded in getting his license cut from $100 to $60 a year. Before the license fight started the fee had been $40.

Pickford is Again Star.

Portland, Oregon.—The People's Amusement Company has rechristened the Pickford theater the Star. This popular Washington street house had previously borne the name Star for many years. The renaming of the Star was done through a contest conducted by the company and 3,478 names suggested by the patrons of the company's two theaters.

Mutual Exchange Notes.

Portland, Oregon.—The Mutual exchange has been exceptionally busy during the past few weeks on the campaign connected with "The Lass of the Lumberlands" and Manager G. A. Reed is getting ready for the exploitation of "The Sequel to the Diamond from the Sky." Booker Hanson has now installed a lock on his door operated from the booking desk and only one person is allowed to enter the booking room at a time. Traveler A. S. Kirkpatrick is getting to be a champion serial salesman, says Manager Reed.

Pertinent Portland Briefs.

Portland, Oregon.—Joe Merrick, the genial Universal road man, was in Portland recently after a successful trip through Eastern Oregon.

Portland, Oregon.—E. C Wood, general manager of the American Photoplayer Sales Company, San Francisco, was a recent visitor.

McMinnville, Oregon.—C. L. Dagg, who recently purchased the Star theater, has made extensive alterations in the house, tearing out the balcony. The theater was closed for a week, re-opening November 18.

Portland, Oregon.—J. G. Sill, cameraman, has been exceptionally busy making copies of the "Pendleton Roundup." He has been developing at the rate of 12,000 feet a week for the past few weeks.

Emmett, Idaho.—C. D. Buckman opened the new Electric theater, November 8 with Mutual's "The Decoy." The Electric seats 450.

Portland, Oregon.—C. H. Feldman has come down from Seattle to work Portland territory for the G. F.

Goldendale, Wash.—Brooks and Camplin have put in a new operating booth at the Star theater, also installed a new machine.

Bend, Ore.—R. C. Rudow's new theater will open soon.

Prineville, Ore.—L. C. Morgan, who recently sold the Lyric, is going to Detroit, Mich.

Portland, Ore.—William Alexander, of Eugene, was a recent visitor in Portland, purchasing a new model projector from the Service Film Company for the Eugene Opera House.

Portland, Ore.—V. L. Levitt, Desert Film Company, Salt Lake, was a recent visitor in Portland. "Prospecting for business," said Mr. Levitt.

Visitors in Film Row.

Portland, Oregon.—Among the visitors on Film Row were Theodore Johnson, Idaho Amusement Co., Boise, Ida.; and Ernest Noble, millionaire wheat baron and large stock holder in the Boise Company; R. W. Bertleson, K. E. S. E. A. S. Fountain, Progressive M. P. Co.; Al Rosenberg, DeLuxe; J. J. Unger, Metro, San Francisco; C. J. Kerr, Metro, Seattle; H. K. Brinn, Paramount; Hugh Rennie and R. C. Montgomery, World; W. A. Mead, Triangle; E. R. Redlich, Fox; Frank L. Hudson, G. F., Seattle, and Fred Locher, new Seattle manager for International.

Sunday Closing Proponents Are Optimistic

Oregon's Old Law Lately Repealed Never Liked—Rest Day Men May Now Propose a Drastic Sunday Closing Law.

Portland, Oregon.—All is not yet safe for statewide Sunday opening. The repeal of the Sunday closing law at the election seems to have pleased Dr. G. L. Tufts, superintendent of the Weekly Rest Day League. Said Dr. Tufts at a church address a week after the election:

"The Weekly Rest Day League was never fully satisfied with the old statute. That organization has always advocated a more general and comprehensive measure. Such a proposition will be presented at the next session of the Legislature. One day of rest for both employer and employee will be the underlying principle of the legislation asked for in behalf of business men and workmen of all classes. It will be the aim to avoid all unjust discriminations and to obtain a sane and sensible enactment that will be in accord with the physiological laws of human nature and conserve the economic, social and moral welfare of the State."

Dr. Tufts' it will be remembered, was the man who tried to put over a Sunday closing law with the heading, "one day of rest in seven."

The moving picture men believe that the "discriminations" referred to by Dr. Tufts was that clause in the old law which permitted theaters to open while other amusements were closed and that Dr. Tufts now has a general amusement closing law to replace the old statute. The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association is urging exhibitors throughout the state to tell their views on the subject to the legislators in their districts. The decisive repeal of the old law should put a stop to Sunday closing legislation in Oregon.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

"Nation" Film With Good Orchestra.

Vancouver, B. C.—Basil S. Courtney, general manager of "The Birth of a Nation" in Canada, has arrived in Vancouver with the big picture, opening a two weeks' engagement at the Avenue theater, which the same film played three weeks somewhat less than a year ago. Very heavy business was done at the Empire theater in Penticton, B. C., where the picture was shown for the first time At Kelowna, B. C., the film had been booked at the Opera House, and there had been a large advance sale, but before the company arrived in town the theater burned, as noted in a recent issue of the World.

Mr. Courtney informed the World man that the twenty-piece orchestra with the picture this year is entirely new, and superior to the one carried last year, now boasting seven soloists in its personnel. The projection men are F. Odette and R. C. Buckley. At the conclusion of the Vancouver engagement Mr. Courtney will turn the show over to Robert McDowell, advance representative, who will pilot the picture eastward again. The company will make a jump from Winnipeg direct to Halifax, opening a two weeks' engagement there. This, Mr. Courtney states, is the longest jump ever made by a theatrical company in Canada.

Kean Gets His Whale.

Vancouver, B. C. Full of enthusiasm over his recent journey in search of a series of whaling pictures, A. D. Kean, the "cowboy photographer," has just returned to this city, after a highly exciting trip off Vancouver Island aboard the whaler "Gray." Many thrilling scenes were filmed on the trip, including the actual harpooning of a whale which was shot in close proximity to the boat, and the exciting time which followed, when the whaler was towed at breakneck speed for three hours before a second shot finally killed the monster.

The Grand at Cabri Burns.

Cabri, Sask.—The Grand theater here was destroyed by fire recently and building and contents are a total loss.

"Somme" Picture Now Approved

British Columbia Authorities Decide to Pass Big Battle Film Without Cuts—Influence of Other Parts of Canada Helped Convince Provincial Governor of Its Value—What the Picture Is Doing.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—After due and probably serious deliberation the powers that be in British Columbia finally decided to alter their original decision to condemn the official British government pictures of "The Battle of the Somme" unless a large amount was deleted, and the film has been approved and passed in its entirety.

Opening a week's engagement at the Globe theater in Vancouver, at 25 and 50 cents admission, the picture has done a phenomenal business, and up to the time this is written (late in the week) each night has witnessed large crowds in front of the house, waiting to gain admittance. All appear anxious to see the actual conditions under which friends and relatives are living in the trenches, and for Canadian audiences this picture will undoubtedly prove one of the biggest drawing cards in the film market.

In Winnipeg, Man., all local theatrical attendance records were broken at the opening of the official "Battle of the Somme" pictures at the Dominion theater here. Within fifteen minutes after the doors were opened at 11 a. m. for the first show the house was filled, and crowds were waiting outside throughout the afternoon. Reserved seats in boxes and loges were sold for the show starting at 2:45 and 7:45, but not for other performances. General admission was 25 cents, with box seats at 35 cents, and ten shows were given daily.

Organizing a Victoria Producing Co.

Victoria, B. C.—The Victoria Players' Association has just been formed in this city, with the intention of entering on the production of moving pictures here. A meeting was recently held in the Pemberton building, and W. J. Dart, for the benefit of a number of local men who are interested in seeing this industry, started by local talent and capital, outlined the work of the association as far as it has gone. The city organization of the association by chapters is to be carried on, and there was also some discussion regarding the formation of a stock company to carry on the business. E. T. Clark, E. C. S. George, and Messrs. Williams and Shaw were appointed a committee to determine what steps might be taken to organize a company along independent lines.

Gold Rooster Plays in the West.

Vancouver, B. C.—Leon F. Ouimet, general manager of the Pathe interests in Canada, was a recent visitor to Vancouver and announced that hereafter the Gold Rooster and the Red Rooster would be much more active here than at any time in the past. Although his company has had offices established in Vancouver and Winnipeg for a long time, as well as in Calgary for the past year, this is Mr. Ouimet's first visit to the western territory.

Beginning at once, Pathe will now release a five-reel Gold Rooster play in Vancouver each week, and the subjects will be brand new copies, working their way eastward from here as far as Ontario, instead of starting from the other end, as formerly has been the case.

Mr. Ouimet has instituted an innovation of marked service to exhibitors in his "publicity campaign books."

Better Projection Due to Examinations

British Columbia Examiners for Operators' Licenses Back from Long Tour of Duty—See Betterment—Another Chance for Those Who Fail.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—J. R. Foster, member of the newly-appointed provincial examining board for operators, has recently returned to Vancouver after his first trip taken for the purpose of determining the qualifications of operators of projection machines. He was accompanied by W. A. Oswald, another member of the board, who acted jointly with him in conducting the tests. Mr. Oswald remained behind to hold examinations in a few more small towns before returning to Vancouver.

Mr. Foster states that since the recent announcement of the forthcoming examinations there has been a great improvement in the British Columbia standard of operating, and that most of the men are showing the result of hard study and application to their work. Most of the men examined passed without difficulty, and qualified for licenses in their respective towns. Those whose mark fell between 65 and 75 per cent. were placed on probation until May, 1917, at which time they will be examined again. If they again fail to obtain a satisfactory rating their licenses will be cancelled forthwith. Those falling below 65 per cent. in the present examinations will not be granted a renewal for next year, or may apply for another examination in May.

The towns of the province are divided into four classes, depending principally on population, and an operator qualified to operate in a town of a certain class cannot work in a town of a higher class without taking a further examination. The only city of the first class in the province is Vancouver, at which point the finely-equipped examination rooms allow of a more thorough test than is possible anywhere else. The Vancouver examinations will begin at the new quarters in the Court House on December 12.

In the trip just completed the examiners went as far eastward as Golden, and covered all the towns in the Kootenay district, including Nelson, Trail, Rossland, Fernie, Cranbrook, etc. They will leave shortly on another trip to cover the northern part of the province.

Fall Decorations of Maple Leaves in Colonial Theater Lobby.

Club Entertainments Are Being Restricted

In Winnipeg Chairs Must Be Fastened to Floor in Halls Where Public Entertainments Are Held Even for Charity.

VICTORIA, B. C.—The practice of holding entertainments of various descriptions in the assembly rooms of schools, lodge room, club rooms, and so forth, in contravention of the regulations which permit such gatherings only in premises where provision is made for the chairs being fixed to the floor, has fallen under the ban. At many such entertainments held recently the law has not only been broken in this respect, but the fire regulations regarding keeping the aisles clear have not been complied with.

Fire Chief Davis, to whom complaints have been made by prominent citizens has sent out notices to the school board, managers of clubs and similar orgarizations, calling attention to the regulations. The chief recognizes that many of the public entertainments given in such premises are for good objects, but in the face of definite regulations requiring all such premises to meet certain requirements, he has no option but to enforce the law.

It is stated that the city council probably has the power to grant permission to hold public entertainments in halls not complying with the regulations.

Fined for Truant Patrons.

Vancouver, B. C.—The proprietor of the Star theater on Main street was fined $25 and costs in the police court recently, on conviction of having allowed young boys in the theater during school hours. The complaint as made by W. H. Collier of the Juvenile Detention Home.

W. J. Wilson Buys Starland.

Brandon, Man.—It is announced that W. J. Wilson of Winnipeg has purchased the Starland and the Bijou, two of Brandon's leading moving picture theaters. No details have been given out.

Attention--Mr. Exhibitor

OUR reason in placing such a large order is that we have been convinced that these Colored Portrait Cards of the Popular Film Stars are one of the best business stimulators ever used by Exhibitors. We have hundreds of testimonials from leading Exhibitors throughout the country telling us of the benefit they are getting from using same.

These colored photos of the popular film stars are made up on cards with post card back for mailing purposes, wallhangers or cards; size 4x8, with a plain back, and also printed on Program Covers.

We have made a contract for an enormous quantity of the

which runs into many millions and we are going to give you the benefit of the difference in price which we were able to obtain in placing this large order.

EVERY Exhibitor has at least one day during the week on which his business is not as good as the rest. Pick out that dull day and start giving one of the colored cards at a cost of a fraction more than one-third cent each to every patron who attends the performance on that day, and see how long it will be before that same day will show you the best receipts of any day in the week.

What these cards have done for others they will do for you. Order from your supply house at once. If they do not handle them, order direct from us.

NOTE OUR NEW PRICES

POST CARDS..$3.50 per 1000 WALL HANGERS, 4 x 8..$4.50 per 1000 PROGRAM COVERS..$5.00 per 1000

VITAGRAPH.

OUR OTHER LIVES (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Dec. 2).—Dorothy Palmer meets Winthrop, a young medical student, at a class dance. She proves to be the mysterious girl of Winthrop's dream, which takes him back to a period of time one thousand years ago when he was madly in love with this same face and was tortured to death by a wicked king who desired to place her in his court.

Winthrop also recognizes in young Markton his kingly enemy of long ago. Inevitably this trio engage in a battle with Fate. Markton is at first successful and wins Dorothy's promise of marriage. Under the occult influence of Winthrop, she refuses to marry Markton and turns to Winthrop.

Following up his advantage, the young medical student, now a famous brain specialist, performs a delicate operation upon Dorothy's brain removing all of her memory lines and leaving her with the brain of a child. He takes her to a quiet cottage by the sea, and there develops her character into a passionate love for him.

Again Markton appears upon the scene and finds Dorothy in her new life more desirable than ever. Winthrop falls over a cliff and Markton discovering him, decides to leave him to his fate. Just as the rising tide is about to take his life Dorothy's new character asserts itself and she saves her husband's life, and puts Markton out of sight and mind forever.

ESSANAY.

THE EGG (Two Parts—Dec. 5).—The cast: "The Egg" (Richard C. Travers); Marjorie Miller (Marguerite Clayton).

Marjorie Miller, heiress, reads a book in which the heroine makes a man out of a human derelict and marries him. This appeals to her romantic enthusiasm and she discovers "The Egg," a character who is a mystery to the habitues of a crook saloon. She starts to reform him with many discouraging results. Finally she attempts to show him a better existence and gets him attired in evening clothes and has him as a guest at a dinner party in her home. His antics embarrass her, and when she denounces him he picks up the book, turns to the title page and writes across it, "Compliments of the author," hugely enjoying his joke on her.

A WAITING GAME (Dec. 6).—The cast: The Waiter (Ben Turpin).

Ben Turpin, attired none too elegantly, enters a high class cafe and orders everything in the place. He cannot pay for it and a riot ensues. The manager thinks he has solved the affair by letting Turpin work out his check as a waiter, but several costly errors prove this an unwise proceeding.

A FAILURE AT FIFTY (Three Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: "Old Tim" (Thomas Commerford); His Daughter (Alice McChesney); Frank Harrington (Royal Douglas).

"Old Tim" is an old fashioned factory superintendent. He turns over his pay envelope to his wife unopened and when given a dime for tobacco is contented. His son, whom he educated, becomes the assistant to the president of his factory, and inaugurates an efficiency system that breaks the heart of the old man. He quits, and months after when unable to find work he overhears his family calling him a failure and leaves secretly to face the world anew. He again meets Frank Harrington, a young designer, who befriends him. Tim makes a suggestion that perfects a device for the boy and the two soon find themselves on the way to wealth, the old man still contented with his pipe and tobacco, but with one ambition to give his son, who caused his former troubles, a final thrashing. He tries to, but is overcome with emotion. The old man is soon reunited with his family, and Harrington becomes a son-in-law.

KALEM.

THE NEW SALESMAN (Nov. 14).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Lottie Lightfingers (Ethel Teare); Detective Snoop (Henry Murdoch).

Ham and Bud are first seen in charge of a milk route with ultra modern methods of delivery. Lottie Lightfingers is trailed on her departure from the department store by Detective Snoop. Ham and Bud, seeing him, decide that he is a masher and administer a vigorous lesson. When they discover that he is a store detective the three take flight in the milk wagon.

After eluding Detective Snoop they land Lottie in the same department store from which she had fled. Ham and Bud notice a sign "Salesmen Wanted," and successfully apply for the jobs. Ham lands in the shoe department, Bud in the gloves, and with Lottie having the free run of the store and Detective Snoop hovering in the background things quickly begin to happen.

MYSTERY OF THE BRASS BOUND CHEST (Episode No. 15—"The Girl from 'Frisco"—Two Parts—Nov. 15).—The cast: Barbara Brent (Marian Sais); John Wallace (True Boardman); Ace Brent (Frank Jonasson); "The Red Angel" (Ronald Bradbury); Marsoorian (Edward Clisbee); "The Black Father" (Karl Formes, Jr.).—Directed by James W. Horne.

Marsoorian, a curio dealer, has been marked for death by the members of the Hunchakist League because of his possession of a mysterious brass bound chest. Barbara succeeds in buying the chest from Marsoorian's clerk on the day that the dealer learns that "The Red Angel" of the Hunchakists is on his trail seeking vengeance. Marsoorian prepares for flight, but delays to recover the chest from Barbara.

On his visit to Barbara's home he is followed by "The Red Angel," and when the Brent party comes to meet him they find instead his dead body with a dagger bearing a peculiar Maltese cross insignia beside the body. A similar Maltese cross is on the brass bound chest so Barbara refuses to give it up to the police until she has solved the mystery herself. The following day she receives a warning that her life is in danger unless she delivers the chest unopened to a messenger at a lonely spot. Wallace delivers the box and attempts to turn the tables by overcoming the messenger, but is captured by the latter's aides and taken to the headquarters of the Hunchakist League.

Barbara and her father following in another automobile are delayed by a tire blow-out and Barbara goes ahead on foot in time to learn where the captive Wallace has been taken. With Wallace at the mercy of the enraged Hunchakists and Barbara endeavoring single-handed to save him, the action works up to a thrilling climax before the rescue of the two is finally effected and the mystery of the brass chest explained.

THE ROGUE'S PAWN (No. 5 of "Grant, Police Reporter"—Nov. 17).—The cast: Tommy Grant of The Chronicle (George Larkin); Eileen Brophy (Ollie Kirkby); Police Commissioner Brophy (G. Chira); Chitsworth (Robert Ellis); Detective Cadogan (Arthur Albertson); City Editor Mansfield (William McKey); Rita Morell (Mary Taylor-Ross). Directed by Robert Ellis.

Eileen Brophy is a victim of the dance craze and Chitsworth, a gambler, seeing her at Surry's, fosters an acquaintance in order to make her his innocent tool. Tommy Grant, of The Chronicle, is busy on a story that the gambling houses are open again, but seeks to learn whether it is with the knowledge of the police before publishing his facts. His visit to Chitsworth's alarms that gambler and he determines to sell out to Hawley, a Chicago plunger seeking to start operations in New York. As a guarantee of his intimacy with the police Chitsworth says, "Why even the commissioner's daughter is a good friend of mine; I'll introduce you to her here to-morrow." With Rita Morell, an adventuress, posing as his sister, Chitsworth finds it an easy matter to induce the innocent Eileen to go to his house "for a rare-bit" after the dance at Surry's.

Grant follows the party, but is barred from entering by the guardian at Chitsworth's door. Running around to the rear of the house he climbs a drain pipe until he is high enough to see through the windows of Chitsworth's establishment. He is horrified to see Eileen, who has learned the character of the place, engaged in a struggle with Rita Morell, who is seeking to prevent her outcry and escape. A chafing dish is overturned in the struggle and the room is speedily a whirl of flames. Eileen falls unconscious and Grant sees that in the rush of the gamblers to escape she has been left to the mercy of the flames. He takes a chance and starts to climb hand over hand on the telephone wires stretched between the two buildings. Mid-way, his weight causes the wires to snap and he is catapulted into the flaming room. He succeeds in escaping to the roof with Eileen and there finds a rope by which he lets her down to the ground. Flames from the windows part the rope, however, and when he seeks to effect his own escape there is no alternative but a leap to the fire net.

THE RUNAWAY SLEEPER (No. 106 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Nov. 18).—The cast: Operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Mr. Greyson (G. A. Williams); The Lineman (P. S. Pembroke); Spug (George Routh). Author, E. W. Matlack. Director, Walter Morton.

A hot box and disabled brakes on the Greyson special attached to the Limited cause it to be dropped at a lonely point on the road. While awaiting the arrival of the repair gang and another locomotive to take the special on its delayed journey, the men of the Greyson party determine to get in a little fishing, leaving Greyson's daughter alone in the car. Spug and his bobo pal seize on the opportunity to board the special and get their fill of Greyson's food and wine. They decide to run the special down the tracks out of danger, but once started down grade, they find that the disabled brakes will not respond and the special tears along at great speed. Helen learns of the runaway and sets out in an automobile in pursuit of the special. By a daring leap through the air she lands aboard a train speeding on an adjoining track. She jumps to the runaway and then with the aid of a rope brings it to a stop.

THE HOUSE OF THREE DEUCES (No. 6 of [illegible] Drama Reporter.—Nov. 24).—The cast: Tommy Grant, of The Chronicle (George [illegible]); Tia (Ollie Kirkby); Joe "The Wolf" (Robert Ellis); Tony (Arthur Albertson); City Editor Mansfield (William McKey). Directed by Robert Ellis.

Mysterious murders are frequent occurrences at 222 Kemig street, known in police records as The House of Three Deuces. Tommy Grant, of The Chronicle, happens upon the scene just following one crime that seem to baffle solution. The detectives are at a standstill, but Grant, by the exercise of clever deductions, succeeds in trailing the guilty man to the tenement room where he has imprisoned Tia, the sweetheart of the murdered man.

Grant hears a struggle in the room and attempts to force an entrance by the door. This failing, he goes out on the fire escape and is about to leap into the room when Joe "The Wolf" springs upon him and there is a tense struggle on the fire escape many feet above the sidewalk. Suddenly the rickety landing collapses. Grant succeeds in hooking his legs into the iron ladder and hangs suspended in the air while Joe is hurled to the ground.

THE FORGOTTEN TRAIN ORDER (No. 107 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Nov. 25).—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Dick Benton (P. S. Pembroke); "Red" Byrd (George Routh); Mr. Purdy (G. A. Williams). Author, E. W. Matlack. Director, Walter Morton.

Dick Benton, crack operator of the United Syndicate, is forced by a breakdown to accept a position as operator at Lone Point. In a conflict with roughs from the construction gang he is worsted and neglects to deliver an order to the local to take a siding and allow the Limited to pass. Helen sets out on her motorcycle to overtake the local. It has been her custom to race the local to the drawbridge frequently, and when the trainmen see her pursuing they think that she is racing them and the engineer puts on increased speed. But Helen finally overtakes them and succeeds in board the train by a thrilling leap a confession from the dying man. A storm has come up and when Allen's mother arrives at the station on her way to her son's execution which is to take place the following morning, she finds that all trains have been delayed by the storm. The district attorney returns home with the confession. He is about to tear it up when his wife enters the room. "Would you violate your oath of office," she cries. The latent conscience of the district attorney is stirred and he brings the matter to the Governor, who decides to send a reprieve to the prison. The wires are down as a result of the storm, and it is impossible to send the telegram. The Governor than gets the district attorney on the long-distance wire, and gives him the message. The district attorney sees his little son playing with the carrier pigeon. He is seized with an inspiration. He could send the warden's carrier pigeon to the prison. He tells his scheme to the Governor, who agrees. The district attorney writes a note to the warden, telling him to delay the execution of Bert, and the pigeon is sent into the storm. The district attorney meets Bert's mother at the station and also learns that all trains are delayed. He shows her the reprieve. They start on the first train in the early morning. The pigeon has been killed in the storm and is found by a sentry of an artillery encampment. The sentry sends the message which he finds on the bird's leg, by wireless, to the Fourth Artillery near the state prison. The train carrying the district attorney and the mother is delayed by a broken coupling between the engine and the first car, but the district attorney urges the engineer to go on, and he and the mother got into the cab of the engine. The message by wireless arrives at the state prison, but the warden has no way of knowing that the note is authentic—it may be a plot of Bert's friends. He, therefore, dismisses the message from his mind and takes Bert out to the death chamber. The engine carrying the district attorney and the mother is stopped by a tree which has been thrown over the tracks by the storm. The district attorney hails a passing automobile and they start out again for the prison. The Governor, in the meantime calls up long-distance, but finds that the wires are not yet ready. He holds the wire until it is fixed. The warden receives the call just as he is about to drop the handkerchief which would mean the execution of Bert. At this point, the automobile containing the mother and the district attorney arrives. They enter the prison with the reprieve in time to save Bert.

JOKER.

THE TRAMP CHEF (Dec. 9).—The cast: Patsy (Wm. Franey); Spike (Chas. Conklin); Amanda (Gale Henry); Constable (Milburn Moranti); Mayor (Al. Moranti). Written by W. W. Beaudine and C. J. Wilson, Jr. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

After completing their morning toilet the two "gentlemen of fortune" decide to rustle some breakfast. Patsy starts off, but is seized by the village constable and lodged in jail. The constable, while an excellent guardian of the law, is a poor cook and suffers accordingly. Patsy sees this and asks permission to cook the breakfast. The constable agrees and finds that Patsy is a culinary genius.

Meantime, Spike has become impatient and gone foraging for himself. A lady gives him a pitcher of milk. He thanks her and is about to leave when she confronts him with a formidable-looking revolver and marches him out to the wood pile, where he proceeds to get busy.

Finally Spike becomes exhausted and walks to the gun to plead with Amanda, but finds that it is nailed to the side of the house; he pries it loose, intending to hold up Amanda. She, however, pulls the gun away from him and marches him off to jail.

The mayor sees the two prisoners go to the lockup and demands that they be let out. The constable reluctantly turns them over to the mayor, who runs them out of town. Then the constable finds that in Amanda he has a cook engaged for life and all ends happily.

POWERS.

TRIALS OF A MOVIE CARTOONIST (Split Reel—Dec. 10).—The first half of this film shows the trials and tribulations of a movie cartoonist at work. The figures that he draws become rebellious and refuse to act as he wants them to, so he has a terrible time to make them do his bidding. They answer back and say that he has no right to make slaves of them even if he is their creator.

SUPERSTITIOUS CEYLON (On Same Reel).—The second part of the film shows more of the wonderful land of Ceylon as seen by Dr. Dorsey. Here the religious side of the people is shown and they are revealed in their devotion to the God that they worship.

REX.

A STORY FROM LIFE (Special Release—Dec. 9).—Jane, an actress resting in a fishing village, flirts with a fisherman to get atmosphere for a new role. When matter becomes serious, she sends for her husband and child. Undeceived, the fisherman seeks revenge. The child saves Jane's husband from death.

THE PENALTY OF TREASON (Two Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: Francisca (Ruth Clifford); Captain Guido (Geo. Gebhart); Gen. Solerna (Ed. Clark); Priest (Wadsworth Harris); Campi (Douglas Gerrard); Aide (Chas. Dorian); Giovanna (Dave Kershow). Scenario by Maie Harvey. Produced by Douglas Gerrard.

Francesca, known as the prettiest girl in Caliente, is much in love with the violinist, Campi, and the two are betrothed. There comes through the town one day Captain Guido and several of his men. As the captain is passing down a street he notices a couple of his men talking with a very pretty girl and determines to investigate. The two men leave and he makes love to the girl, who is none other than Francesca. But she resents it and slaps the captain's face.

When she tells Campi of the occurrance, he straightway seeks out the captain, intent upon avenging the insult. Campi is taken prisoner, and later when Francesca discovers his plight, she dons boys' clothes and acts as a servant to Guido, who with some of his men, is on the point of betraying the government. Finally through the efforts of the girl, Guido is made to suffer the penalty of his treason, together with his confederates, and the girl and her lover are once more happy.

BIG U.

SEEDS OF JEALOUSY (Special Release—Dec. 7).—Wade, a prospector, swears vengeance when Lee saves Mona, the Indian girl, from his clutches. He inflames the Indians against him and later implants jealousy of Mona in Mrs. Lee's mind. His villainous career is cut short by a bear-trap, and his treachery is discovered.

LAEMMLE.

THE CHILDREN SHALL PAY (Special Release—Dec. 6).—Phillip and Lois are married and have a little girl. But Lois feels that she is neglected, so she starts to run away with another man. The machine breaks down before they have gone very far, and she comes back home. But her husband will not believe that she has not been untrue and so turns her out of the house.

In after years the little girl gets to be incorrigible. So Lois writes to the old nurse to bring the child to her and she will reform her. This the old nurse does, telling the master that she is taking the girl to a school that specializes in bad children. Lois at last with her mother love succeeds in reforming the child and then the father comes to visit. When he sees that it is his own wife who has brought the child he forgives her.

UNIVERSAL.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 2 (Dec. 8).—The first article in the Universal Screen Magazine is about the old horses that are used in the making of valuable serums. These animals are of no use in the doing of work, but are innoculated with diseases and then make serums which save thousands of lives and are worth thousands of dollars. One "worthless" horse has produced, since 1911, $185,000 worth of serum.

The next article is on the boy scouts' work. It shows how the lore of the woods is taught and how it is practiced by the disciples of Ernest Thompson Seton.

The building of a portable house is shown. This is a way that the summer hotel bills can be saved.

Then the many labor-saving devices that have been invented for the housewife are shown. Housekeeping is not as strenuous as it used to be in the old days. There are electric percolators, cream whippers, silver polishers, meat choppers and dish washers.

Then as a closing feature Willie Hopkins, the world-renowned sculptor, is shown in some of his wonderful animated sculpture.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

LIBERTY (Episode No. 17—Two Parts—Dec. 4).—The cast: Liberty Horton (Marie Walcamp); Pedro (Eddie Polo); Capt. Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Major Winston (Neal Hart); Pancho Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Jose Leon (L. M. Wells).

This episode opens with Liberty and Pedro in the dungeon looking for some way to escape. Eddie finds one of the stones loose and with his strength he removes it. He then lifts Liberty on his shoulder and helps her through the aperture that is formed and then follows himself. But the loose stone is only a ruse, and outside there are a couple of soldiers watching. They are now in a steel room, and as soon as they are seen to enter the chamber the guards give the signal and a fire is started under the room.

Pedro and Liberty begin to get warm and do not know what is happening. Then at another signal from the guards the walls of the room begin to close in on them. The two of them are really terrified, and Liberty falls on her knees and prays that they may be delivered. The walls are by this time very close together, and Pedro plants his back on one and his feet on the other, and by his sheer strength holds the walls apart.

The men at the windlass are afraid they cannot hold it any longer as the handle is slipping. They call for help and the men who are below at the fire leave their posts and come to their assistance. But Pedro has forced them to let go, and the walls rush away from momentum. They are going so fast that they go beyond the point from which they started and leave an opening through which Liberty and Pedro start to make their escape.

NESTOR.

PASS THE PRUNES (Dec. 4).—The cast: Jack Crarrymore (Eddie Lyons); Culdoon (Lee Moran); Mary (Priscilla Dean); Father (Fred Gambie). Scenario by Bess Meredyth. Produced by L. Chaudet.

Culdoon operates a sanitarium which is warranted to cure all ills no matter what they be. To him come the fat and lean, the weak and the strong, the old and the young. But for all Culdoon prescribes the same treatment, a set routine of exercise and diet.

There comes incognito the matinee idol, Jack Crarrymore. He somewhat resents his treatment until the arrival of Mary and her father. Then the routine assumes a different aspect. Mary is not taking the treatment, so has plenty of time to prepare toothsome edibles for Jack, whom she immediately recognizes.

Culdoon is somewhat smitten upon Mary himself, and it does not portend well for Jack when it is discovered that the girl favors him. Her father likes his cigar—which is strictly prohibited. But Jack manages to slip the father one and also to win the good graces of the old man. Jack impersonates him, taking his place for the exercises.

Then the trouble starts. Jack and Culdoon start boxing, but Jack is too much for Culdoon. Father hears the commotion and comes out in the hall to see what is going on, and at that moment Culdoon spies him, and, taking him for Jack, starts pummelling him unmercifully, when Jack comes to the rescue and—of course, comes out victorious.

OH, YOU HONEYMOON (Dec. 8).—The cast: Bert Marsh (Willard Wayne); Amy Marsh (Alida Hayman).

Bert Marsh and his bride, Amy, start out on their honeymoon well advertised as "Newlyweds." Arriving at a hotel, the bellboy showers them with attentions until the anticipated tips are noticeably lacking. Then Bert and Amy become the victims of their practical jokes.

The bellboy and porter have arranged a clever scheme, and when the couple enter their suite, the fun begins. Hurriedly changing the bathroom sign to the bridal door, the boys anxiously await developments. Presently Bert is seen to saunter down the hallway in the direction of the bar. A moment later a fat man, in bath array, hurries into the new designated "bathroom."

The next instant, however, a frightful noise in Amy's vicinity is too much for her nerves and she bounds to the bathroom door. Mr. Fat Man, now thoroughly angry at such a disturbance, lets forth a torrent of curses, which so shocks the bride, that she decides to go right back home to mother. Hastening to the railway station, Bert comes upon Amy; explanations ensue and both discover they have been innocent participants in a comedy of errors.

VICTOR.

HIS GOLDEN HOUR (Special Release—Dec. 5).—The cast: Spuds (Ed. Sedgwick); Girl (Belle Bennett); Father (Walter Belasco); City Chap (Harry Mann). Written by Harry Wulze. Produced by Roy Clements.

Spuds is in love with his employer's daughter, but their path of love does not run smoothly. A city chap, who holds a mortgage on the farm is also in love with the girl, and persuades her parents to decide in his favor.

Spuds repairs to the haystack and there dreams that he finds a lot of money, tears up the mortgage and beats up the city chap and so gets the girl. It is only a dream—and yet why not make it real? Spuds follows his dream and so in the end the parents decide to bestow their daughter's hand upon him.

THE SHADOW (Two Parts—Dec. 7).—The cast: Shadow (Harry Carter); Dick (Alan Holubar); Mary (Neva Gerber); Doris (Olive Adair); Hostess (Helen Wright); Husband (William Canfield). Scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton. Produced by Allan Holubar.

Dick attends a fashionable party as one of the guests—but to all appearances is a very clever crook. He removes different pieces of jewelry from the guests, and even the host and hostess are not exempt. But it is noticed that whichever he annexes a piece of jewelry a shadow of a young man is seen to make a notation in a notebook. Dick takes Mary, easily the most popular girl at the ball, out into the garden. The shadow is seen to make many signs, all of which Dick completely ignores. Mary confides that all of their jewelry is kept upstairs in a wall safe.

Dick takes Mary back to the reception room and soon is wending his way upstairs. As he enters the room in which the safe is located, he finds a burglar already at work and cleverly binds him in a chair. Later the guests discover the loss of their jewelry and Dick is suspected. Mary is deeply grieved over this as she has become quite interested in him. He tells her that he will see her on the morrow and leaves. Meantime the crook upstairs is discovered and he informs them that a sweet crook has all the jewelry.

The next day in Dick's rooms are gathered several of his friends and then it is discovered that Dick had played "Raffles" on a wager with his friend who acted as the "Shadow" to record that he actually took the articles. But the shadow thinks that Dick overstepped his bounds, as he had won the heart of Mary when the shadow considered her his rightful property. But the terms of the wager are that he "should take anything he could get his hands on." All the jewelry is returned and Mary gives her heart into the keeping of the gentleman burglar, feeling that he has already taken possession.

RACCOONS (Dec. 8).—This is a little film that shows the way that the animal commonly known among the negroes as the "Coon," lives. It shows the animal in its lair and also the way that the den is built.

THE CALL OF THE UNBORN (Two Parts—Dec. 8).—The cast: Signor Guido Ferrati (M. K. Wilson); Maria Rosetti (Edith Roberts); Mrs. Lane (Lillian Concord); Maestro Canova (Malcolm Blevins). Scenario by Douglas Bronston. Produced by M. K. Wilson.

Canova's Royal Italian Band is entertaining its usual enthusiastic audience and the people are listening with rapt attention to the noted violinist, Signor Guido Ferrati. Seated at a distance Mrs. Lane, a wealthy widow, is watching the artist, and wondering if she can add another victim to her wiles. Meanwhile, little Maria Rosetti, the leading soprano, is gazing at the young man, whom she adores.

That night Maria is preparing supper when Guido enters. She greets him lovingly, and asks him: "Guido, you will marry me soon, yes"? Slightly startled, he answers, "Yes." They are interrupted by Canova, who has brought a bunch of flowers to Maria and he, noticing Guido's indifference, longs for Maria. A few days later, Guido goes motoring with the widow. Alighting at the beach, Mrs. Lane and Guido are in the midst of a flirtation, when Canova, who has been out for a walk, discovers them. He tells Maria and then she confides her secret that she is about to become a mother. As Canova crosses the street, Mrs. Lane's motor draws up, and he hails her. Explaining the trouble, he finally enlists the widow's sympathy.

Meantime, Guido returning home, finds a sad little note from Maria, stating that as he loves another, there is nothing left for her but death. At last realizing the girl's true worth, Guido rushes out determined to find his sweetheart, and meeting Canova, the two men start a search. Mrs. Lane sights Maria in the distance praying on the top of a high bluff, and calling out her chauffeur to follow, starts climbing the steep rocks. Another instant and Mrs. Lane has grabbed Maria just as she is about to plunge to her death. A few moments later, drawing up to their apartment, Maria is met by Guido, now a thoroughly contrite lover, who pleads for her forgiveness, while Mrs. Lane is gently led away by Canova.

BISON

THE GREATER POWER (Two Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: Sheriff Griffith (Harry S. Griffith); Mrs. Griffith (Katherine Griffith); Alice, their daughter (Alice Beice); Ernest, their son (Ernest Van Pelt); Ervin Denny(Ervin Denneke); Al Gordon (Al Ernest Garcia).

Because of the repealed humiliations that he suffers on account of his son, Ernest, Sheriff Griffith decides that he will not run for re-election. When the lawless element finds this out they at once put up the name of Ervin Denny, a gambler and leader of a band of cattle rustlers.

Al Gordon is a wealthy young ranchman who is in love with Alice Griffith, to whom it is important that the losses stop. At a meeting that is held in regard to the coming election, the sheriff is about to be mobbed by the men who are working for the election of Denny, when Al comes along and puts a stop to the matter. Then the men see that if he is elected there will be observance of the law, so they make him run for the office himself.

At last the election day arrives and in spite of the efforts of the gang to stuff the ballot box, Al is the winner when the final count is made. As he has promised to help reform Ernie, he appoints him a deputy sheriff in the hope that the responsibility will make a man of him. The election has attracted a great many of the surrounding ranchers to town, and the rustlers have taken advantage of this fact to make a raid. When the newly-elected sheriff hears of this he at once sends his deputy to get the criminals. But Ernie has formerly been a member of the gang and so is afraid to get them. When Al makes up his mind that he will go himself to get the crooks, and finds that Ernie has been shirking his duty he is angry and brings the young fellow back to the jail.

Just as he is locking him up, Ernie turns on him and tries to get away. This is too much and Al loses his temper and decides that he will teach Ernie a lesson. He takes off his coat and proceeds to give Ernie the worst beating that he has ever had. This at last makes the wastrel see the error of his ways and he confesses where the secret hiding place of the gang is. Then the sheriff sends out other deputies, and after a battle the bandits are overpowered.

Al marries Alice, and Ernie, who sees the error of his ways, is again made a deputy sheriff, but this time he makes good.

RED FEATHER.

KINKAID GAMBLER (5 Parts, Dec. 4) The cast: Nellie Gleason (Ruth Stonehouse); Jim Kinkaid (R. A. Cavin); George Arnold (Raymond Whittaker); Romero Valdez (Noble Johnson); Lefty Frank (Harry Mann), McPherson (Harry Griffith); Murphy (J. H. Knowles); Nochita (Cleo Loring). Scenario by Fred Myton. Produced by Raymond Wells.

George Arnold, head of the Paradise Valley Land Company, has been robbed of $10,000 by Jim Kinkaid, who has fled the country. Arnold secures the services of the Burton Detective Agency to get Kinkaid. Nellie is put on the case. She goes to the gambling house. Her ignorance of gambling nearly betrays her. Romero Valdez, Kinkaid's right hand man, feels that everything is not on the square in regard to this woman. But Kinkaid has become strongly attached to Nellie and will listen to nothing against her. Nellie becomes aware of the goodness of Kinkaid's heart and finds the job of betraying him distasteful. She forces herself to the work and has succeeded in getting Kinkaid accustomed to cross the border with her. She then wires to New York for them to send the men to make the arrest.

Letty Frank, a convict with a grudge against Nellie, manages to escape and goes to Mexico. He reaches Kinkaid's gambling house and recognizes Nellie as a New York detective. Kinkaid is told. Nevertheless, he takes his usual walk with her that evening. Seated on their accustomed bench, he tells her how he had discovered a number of foreigners on the desert absolutely destitute; they told him of how they were robbed of their life's savings by Arnold, through a crooked real estate deal. Kinkaid took care of the people and went to New York to see what he could do to get their money back. Upon asking Arnold to refund the money, he was laughed at, for the transaction was perfectly legal. Kinkaid, by force, took the money from Arnold, escaped into Mexico and returned it to the immigrants.

Detectives arrive from New York. Nellie asks Kinkaid to go for a walk. Romero, not trusting her, has followed with two Mexicans, to be there in case of need. Kinkaid is arrested by Arnold and the detectives and Romero coming up with assistance, is deserted by his followers at a critical moment, and he is also arrested. In the jail, Kinkaid and Romero again become friends and Kinkaid wagers his entire possessions that Nellie will "run true to form." In her room, Nellie sees a way out of her difficulty. She steals the keys of the jail from the sheriff and opens the door. At dawn, Kinkaid, Nellie and Romero enter the town from the desert and are met by an ovation from their friends. Kinkaid gives to Romero the gambling house and everything connected with it, finding that his future and his happiness lie with Nellie, away from everything pertaining to his former life.

ASHES (Three parts Dec. 5).—The cast: Ashes Shannon (Claire Mersereau); Mrs. Topin (Nellie Slattery); "Yukon" Smith (Stanley Walpole); Jim Shannon (Fred Hearn); Harry Davis (Joseph Granby); Glory La Rue (Helen Slosson). Written and directed by Robert F. Hill.

Ashes is the maid of all work in a second-rate boarding house that is run by a Mrs. Topin. At the time the story opens out in the gold fields of Alaska there are two pals who have at last struck it rich. One of them, Jim Shannon, dies. With his dying breath he makes his pal, Smith, promise that he will go to New York and look up a certain Ashes Shannon and give her his share of the mine.

At the house where Ashes lives there is a composer, Davis. He is in love with Glory La Rue. But he is not averse to a little flirtation with Ashes. One day in the paper he sees a notice to the effect that if a certain Ashes Shannon will come to the office of a lawyer she will receive a fortune. Instead of showing it to Ashes, however, Davis tells the lawyer that he is the cousin of Ashes and would like to take the inheritance for her. The lawyer refuses to give away the money on such evidence. He writes to Smith that one applicant for the fortune has applied, but that he is doubtful as to her identity. Smith decides to go to New York himself.

In the meanwhile Davis approaches Ashes and wants her to go before the lawyer and swear she, Ashes Shannon, is his cousin, but she refuses to tell a lie. When the landlady, who is in the scheme, threatens her, she leaves and gets employment in a restaurant as a dish-washer. But before this she had heard Davis and the landlady plotting as to how they are going to get the money. When Smith arrives in New York he goes to the lawyer, who tells him all the particulars about Davis and his cousin, whom he claims is the heir.

While in a restaurant Smith overhears a girl by the name of Ashes getting a scolding. It is a rather uncommon name, so he asks her if she is Ashes Shannon. She says that she is, so he takes her to the lawyer's and the next day they go to the office, so that the deed of the property can be made out to her. As they are in the office the clerk announces that Ashes Shannon and her cousin are there to claim the inheritance. So Smith and Ashes go out and the others come in. They are asked questions and at last the policeman, who has been sent for, arrives and the whole crowd is arrested. Ashes is happy in her new found fortune and friends, but rebels at the idea of going to school, as she is in love with Smith. In her naive way she tells him so and as he has grown to love her, too, there is a marriage and the two of them return to the west.

L-KO.

THE HIGH DIVER'S CURSE (Two parts—Dec. 6).—Dan has the position of property man in a vaudeville theater. He has trouble in keeping the stars contented. They all want to have the star dressing room and he has a hard time to make them all satisfied. In the end he has to take the star and shift it about from one door to another in order to make each one think that he, or she, as the case may be, has the star room at the time. Dan becomes involved in an argument with an actor when he remarked that actors should not stay around the theater. Dan vows to get even. The show is started. In the second act it is necessary to have rain. When the actor calls for rain Dan turns on the hose and gives them a deluge.

Another of the acts is a fake acrobatic act. The men are supposed to be holding each other up, but in reality it is Dan who is doing the supporting by means of a rope from behind the scenes. But just at the critical moment he lets the fly slip and the audience is allowed to see the act is a fake. Then comes the dance of the dying duck. But at his point in the performance Dan is standing behind the scenes eating a banana. He throws the peel out on the stage and the dance of the dying duck turns into a farce. The actors cannot keep their feet and slip so badly that the audience is about to leave when the curtain is pulled down.

But the finale of the evening is when the high diver comes on. He is going to dive from the top of the theater into a little bucket of water. All goes well and the diver is just about to take the fatal leap when Dan nonchalantly takes the bucket away and the actor cannot hold himself back and so dives into the floor. He comes after Dan hot foot and Dan takes to flight. He calls for the police and these gentlemen arrive in a buggy. But by this time Dan has taken flight in a big car and the diver is following in a flivver. After a long chase it all ends when Dan throws his enemy into the river from the top of a high bridge and then himself makes a hurried exit.

an advertisement for a valet and forthwith he hies himself to the address given. Arriving there he is annoyed to find a line of applicants ahead of him. So that he may be the first to interview the prospective employer (who happens to be a count) Jerry starts a free-for-all fight among the applicants. The house detective steps in to quell the noise, ousts the disturbers and when the Count announces he is ready to see the applicants Jerry is the only one left. Of course he gets the job.

The Count sends word to friends that he is about to visit them and after ordering Jerry to pack his bag he starts off accompanied by his valet. At the home Jerry becomes smitten with the daughter of the house and tries to flirt with her. She leads him on, passing from one room to another, drawing the curtains after her. Jerry kisses her hand, which she protrudes through the curtains. By way of teaching this persistent young fellow a lesson, the girl then has the butler take her place, so when Jerry hastily pulls aside the curtains he is surprised to find himself in the arms of the butler. Enraged, he strikes at the butler but hits the Count, who has just come upon the scene. Realizing his mistake he rushes away only to rush into the girl's mother. The Count by this time has recovered his senses and through the curtains makes a kick at what he believes is Jerry's form. Instead he strikes the mother. She in turn strikes at Jerry, who ducks just in time to let the Count, who enters through the curtains, have the blow.

Attracted by the noise the father starts toward the scene and is greeted with a flying vase from the hands of the Count which was intended for Jerry, who runs away with the Count after him. The chase leads to the bath room where Jerry causes the Count to have an involuntary bath, and then out to the street where Jerry climbs a telegraph pole with the Count pursuing. There they dangle until two policemen who see the unusual spectacle from a distance come up and drag them down. The butler, who has innocently helped cause the trouble, laughs as the two disturbers are carried away to a safer zone.

THE FALSE CLUE (Two parts—Nov. 30).—The cast: Henry Ross (Benjamin Horning); Marjorie Ross (Dorothy Davenport); Robert Stanley (Lee Hill); William (O. B. Nair).

Henry Ross, a retired banker, is found murdered in his home. Lee Hill, a young man in love with Marjorie, his daughter, is arrested and accused of the crime. The night Ross was killed, Stanley was heard fighting with him and therefore, is under suspicion. After some time William, the butler in Ross's home, tells his story, which clears Stanley. He tells how ever since Marjorie's mother's death he and his wife had taken the girl into their hearts and that she came to them with all of her happiness and all of her unhappiness. Bob had fallen in love with the girl and after a long court ship they were secretly married and he was the only one told.

GROUCHY (Dec. 2).—Grouchy is a bachelor, who lives alone. He is pestered by the neighborhood kids and with hatred in his heart for all children, he makes his will, leaving his fortune to a "bachelor's home." Later he receives an invitation from Ruth, his niece, to spend the holidays with her. He decides to accept the invitation and, upon his arrival, is greeted more as a father instead of an uncle. He is perfectly happy until his niece's children come in and then he is most uncomfortable.

However, after a few days they prove that they can be good, and Grouchy becomes a great friend to them. His legal adviser had warned him that his niece and her husband were after his money. To find out whether this is true Grouchy has his adviser come to Ruth's home. Here the adviser tells Grouchy that he has lost all of his fortune and, of course, Grouchy is despondent over the fact. Ruth, however, proves her true worth and tells Grouchy that he can make his home with them. Then it is that Grouchy changes his will in favor of Ruth and the children.

THE TURN OF THE WHEEL (Two parts—Dec. 4).—The cast: Major Harper (Bejamin Horning); Alice his daughter (Dorothy Davenport); Arnold Grey (Lee Hill).

Alice, the daughter of Major Horning, who has come to the end of his resources, is loved by Arnold Grey, a Secret Service Agent. When the young man proposes to the girl, however, she mistakes his proposal for one of charity instead of love and so refuses him. Later the major loses the last of his money through gambling and he and Alice are forced to go to a tenement room and live. Grey loses all track of Alice, but later, through a painting that the girl has sold, he discovers and persuades her and her father to come and make their home with him.

CALAMITY ANNE'S VANITY (Nov. 30).—The cast: Calamity (Louise Lester); The Stew (Robert Lane); The Eastern Woman (Rose Lathan); The Village Belles (Charlotte Burton and Jessalyn Van Trump); Their Sweethearts (Jack Richardson and J. Warren Kerrigan).

Poor Calamity Anne is much upset over seeing all of the girls and their sweethearts strolling down the village streets. "The Stew," swaggering down the road, coveted Anne's money and makes love to her. Then came the woman from the East and all of the boys deserted their girls and paid tribute to the newcomer. Feeling that the woman's clothes were what made the hit with the boys, Anne orders a new dress and when she swaggers up and down in front of the hotel with her swell new dress and her six-shooter and muddy boots peeping from under it she causes some sensation. Calamity gets the laugh. She gets sick of it all, gets her mule and leaves town. The following sign is posted on her door: "I'm goin' away. Give my pile to the orfans. Taint no use. Calamity."

PEARL OF THE ARMY (Episode No. 1, "The Traitor"—Astra—Two Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Pearl Dare (Pearl White); Major Brent (Theodore Friebus); Bertha Bonn (Marie Wayne); Col. Dare (W. T. Carleton).

Captain Ralph Payne is chosen to convey to the Major General at Panama a document of vital importance which discloses a weakness in our canal defences by which a monarchy (hitherto overlooked by the United States) plots to overcome this nation. The document is secreted beneath his left shoulder strap, it first being prepared with invisible ink. From that time Payne finds himself the victim of a queer being that, through a strange medium, juggles with his good name and martial standing.

At his apartment he finds a letter in handwriting the exact counterpart of his own and in it the startling contents; "The left shoulder strap and the locket reveal the secret—take the tip in time." Bewildered, he consults his chief, Colonel Dare, who instructs him to attend the Embassy ball that night as though nothing had happened, promising added secret service protection.

In the midst of the evening's festivities, Payne and Pearl Dare find a secluded spot in the conservatory. Encouraged by a responsive light in her eyes, Payne is about to ask for her "yes" to the question that means happiness to him, when a messenger orders him to report to Colonel Dare at once. There he is informed that the Grenadian Ambassador has been murdered and in his lifeless hand a message found to Payne thanking him for services rendered Grenada. When Payne is searched the left shoulder strap reveals nothing but a worthless piece of paper. In a daze he hears the order given to arrest him on a charge of treason.

DIVORCE AND THE DAUGHTER (Gold Rooster Five Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: Alicia (Florence La Badie); Dr. John Osborne (Edwin Stanley); Herbert Rawlins (Sam. Niblack); Mrs. Cameron (Kathrun Adams); the father (J. H. Gilmour); the mother (Zenaide Williams); the children (Ethelmary Oakland and Arthur Le Vien).

At the story's beginning a family receives an inheritance, not a large one, but great enough for them to leave their crowded city and flat and move to the country, where they forsee the opportunity to fulfill their long-cherished dreams. The father to paint pictures that are not mere "pot boilers," and the mother and daughter to expand their ideals of home hitherto bound by the close confines of their meagre means.

But their sky, instead of brightening with their good fortune, becomes cloudy, and dissatisfaction leads to disillusion and a broken home. Your heart goes out to the daughter, who is made the innocent victim of twentieth century ethics and who, suffering one disillusion after another, decides to take a step that nearly results in a tragedy.

THE SHIELDING SHADOW, NO. 10, "The Disappearing Mantle" (Two Parts—Astra—Dec. 3).—Ravengar again rushes to the aid of Leontine, who has once more been made a prisoner by Bianca and her henchmen. To save her, he gives up his closely guarded treasure, "The Disappearing Mantle."

THE CRIMINAL (5 Parts—Dec. 24). The cast: Naneta (Clara Williams), Donald White (William Desmond), The Baby (Enid Wiley), Carlos Lupoli (Joseph Dowling), Mother Marta (Gertrude Claire), Pietro (Charles K. French), Police Magistrate (Walt Whitman).

Naneta, born outside the social pale and without another name, is an outcast in the village of San Leazi, in the Italian mountains. An immigration agent from New York comes to the village and a neighbor suggests to Mother Marta, who has given a home to the nameless one, that she send Naneta to America.

She arrives in New York and goes to work in the restaurant of Carlos Lupoli in the Italian quarter of the lower East Side where she meets Donald White, a yet-to-arrive short story writer, who comes to Carlos restaurant to absorb spaghetti and atmosphere.

Entering her home that night, Naneta finds a baby on the stairs with a note pinned to its dress, and she takes the "bambino" to her room, deciding to keep it for her very own. The next day she gives White the note, asking him to read it to her, but telling nothing about finding the baby.

That night Naneta is arrested on suspicion, because of having an unknown baby in her possession, and White, hearing of the arrest, rushes to the rescue. She refuses to tell anyone about finding the baby, not wanting it known that, like herself, the child has no father, but maintains that she has stolen the baby, which fastens guilt upon her.

White relates to the perplexed Judge the circumstance of the note, which at the time he had taken to be a hoax. The magistrate is interested and together they devise a plan to force the truth from Naneta. When she is brought in the Judge says abruptly, "The woman who deserted this baby has relented and wants it back." Naneta is shocked, and cries, "No, No! She canta have it. She is trow it away one time."

There is a finish packed tight with heart throbs.

CHILDREN OF THE FEUD (Fine Arts—5 Parts—Dec. 2). The cast: Pap Clayton (Chas. Gorman); Sairy Ann (Dorothy Gish); the five Clayton children (Violet Radcliffe, Beulah Burns, Thelma Burns, Tina Rossi and Georgia Stone), Jed Martin (A. D. Sears); Judge Lee Cavanagh (F. A. Turner); Dr. Richard Cavanagh (Sam DeGrasse); Mrs. Cavanagh (Alberta Lee), Bad Bald Clayton (Elmo Lincoln). Directed by Joseph Henabery.

Sairy Ann Clayton is the eldest of the six motherless children of "Pap" Clayton, a Virginia mountaineer and moonshiner in partnership with his cousin, Jed Martin, who he has betrothed to Sairy Ann. Dr. Richard Cavanagh, son of the county judge, finds "Chub" Clayton hurt by a fall, tends him, gains the admiration of Sairy Ann, and induces her to bring the children to town for clothes and shoes, thereby rousing the jealousy of Jed Martin. The day the children are in town the still is raided, and "Pap" and Jed are jailed for months. The doctor takes the children to the home of his father, the judge, and begins their education.

The released convicts return accompanied by the head of the clan, Bad Bald Clayton and the doctor hears him tell Sairy Ann that the still was raided on the information given by a Jackson and only the life of a Jackson can square the account. The ancient feud between Claytons and Jacksons had died out. The doctor is horrified and later remonstrates with Sairy Ann and tells her that only the law should take life, but Sairy Ann defends the clan spirit, condones the proposed murder, and quarrels with him. Clayton takes Sairy Ann and the children home. Jed is rejected, and realizing that Sairy Ann is in love with the doctor he sets out to kill him. Sairy Ann on her father's horse takes a short cut and notifies the sheriff.

Jed kills the deputy, but is arrested and brought to trial before Judge Cavanagh, who is warned in an anonymous letter that he will be shot if Jed is convicted. All the Claytons, heavily armed, attend the trial. The judge fearlessly sentences Jed. At the signal the Claytons shoot up the court and Jed kills the judge. Most of the Claytons are then killed in a running fight with deputies and citizens. Sairy Ann hides in Bad Bald's store and is followed by Jed, who is wounded.

The doctor to avenge his father follows Jed, and would have killed him had not Sairy Ann reminded him of his own words that only the law has the right to take life. The doctor sur-

THE VIXEN (Five parts—Dec. 10). Elsie Drummond [illegible] Helen has acted as her mother for years. By unscrupulous deceit she draws Helen's sweetheart, Martin Stevens, away from her. When Steven loses his money Elsie casts him aside.

When Helen becomes friendly with Knowles Murray, Elsie lies to Murray about Helen and lies to Helen about Murray. The result is that she ingratiates herself with the man. By continued underhand methods he succeeds in winning Murray for herself when he is appointed consul abroad.

For a few years Elsie and Murray live happily in Paris. Two children are born to them. Then Murray is recalled for work in Washington. Elsie finds that Stevens has regained his wealth and that Helen is still sorrowing because of Murray's strange coldness toward her years ago.

Elsie's passion for power still grips her in Washington. She meets Kingsley, a young lounger, and proceeds as a matter of course to captivate him. Her husband learns of the acquaintanceship and is on the point of discovering the truth, when Elsie lies again, so cleverly that Murray believes Kinsley's attentions are being paid to Helen instead of his wife.

Stevens finally comes to realize that Elsie's whole life has been one of deception. For Helen's sake he wishes to expose her sister. Helen pleads against such action, to save the children. Elsie, chastened for once, returns to her husband.

THE MEN SHE MARRIED (Peerless—Five parts—Nov. 27.—The cast: Beatrice (Gail Kane); Ralph Semple (Arthur Ashley); Jerry Trainer (Montagu Love); Ada Semple (Louise M. Bates); Edith Trainer (Muriel Ostriche). Directed by Travers Vale.

Beatrice Raymond, a young heiress, is attracted to the unprincipled Ralph Semple. He and his wife make their living by preying upon society. They see an easy victim in Beatrice and plan to get her money. Posing as a single man, Semple soon wins her love and a mock marriage ceremony is performed. In short order he shows his cards. Pretending his mail had miscarried, he easily persuades Beatrice to give him a check for a thousand dollars, which he skillfully raises to ten thousand and, with the proceeds and his victim's jewels, he goes with his real wife to South America, telling Beatrice in a short note how he has been duped.

Beatrice, heartbroken and disillusioned, conceals her unhappy mistake from her friends, and with the passing of time she gradually recovers and begins to take interest in the life about her. Jerry Trainer, a widower and a strong, manly man, falls in love with her and she returns his affections but her miserable secret makes her answer "no" to his pleadings that they marry.

Semple and his wife in South America, in need of funds, plan to make further use of the mock marriage. A letter telling of Semple's death is faked up and sent to Beatrice. She is overjoyed to know that the obstacle which stood in the way of her happiness is now removed and that she is free to marry Jerry. She hesitates as to whether she should tell Jerry of her other marriage, but fearing that it might lessen his love for her, she decides to let "the dead past bury its dead."

Passionately in love with her husband, there is only one cloud in the happiness of her early married life. Jerry's young daughter, Edith, is jealous of his new wife, and all of Beatrice's efforts to win her affections and confidence are fruitless. One day Beatrice is horror stricken to see on the streets Ralph, whom she had had every reason to believe dead. His schemes had worked out well and he had come to make use of his hold over Beatrice; he forces her to take him to her home and introduce him to her husband and step-daughter. Beatrice watches Semple insinuate himself into the good graces of her husband and the love of Edith. She is forced through threats of exposure to induce her husband to back Semple's worthless schemes and to look on in silence at the growing love affairs between her step-daughter and the worthless cad.

At last things reach a climax. Beatrice learns that Semple has persuaded the infatuated Edith to run away with him. She visions the innocent Edith going through the same ordeal that she herself had endured. For a time she struggles with herself, and then decides that Edith must be saved at all costs. Just before the hour set for the departure of the couple, Beatrice goes to Semple's apartment and by pretending love for him she arouses the man's feelings so that he forgets all about the waiting Edith and wants only the woman before him. At last, despite her efforts, he seizes her in his arms and showers her with kisses. The door is broken open and Jerry dashes in; he stands aghast at seeing his wife in Semple's arms. Furiously he springs upon Semple and after giving him a good beating orders him to go. He then turns to Beatrice, but before she can reply to his denunciation, Edith rushes in. Then Jerry learns that it was to save his daughter that Beatrice had sacrificed her own feelings and had risked losing his love and respect. Tenderly he takes her in his arms and begs her for forgiveness, which she gladly grants.

ALL MAN (Five parts, Peerless, Dec. 31).—The cast: Jim Blake (Robert Warwick); Sandy Blakebottle (Louis Grisel); John Sherman Blake (Charles Duncan); John Maynard (Alec B. Francis); Ethel Maynard (Gerda Holmes); Alice Maynard (Mollie King); Gillette Barker (George McQuarrie); Snap Higgins (Johnny Hines); McKin (Henry West). Directed by Emile Chautard.

Jim Blake, lively young son of a millionaire, spends his hours carousing and having a good time with the boys. For a time his every whim is indulged in, but finally the elder Blake tires of his spendthrift days and one morning Jim is informed by his parent that things must change—that the days of big bills and generous allowances are over—that from now on he must make his own way in life. For the first time Jim's fighting blood is aroused, so, taking the last parting check from his father, he sets out with his trusted valet for a ranch in Wyoming, determined to make good, and to prove to his father and others that he is not the weakling they believe him to be.

Jim begins his career out West by beating up a native who resented the intrusion of the tenderfoot, and by his splendid fighting wins the admiration of the ranchmen and other onlookers. Jim then sets about to straighten out things. Learning that their ranch holds unpaid claims against the railroad for killing their live stock, he determines to collect all that is due them and with this purpose, goes to see John Maynard, the president of the railroad. In a heated interview he demands settlement of his claim and when refused by the president, tells him that he is not through yet and that some day the road will pay the claim with 100 per cent. interest.

President Maynard's daughters, out boating, are caught in a swift current, and are in grave danger of being carried over the falls. They are rescued by Jim, who is attracted by Alice, the younger daughter. The friendship between the two rapidly develops, and before returning to her home in the East, Alice promises to marry Jim as soon as he has made good. Spurred on by her promise, Jim fights harder than ever, and his efforts are eventually crowned with success. He cleverly buys up a plot of land through which the railroad was planning to build a spur track, and forces President Maynard to purchase it from him at a large figure, thus realizing enough to return to his father and prove that he has made good.

His affair of the heart, however, does not progress so smoothly. Alice's sister, jealous of the love between Alice and Jim, destroyed the letters between the sweethearts, leading each to believe that the other is faithless. But upon Jim's return to the city, everything is straightened out and, despite the objection of Alice's father, the two happy young people run away and are married with the blessing of Jim's father. President Maynard cannot long withhold his respect for the splendid young man who had so cleverly beaten him, and eventually he, too, joins in blessings on the young couple.

Reed); Don Luis Maredo (John Hopkins); Peter, father of Sonia (Morgan Jones); Vladimir (Norman Kaiser); Gaston Duval (Roy Pilcher); Ciel, Sonia's maid (Evelyn Dumo). Scenario written by Wallace C. Clifton. Directed by Burton L. King.

Sonia Smirnov is a beautiful and brilliant woman, singing the role of "The Black Butterfly" in the opera of the same name at the Folies Bergere, Paris. Lord Braislin, at a gathering of prominent men, is astounded by their enthusiastic toast to "The Black Butterfly," and Girard, of the army, arranges to introduce him.

While the toast is being offered, Don Luis Maredo breaks in upon "The Black Butterfly" in her dressing room, declares his love, and is dismissed. He goes to a telephone, calls her up and when he hears her voice kills himself. Despite the tragedy Sonia appears as usual at the evening performance and then goes to her home, where she receives a letter from her daughter, Marie, who is in a convent. This letter leads to a reverie of her past life. As a Russian peasant girl she had met Gaston Duval, fallen in love and gone with him to Paris, wher they went through a marriage ceremony which she afterward was led to believe was a mock one. Her love for Gaston turned to hatred, she became a wanderer, was taken in by some nuns, and there her child, Marie, was born. Leaving Marie in the convent, Sonia went to Paris and became an operatic star.

Thus her reverie ends, and she gives way to silent grief. The next day Lady Constance Braislin breaks in upon Sonia and accuses her of having won the love of Lord Braislin. To show the accusation is unjust Sonia has Braislin meet her after the play while Lady Constance is in hiding, and the star tells him she wants their acquaintance to end. Braislin is then led away by Lady Constance. Meantime a romance breaks in upon the life of Marie, the convent girl. Alan Hall, automobiling near the convent, meets her and they fall in love. Alan, who is a friend of Girard and Lachaise, returns to Paris and there, in an Apache dance hall, meets Sonia, who is on a slumming tour with her manager, Bergere.

Sonia falls in love with him. He thinks of Marie and tells "The Black Butterfly" that he must leave Paris, but she, not knowing of his other love, dissuades him. Then Alan writes to Marie that he will not see her again, and the convent girl pens a note to Sonia that she intends ending her life. "The Black Butterfly," on receiving this, races to the convent, arriving there just as Marie is being dragged unconscious from a lake into which she has thrown herself. Embracing the girl, Sonia discovers a photograph of Alan, learns of Marie's love and returns to Paris and dismisses Alan.

Then "The Black Butterfly" disappears. She next is seen as a nurse during the Battle of the Marne. Gaston Duval, Colonel in the French army, is at death's door. Blood transfusion is all that will save him. Physicians appeal to the nurses for a volunteer and Sonia steps forward and is accepted. When she sees and recognizes Duval she draws back in contempt. Then she exclaims: "Yes, I will volunteer, even though I despise him. I will do it for the glory of France."

After the operation Alan appears, tells Sonia he has married Marie. "The Black Butterfly" tells him she is Marie's mother and that Duval is her father. Alan insists that she confront Duval. She does, and the Colonel greets her with great emotion.

"My only love," he exclaims, "my wife, for such you are. We were really married. But the letter you received was sent by a jealous woman who wanted to marry me. Since then I have searched all over for you. Will you forgive me?" Sonia embraces him, and then they make preparations to join Marie.

THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY (Episode No. 11—"The Bloodhound"—Two Parts—Nov. 20).—Desperate at the refusal of Dr. Montrose to give them the treatment, the Crimson Stain Gang lay plans to steal the apparatus and compounds from the laboratory. For revenge, they devise a subtle way to destroy at one blow Dr. Montrose and Harold Stanley. By a ruse Stanley is led into a trap and captured by the gang leader Pierre La Rue hypnotizes him and sends him to kill Dr. Montrose, at the same time warning the police of the contemplated killing, so that they may capture Stanley.

Accordingly, Stanley goes to the Montrose home accompanied by Kiel and Tanner, and entering the laboratory alone, warns Dr. Montrose of the Crimson Stain's plan, and tells him that he is slumming hypnotic influence. Then as Tanner and Kiel peep into the room, Stanley proceeds to apparently strangle Dr. Montrose. Dropping Dr. Montrose to the floor, Stanley still slumming a trance, goes down stairs to summon help. As he leaves, Dr. Montrose covers the two gangsters with a pistol. But even the sight of the pistol cannot allay the horror of the apparently supernatural that sweeps over them and they flee in panic.

Outside they collide with Robert Clayton. Tanner and Kiel escape in their automobile, followed by Clayton in his car. Clayton's steering wheel becomes jammed and the car heads for a steep bank. Clayton jumps out just as the machine topples over the embankment. But in the meantime the gangsters have vanished. Meanwhile in the house, Parrish, seeing the limp body of Dr. Montrose pursues Stanley and places him under arrest. But Stanley is freed when Parrish learns the facts.

SEA NYMPHS (Dec. 4).—The cast: The Old Man (Neal Burns); His Wife (Betty Compson); The Baron (Eddie Barry); The Yogi (George French). Scenario written by B. Sharpless. Directed by Horace Davey.

Neal sees in a newspaper a picture of several girls in uncensored one-piece bathing suits, and a caption telling at which beach they disport themselves. Neal and his wife, Betty, go there for a trip. On the boardwalk Neal sees an East Indian who claims to have found the secret of youth. He gives Neal a "shot," and age drops from him and he is a boy again. Back at the hotel the "old woman" is dressing and does not recognize Neal. She indignantly ejects him, so Neal seeks the mermaids. Finding them, he makes a hit and is having the time of his life on the sands.

Meantime, Betty has meet the Yogi who gives the treatment. But Neal has seen her go in and come out, young and beautiful. He accosts her, but she does not know him. The "Baron" sees her and takes her for a ride in a rolling chair, while the "Baron" goes to buy her candy, Neal jumps in the chair and drives off. The chair runs into several men, and these with the "Baron" throw Neal in the ocean. The "Baron" proposes and Betty, feeling the surge of youth, accepts, so they go to the minister.

Neal follows and resolves to save his wife from bigamy. He rushes in and gives battle. The "Baron" is getting the best of him and, shaking him vigorously, when—it is not the "Baron" at all, but his old wife saying: "Come to bed—my feet are cold."

THE BURLESQUE SHOW (Nov. 27).—Tweedledum has to undergo all sorts of difficulties and indignities to approach the object of his affections, as anyone would imagine a tramp would have to do, but he persists in his wooing, making fun for the company all the while. He breaks into the theater while the show is in progress and goes on the stage himself and the only way they can get him off is by turning the hose on him. Unfortunately, they are not able to keep the water playing on Tweedledum alone, but also plays havoc with the rest of the company.

THE YELLOW MENACE (Episode No. 15, "The Ray of Death"—Two Parts—Dec. 11).—As this episode unfolds, we see the utter determination of Ali Singh to subdue those around him by his indomitable will. It is hard to imagine that he could stoop so low as to force his own niece to marry a half-breed opium fiend, and so the wretched Najla Hong Kong Harry, but, because of Najla's several outbreaks of disloyalty and treachedy to Ali Singh's cause, he determines to forever separate her from the refining influence of her American friends, by forcing her to marry Hong Kong Harry.

There is nothing the unhappy girl can do but submit to force, but death intervenes to release her from servitude in a union. Najla is killed during an attack on Ali Singh's last stronghold.

Manning, heading the raid, is held by desperadoes in front of a machine which emits the sight-killing rays of violet hue. He is made partly blind and cannot wholly recover his sight although operated on by the most skilled of specialists. Margaret Bronson and Manning are married despite his affliction and the further pursuit of Ali Singh is carried on by Willard Bronson and the police officials under the leadership of Captain Kemp.

THE SCARLET RUNNER (Episode No. 11—"The Missing Chapter"—Two Parts—Dec. 11).—Christopher Race, conducting a Mrs. Lawson on a tour, begins to realize that his wealthy, but aged employer, is falling in love with him. He decides to give up the job, but changes his mind when Dorothy Herbert appears on the veranda of the hotel. Race for the first time in his varied career finds himself in love. With Dorothy is Madame du Cuesolin and the latter's nephew, Raoul, who is devoted to Dorothy, but tolerated by her only for aunt's sake. Madame realizing that the affair between Dorothy and Christopher is growing serious tells him that Dorothy and Raoul are secretly engaged. Christopher, hurt, thinks Dorothy has played with his affections and decides to go away. On the way from the hotel, Christopher and Mrs. Lawson come upon Dorothy. She has had an accident and is badly hurt. Taken back to the hotel, physicians are called, and it is announced that blood transfusion is all that will save the girl. Raoul is afraid to undergo the operation, Christopher offers himself deciding to make the sacrifice for the girl he loves, though he can never tell her of his affection. He does so, and goes away to forget the missing chapter of his life.

AN ENEMY TO THE KING (Six Parts—Nov. 27).—The cast: Ernanton De Launay (E. H. Sothern); Julie De Varion (Edith Storey); Claude Le Chastre (John Robertson); Guillaume Montignac (Fred Lewis); Henri Le Vicomte de Berguin (Brinsley Shaw); Blaise Tripault (Roland Buskston); Jeanotte (Mildred Manning); Rougin (Piere Coione); King Henry of Navarre (Charles Muzitt); King Henry III (Denton Vane). Directed by Frederic Thomson.

When Julie De Varion's old father is imprisoned for harboring fugitive Hugenots, she goes to the authorities and begs for his freedom, declaring that he only did it out of kindness of heart. They refuse to release her father unless she locates the Catholic's greatest enemy—Ernanton De Launay—who lives in the depths of the forests and who has been vainly sought after four years. Although she knows her father would loathe such methods of release, she accepts the offer and sets off with her lady-in-waiting, Jeanotte, to capture the enemy of the king by means of her womanly beauty.

While stopping at an inn for the night, she is molested by a man who has been sent after her. A stranger, who is also stopping at the inn, comes to her rescue, however. The stranger offers her his protection for the rest of the journey, a kindness which she gladly accepts. He promises to take her to Ernanton De Launay, believing that she merely wishes to meet him. They continue their journey, and on the spur of the moment Julie dispatches her servant back to the officials with the statement that she has located the enemy and for them to release her father.

Ernanton's servant discovers that they are being spied upon, and tells his master, who, now in love with the girl, kills him for daring to cast a reflection on the sweetest flower of womanhood he has ever met. When Julie asks him why he assaulted his servant, he truthfully tells her his reasons. Realizing that she has fallen below his estimation of her, she sends another servant after the bearer of the message in order to prevent it reaching the officials. She will not allow her womanhood to suffer even for her father's freedom.

When she returns to the city, Ernanton follows her and is forced to believe that she is the spy his servant had accused her of being. She seeks confidence to the effect, finds that it was her father's freedom. She is refused, as the understanding was that the enemy was to stand before them, and she has failed in her quest. She can not blame the man who has won her love to them, and frankly states such as the case. Ernanton, who has been standing behind the curtain, now comes forward and tells them that they see the enemy before them—to release the aged father.

Julie is horrified at the way things have turned, and becomes inconsolable. The Huguenots, who have been gaining victory after victory, now enter the city and surround the palace, demanding the release of their leader. The officials are forced to surrender, and Ernanton seeks Julie to tell her of his love and ask her to become his wife.

KLEINE-EDISON-SELIG-ESSANAY.

THE BREAKER (Essanay—Five parts—Dec. 4).—The cast: John Widder (Bryant Washburn); Alice Treadwell (Nell Craig); Piazzia (Ernest Maupain). Directed by Fred E. Wright.

Piazzia, a notorious counterfeiter, is trailed by government detectives. To elude the sleuths, the crook surreptitiously exchanges a portmanteau filled with suprious money for one which John Widder, an eccentric young inventor, carries. There comes to live in the garret room adjoining that of Widder's, Alice Treadwell. She ekes out a miserable existence typing intricate medical treatises.

John, to aid the girl in dire distress, overcomes his scruples and cashes one of the counterfeit bills. He confesses his crime to Alice, and tells her how he came into possession of the counterfeiter's suitcase. Together they seek the counterfeiters. Government agents appear and arrest John. Alice, however, steps forward, orders John's release and the rest of the real crooks. Her orders are obeyed promptly, for, it develops, Alice, instead of being a struggling little typist, is, indeed, one of the secret service agents who had been set to trap the crooks. With $2,000 reward as their home stake, John and Alice are married.

A MESSAGE TO GARCIA (Edison—Five Parts—Dec. 11). The cast: Dolores (Mabel Trunnelle); Lieutenant Rowan (Robert Conness); Jose, Dolores' brother (Herbert Prior); Captain Hernandez (Robert Kegerreis); Captain Sigsbee (Bradley Sutton); Emanuel Garcia (Charles Sutton); The Spanish Ambassador (Paul Everton); Mme. Rosa Gonzalles (Helen Strickland); "Butcher" Weyler (Ray Fairchild); Captain Gonzalles (Bigelow Cooper). Directed by Richard Ridgely.

Spanish soldiers arrive in Cuba and raid the farm of Dolores' father. Father and brother, attempting to protect their home, are arrested and held for court-martial. Captain Hernandez listens to Dolores' plea for their release and taken by her beauty, promises to set them free. His advances to her are interrupted by the sound of a rifle volley. Through the open window, Dolores sees her father fall before the firing squad. For this she kills Hernandez. Running to his home in the mountain fastnesses, she tells Garcia, Cuba's saviour, of her act.

Political unrest finds the Maine anchored in the Harbor of Havana. Jose, Dolores' brother, hiding from the troops who have killed his father, seeks revenge. Prowling about, he enters a subterranean vault where he sees an officer exhibiting to some visitors, the switch which controls the mines laid in the harbor. The officer and his friends depart, and Jose throws the switch which sends the Maine and its crew to the bottom.

Garcia's whereabouts are unknown and President McKinley seeks a man who can deliver a message addressed, General Garcia, Somewhere in Cuba. Of the many who are called, Lieutenant Rowan alone, is chosen.

Mme. Gonzalles, a spy in America, employed by the Spanish government, is instructed to ascertain the attitude of the United States government, after the sinking of the Maine. She discovers that Rowan is sailing for Cuba with a message for Garcia. Determining that the message must not reach its destination she follows Rowan on his trip across, arranging by wire for his arrest upon his arrival in Havana. A soldier [illegible] at a well near Dolores' home, drops a message addressed to Captain Gonzalles, Mme. Gonzalles' brother, informing him that she has arranged for the American's capture. Dolores rushes to Garcia with the news.

On board ship, Mme. Gonzalles makes several efforts to get the message, but each time is foiled by Rowan. He learns of the fate that awaits him and when the boat docks, escapes the pursuing soldiers by jumping overboard. Rowan swims ashore and eludes the pursuing Spaniards. Meeting one of the soldiers single-handed, Rowan overpowers him, exchanging his own wet clothes for the man's uniform. Thus, clad as a soldier of Spain, Rowan sets out to roam the wilderness for Garcia. He meets Dolores who, at first frightened because of the uniform he wears, shows her relief and joy when she learns that he is "Americano." He manages to make her understand that he is seeking Garcia.

"Butcher" Weyler, Governor-General of Cuba, upbraids Mme. Gonzalles for her failure in effecting Rowan's arrest. Fearful lest Weyler wreak his wrath upon her, Captain Gonzalles, her brother, offers to assume personal responsibility for the immediate capture of Rowan.

From the brow of a hill, Rowan and Dolores, sight the pursuing party. Capture is imminent and Rowan entrusts his message to Dolores. They part ways and soon Rowan is made a prisoner. Dolores, however, manages to set him free. Again, they start on their journey, but the pursuers soon take up the trail and before long they find themselves ambushed. All hope seems lost. Dolores parts the bushes and reveals in the distance, the house of Garcia. She returns the message to Rowan and bids him hasten on, while she remains behind with his rifle, holding off the attacking troops.

Rowan delivers the message, but on his return he finds the bullet-riddled body of Dolores, mute witness to her great heroism. As a sacred memory of the one who made the delivery of the message possible, he takes back home with him Dolores' lace scarf. Back in the barracks the boys are rejoicing at Rowan's success. He is greeted amid wild shouts and cheers, and when the lace scarf comes to view his friend turn to him with an all-knowing smile. But the story of Dolores' sacrifice soon makes them understand and when the call to arms is sounded they march away cherishing the name of the unknown "little Cuban."

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE EAGLE'S WINGS (5 Parts—Special Release).—The cast: Mona Wright (Grace Carlyle); Kitty Miles (Vola Smith); Richard Wallace (Herbert Rawlinson); Senator Wright (Charles Hill Mailes); Jefferson Maynard (Rodney Ronous); Orlin Dagore (Charles Gunn); Keron Theris (Albert McQuarrie); James Brown (Malcolm Blevins); Foreign Ambassador (Walter Belasco). Scenario written by Maud Grange. Production supervised by Rufus Steele.

Party lines were obliterated in a Congressional fight upon the question of National preparedness; both law-making branches were engaged in a desperate battle for and against the Maynard Bill. Senator Wright, wealthy manufacturer of pumping machinery, is among those bitterly opposed to the measure. Richard Wallace, foreman of Wright's foundry and in love with Mona Wright, is an enthusiast on the subject of "preparedness," both industrial and militant.

Washington is alive with secret lobbies, but Orlin Dagore and Theris, diplomats representing foreign governments, are leaders of the silent opposition backed by unlimited funds and the ambition of their rulers to prevent influential support from coming to the aid of Maynard in passing his preparedness measure.

Senator Wright is Chairman of the Committee that has in charge the Maynard Bill, discussing the measure before presenting it to the Senate for a vote. Wright has sent Wallace to his son's ranch in New Mexico to install a pumping plant, and when young Wright wires an invitation for his father and sister to visit the Wright ranch, the Senator adjourns the sessions of his committee indefinitely and leaves for the West.

While Wright is on his son's ranch, Mexican bandits made a raid, attacking the Wright ranch and compelling Wright, his son and Wallace to fight for their own lives and to protect the women of the ranch. This attack awakens Senator Wright to the need of a protecting army and he at once wires the Secretary of War to send troops to protect the border. The War Office responds that it has no army to send.

Thoroughly aroused by the necessity for adequate military preparedness Senator Wright returns to Washington, switches to vigorous support of the Maynard Bill and in a fiery speech before the Senate, swings enough of the opposition to support the measure and pass it by a large majority. The diplomatic spies report to their government that although the bill is passed it will take years to realize its requirements in actual practice, and advises that certain demands upon the United States be made forthwith.

Believing that the United States in its unprepared condition must submit to foreign mandates, the diplomats present their demands and an extraordinary condition at once arises. The United States is apparently unprepared. Should war be declared the diplomats believe that this country will be defenseless.

Wallace, through Senator Wright's influence, is called before the President and his Cabinet and there the foundry foreman presents his plans for the co-operation of every American foundry, forge, mill, factory and shop in equipping the Government with arms and munitions. Congressman Maynard is active in furthering Wallace's ideas and at the moment the foreign diplomats believe the United States is at their mercy, the captains of American industry get busy.

Every lathe and wheel that can be applied in any way to manufacturing guns, munitions or equipment for the Army or Navy turns to the work of America's defense. Working day and night factories, foundries and mills turn out weapons and equipment to place in the hands of the Nation's defenders. Seeing that they have lost in their game of "bluff" the foreign diplomats withdraw their demands and America remains at peace with the world. While these important matters are progressing Richard Wallace's love affairs advance propitiously and with the close of the story we see Wallace and Mona happy in the prospect of their coming marriage.

THE SIGN OF THE POPPY (Five Parts—Dec. 4).—The cast: Alvin Marston and Chang (Hobart Henley); Edith Marston (Gertrude Selby); Helen Durant (Mina Cunard); Jerry Marston (Wilber Higby); Rex Durant (Robert Clark); Hop Li (Garland Briden). Scenario by J. G. Alexander. Produced by Charles Swickard.

When Jerry Marston played a sharp business trick on Hop Li, the leader of a Chinese tong, he made the mistake of his life. Jerry never knew what became of one of the Marston twins mysteriously disappearing less than three weeks after the boys were born. So the anxious years passed until his only son, Alvin, had married and gone abroad upon his wedding tour. One evening the butler handed Jerry a package, and at the same time delivered a wireless message telling that Alvin and his bride Edith were arriving on that day's ship from abroad.

Marston opened the package. Before him lay a red poppy, a sign of death sent him by Hop Li. When Alvin and his bride reached the house, they found Jerry dying with the red poppy clasped in his hand. Alvin knew enough of Chinese lore to realize that his father had received the tong's death signal and, thereafter Alvin lived in the dread of a like warning. On their wedding anniversary, Alvin presented his wife with a string of pearls. That night as Edith lay in bed, she experienced what she thought was a frightful nightmare. Alvin, with leering face, seemed to appear at her bedroom window, enter and try to caress her. The next morning she discovered that her pearls were missing.

Alvin assured her that the mystery would soon be cleared up and left for his office. When the man Edith presumed was her husband returned home that evening, his face was dark and leering. When she tried to summon help, he silenced her and then, throwing her pearls at her feet, disappeared. Mystified she summoned Helen and Rex Durant, neighbors. They assured her that Alvin would soon come home safely and as his usual self. When she read in the morning of a crime in Chinatown (the murder of Hop Li, and the burning of his opium den) she connected it with her husband, and his revolting appearance the previous evening. She associated his disappearance with the crime and decided to announce to her friends that her husband had gone to a sanatorium.

Several weeks later Rex and Helen Durant came upon Alvin as he was walking aimlessly through the streets. They took him home and told Edith her husband had escaped from the sanatorium. Continuing the deception, she accepted the man as Alvin, but his strange conduct so mystified her that she was mentally tortured. She was convinced that the man was not her husband, but one who strikingly resembled him. One evening the prison siren sounded a screeching alarm. A prisoner had escaped. The sound was so distressing to Mrs. Marston that she pleaded with her companion to take her into the library where the noise might be less acute. While the man and woman were standing near the fireplace under a great Chinese vase, they were startled by a pistol shot. The bullet hit the vase which broke and part of it fell upon the man's head.

The shock restored Alvin to his normal mental state. The two turned to the library door and saw a man fall to the floor. Rushing to where he lay, Mrs. Marston recognized the man who had appeared at her bedside and who had returned her pearls. The dying man related that he was Alvin's twin brother whom Hop Li had stolen when but an infant, and had brought him up an opium fiend. His hatred finally conquered him, and he committed the vengeful act of murder of which he has been convicted. Immediately after the guards arrived and found the man dead upon the floor. The picture ends happily with Alvin and Edith restored to connubial felicity.

Your Export Trade and 1917—

One of President Wilson's strongest policies has been the increasing of the Export Trade of the United States.

The Republics of Latin America, Spain, Portugal, Porto Rico and the Philippines are completely shut off from their former sources of supply; due to the great European conflict.

France, Italy and Germany are too busy making war to continue catering to the needs of their Latin-American friends. These people are casting eager glances toward the United States for the fulfillment of their many needs.

Are you endeavoring to receive your share of this profitable business?

CINE MUNDIAL—the Spanish Edition of the Moving Picture World—is reaching over 5,000 of your probable prospects each month in these Latin-American countries.

CINE MUNDIAL is celebrating its first anniversary with the January issue. It has done yeoman service for a number of concerns who have taken time by the forelock to erect a permanent, profitable, foreign business through its columns.

CINE MUNDIAL is willing and anxious to serve you in any manner possible, if you are anxious to obtain a satisfactory volume of new business.

WHY NOT START THE NEW YEAR RIGHT by going after this export opportunity that is knocking at your door?

If You Are Engaged In Writing For The Screen

You will find daily use for

TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY

By Epps Winthrop Sargent

This third edition of Mr. Sargent's work has but recently been placed on sale and is right up to the minute in the helpful information it carries. It is utterly unlike the first and second editions, but three chapters—those on Copyright, Censorship, and the Stolen Story—having been reprinted practically without change from the second edition.

In its arrangement this new edition offers a complete graded course of study, adapting it to the use of schools and colleges as a practical text book, rather than as a treatise on the art of writing photoplays.

It will Help You Avoid the Pitfalls!

Greater Success

From the standpoint of cost the best projection lens is a small item, but it is a very important factor in the success of your theatre.

You want to show the most sharply defined and best illuminated pictures, and that is determined by the character of the lens of your projector.

Marlux

lenses have been developed to meet the most exacting demands, give a maximum of steady, sharp illumination and require a minimum of attention.

PROFITABLE PICTURES

"The ..... theatre features good films, but I don't go there often because it's so hard on my eyes." How often this remark is heard.

Don't let this be said of your theatre. It's unnecessary. You can project pictures with such clear, steady smoothness that your audience will be unconscious that light is used at all. Projections can be made to appear so real as to be actually restful to the eyes. This result can be obtained by the use of a

TransVerteR

TRADE MARK

Suffice to say, new and remodeled theatres everywhere are installing Transverters, because they can't be fully equipped without them. The Transverter is a compact, simple, motor generator that meets every requirement for a steady, brilliant, easily controlled light for artistic projection. Guaranteed to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

This will be a big year in the moving picture business. Install the equipment that will enable you to get your full share of this business.

Write for further details at once. You lose money every day you do without a Transverter. Easily installed in any theatre. It means larger crowds, increased popularity, and greater profits.

Don't delay. Write today.

THE LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

In Performance

It can boast of clear, steady pictures on long or short throw, its simplicity is spoken of by all its operators.

On Low Maintenance Cost

You don't find die cast or bronze gears or soft bearings in the MOTIOGRAPH. Every part is made from selected material—parts most subject to wear receive a Special Heat Treatment and with ordinary use the MOTIOGRAPH will outwear all other projectors.

SERVICE

With each MOTIOGRAPH goes a year's guarantee and should the machine with no apparent cause become out of adjustment you may send the mechanism to the factory—it will be put in good working order with not one cent of cost to you.

THE MOTIOGRAPH REPRESENTS THE ESSENCE OF SIMPLICITY, STRENGTH AND DURABILITY.

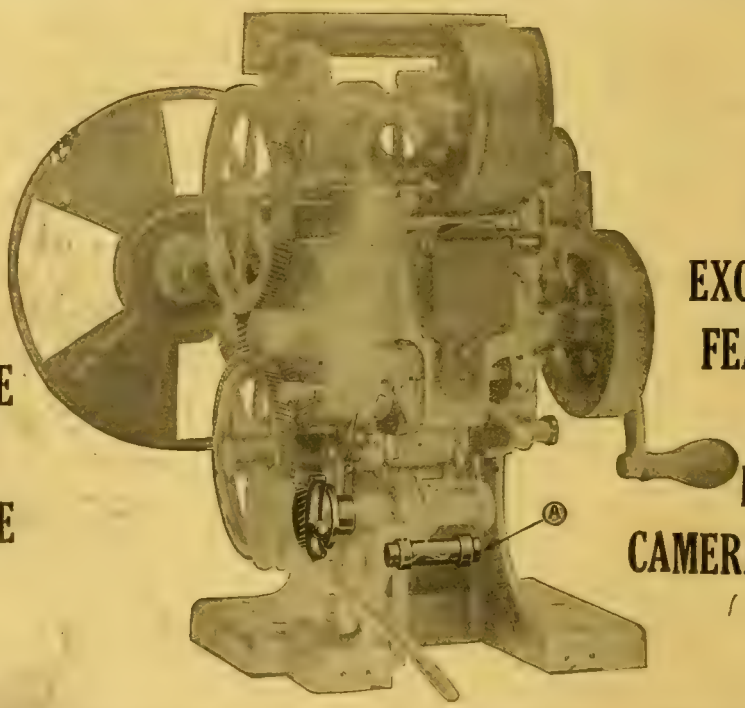
AUTOMATICALLY PREVENTS LOSS OF THE LOWER LOOP

THUS ELIMINATING THE MOST FREQUENT CAUSE OF TROUBLE IN MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION

A DEVICE AS SIMPLE AS IT IS EFFECTIVE



AN EXCLUSIVE FEATURE OF POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH

When the lower loop is lost, the film necessarily rips or tears apart. While making repairs an impatient audience is entertained by a dark screen.

Power's Automatic Loop Setter eliminates this constant source of trouble by continuously maintaining the lower loop.

The loop forms around Roller A. Any slackening of the loop draws the roller upward thus disengaging the take up. The loop immediately assumes normal proportions. The roller springs into its original position and the take up again starts to operate.

YOU SHOULD HAVE OUR CATALOGUE G, WHICH GIVES COMPLETE DETAILS OF MANY EXCLUSIVE FEATURES. MAILED UPON REQUEST.

TO MY PHOTOPLAY FRIENDS IN AMERICA:

I am on the job with Essanay at last. I'm here to stay. Count up my forty-six trunks and you will see I am prepared for some time.

Some people say you can't come back. I have exploded that theory for I am back after two years in the French army corps.

I have a new line of comedies which I believe better than any I have produced. I am jumping right into this work now and will be ready to announce my first release shortly.

I have been reported [illegible]. I am grateful, but I am now feeling very much alive. I expect to sitting at my own autopsy as long as I have laughs left in me. If I ever cease to move the public laugh, I will be willing [illegible] one. But not till then.

I will be with you personally, on the screen, soon.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS"

A THUNDERING DRAMA WITH A THUNDERING MESSAGE

From the virile pen of RUFUS STEELE

If you are looking for a big box-office attraction book this tremendous production—it has the Nation-wide theme and the patriotic appeal that will thrill every American man, woman and child.

Staged with a realistic fidelity that puts to shame the ordinary "spectacular" feature. A drama of National Defense that will make history. A picture that your patrons will go wild about. One of the greatest offerings of the season.

Notice to BLUEBIRD Exhibitors

This magnificent picture is not on the regular BLUEBIRD Program. It was originally intended for a State Rights Production, but it made so strong an impression on the Executives of BLUEBIRD that they paid an enormous sum for it, so that it might be shown under the famous BLUEBIRD brand. You must expect to pay a good price for it because it is a BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION EXTRAORDINARY. It will prove a drawing card at every performance at any admission price. Now ready for immediate booking. Communicate immediately with your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

What are Superpictures?

The term Superpicture is a description-not the name of the product of any company

SUPERPICTURES will be unusual pictures, unusual in quality or subject or length, with unusual stars, unusual timeliness, or unusual box-office value.

SUPERPICTURES will be few in number—perhaps not more than twelve in any one year—chosen by impartial judges from the world's best product, without regard to the name of the producing company and without regard to the cost of the undertaking.

SUPERPICTURES will be confined to individual productions as distinguished from serials, or series, or travelogues, or news weeklies or any other productions of a continuous or semi-continuous nature.

SUPERPICTURES, Inc. will, however, release many important productions of the highest quality in fields that do not fall within the technical limits of the Superpictures definition—for instance, in the serial field—and in all such productions, the greatest care will be used to make the phrase "released by Superpictures" a guarantee of super-quality for that particular kind of production.

SUPERPICTURES, Inc. is not bound by contract to accept Superpictures from any producing company or group of companies—a unique situation in the film business which enables this company to maintain the highest standard that anybody can reach.

YOU can no more stop the on-rushing sweep of BLUEBIRD photoplays, popularity, prestige and profit than you can stem the mighty power of a tidal wave. Progress has been cautious, for the slow growth is the lasting growth, for then it is of a quality of the purest ray serene. BLUEBIRDS have been carefully building for permanence.

Opposing arguments are of no avail. The only answer for the continued prosperity and growth of pictures as entertainment is QUALITY. Advertising may shout itself hoarse—but when all is said and done and the Public (the court of last resort)—sits in deliberation, the verdict will be and already is, "THE PLAY'S THE THING."

The BLUEBIRD policy with Exhibitors is all comprehensive. First, the supreme play—supreme in every detail, then the supreme Star, and then the supreme Nation-wide advertising campaign to acquaint millions of photoplay lovers with what's what in BLUEBIRDS.

Thus with these all-powerful factors working day and night, constantly, continuously, without stop and without end, BLUEBIRDS are rapidly becoming the first choice of the public. There are more than 10,000,000 people reading about BLUEBIRD photoplays every week in the Saturday Evening Post. They are eager to see BLUEBIRD Photoplays. You can share in the hugeness of this campaign and the permanency of BLUEBIRD policy by arranging for bookings now.

Foxfilm Comedies

MR. EXHIBITOR:

THIS is an open letter to you.

YOU know the value of a laugh in your theatre.

YOU know how it stimulates your bank account.

YOU know how hard it has been for you to find real laugh producing comedies.

IF you don't offer a comedy picture each day, you are not giving your patrons a complete program.

IF you don't give them the best comedies made, you are not deserving of their favor.

BEGINNING Jan. 1, 1917, WILLIAM FOX will inaugurate his Foxfilm Comedy service, releasing a two-reel comedy picture each week.

HE will thus supply you with the means of completing your program.

YOU know the FOX reputation and you know that Mr. Fox would never endanger that reputation by releasing comedies unless he knew they were bigger, better, funnier than any other comedies in the market; unless he knew that his comedy producing organization is so good, so reliable and so experienced that he can depend on it for a two-reel laugh producer every week in the year.

BOOK FOXFILM COMEDIES NOW. Your patrons deserve the best.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

DECEMBER 16, 1916

Chaplin's Newest Mutual Comedy Is Entitled "The Rink"

FUNNY as he has been in the past, Charlie Chaplin has devised a wholly new set of pranks for himself in "The Rink." This is the eighth of the Mutual-Chaplin Specials. It is released the week of December 11. It presents Charlie in a wholly new atmosphere. He appears in a skating rink and a cafe. Perhaps you can imagine the fun that results. But you can't—for Charlie alone could originate such delightful fun.

New Comedy Situations.

Naturally, such a unique locale for his comedy as a skating rink enables the inimitable Chaplin to create some decidedly out-of-the-ordinary comedy situations. The laughable situations, alone would make "The Rink" a comedy long to be remembered, but when to this is added the funny "business" that Chaplin originates, the production becomes even more uproarious. "The Rink" is the eighth of the Mutual-Chaplin Specials. It is booking now at all 68 of the Mutual film exchanges. Bookings can also be obtained on the following Mutual-Chaplin Specials: "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," One A. M.," "The Pawn Shop," "The Count" and "Behind the Screen."

Helen Holmes Serial Is Highly Endorsed

Exhibitors all over the country are praising the new Helen Holmes chapterplay, "A Lass of the Lumberlands." All of them are pointing out that it is proving an even greater box-office magnet than they had expected.

The manager of the Theatorium at Richmond, Ind., writes: "It surely is a pleasure to say that the 'Lass of the Lumberlands' is a great serial. It is packing our house both afternoon and evening. We had to close the ticket window several times as we have no standing room to sell, but they go away saying they will come back a little later, and they always come back, too. We thought 'The Girl and the Game' a great money-getter, but this one is even better."

From Aberdeen, S. D., the manager of the Bijou theater writes: "You will pardon me for not answering your wire re extra days' booking on 'Lass of the Lumberlands,' but I desired to know first if business would warrant it. I find that it does, so kindly book me for two days hereafter."

The five-reel Mutual Star Production released this week, is "Lonesome Town." Kolb and Dill are featured.

Seven One-Reel Star Comedies "Uncle Sam's Defenders"

READY FOR RELEASE

Two brand new series of motion-picture stories have just been released by Mutual. One of them is a series of seven one-reel Star Comedies. The other is a series of six single-reel subjects on the topic of Preparedness. Bookings on both of these new series can now be made at any of the 68 Mutual film exchanges.

The Star Comedies, as has been said, are single-reel subjects. Each features a famous comedian or comedienne. Their titles, and the stars who appear in each, are as follows: "Grouchy," featuring Tom Wise, released December 2; "Admirers Three," featuring Ruth Shepley, released December 9; "One Dollar, Please," featuring George Derr, released December 16; "Every Lassie Has a Lover," featuring Alice Dovey, released December 23; "Grimsy, the Bellhop," featuring Alex Clark, released December 30; "The Girl Who Can Cook," featuring Lois Meredith, released January 6; and "The Honeymooners," featuring George Derr, released January 13.

The "Uncle Sam's Defenders" series should have a wonderful appeal at this particular time, when the nation is seriously considering the subject of universal military training. The titles of the series are as follows: "From Civilian to Soldier," "Our Boys at the Border," "A Jack Tar in the Making," "Afloat and Ashore," "Scouts of the Sea and Sky," and "Bulldogs of the Deep." The first is released on Friday, December 8—the others appearing each following Friday.

Nance O'Neill Signs With Mutual for Star Productions

NANCE O'NEILL, famous star of both the screen and the speaking stage, is now a Mutualite. She signed a contract last week calling for her appearance in Mutual Star Productions. She is the second famous actress acquired by Mutual since the announcement of President John R. Freuler that he was going after the very biggest stars in the world. Last week it was Marjorie Rambeau. This week it is Nance O'Neill. Next week it may be any one of half a dozen famous stars with whom negotiations are now being carried on. The Mutual Film Corporation is determined to supply its patrons with feature productions starring the most notable men and women of the age. Announcements of the next few weeks will bear out the statement that it has them.

Brilliant Career.

Few actresses have enjoyed such a brilliant career as Nance O'Neill. For years she has been numbered among the most talented emotional actresses of the speaking stage. Born in Oakland, Cal., her debut was made under the management of McKee Rankin at the A'cazar theater, in San Francisco. Her first New York appearance was made at Weber & Fields', in 1896. She has been starred in such productions as "Madga," "Hedda Gabler," "Leah, the Forsaken," "Camille," "Ingomar," "Lady Teazle," "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "Macbeth." Critics have lauded her in every big city of the land. In pictures she has enjoyed a series of triumphs. She has appeared in Lubin, Fox, Metro and McClure productions. Film patrons know and admire her as much as do audiences accustomed to gather in the $2 houses of the speaking stage.

Has Toured World.

Not only in America is Nance O'Neill a name familiar to every theater patron. She has toured the world, and her engagements in Australia, London, Paris and other cities on the continent added to her fame. Inquiries now at the nearest Mutual Film Exchange will enable the exhibitor to arrange for an early booking of her first production under the Mutual banner.

"Diamond" Sequel Going Big.

Capacity business has been the rule at every theatre showing the $10,000 sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky." Thousands of people have been waiting to see if they won the prize offered for the best sequel, and the only way they can find an answer is on the screen.

Announcing

Another Big Mutual Star

NANCE O'NEILL

THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION has just signed a contract with Nance O'Neill, the celebrated emotional actress, calling for her appearance in a number of new Mutual Star Productions. Miss O'Neill has enjoyed a brilliant career both on the speaking stage and in films. Critics everywhere have praised her wonderful art. She has been starred in such productions as "Madga," "Hedda Gabler," "Leah the Forsaken," "Camille," "Ingomar," "Lady Teazle," "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "Macbeth." In the new series of Mutual Star Productious she will be cast in roles of a highly emotional sort, in which she will have ample opportunity to display her talent. Early in 1917 these Nance O'Neill features will be available thru the 68 exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. Last week the signing of Marjorie Rambeau was announced. This week it is Nance O'Neill. Next week it may be any one of half a dozen famous stars with whom negotiations are now pending. The new Mutual Star policy for 1917 will result in providing exhibitors with productions in which are featured only the most notable stars of the age.

The Front Page

In this startling series of motion picture stories—each complete in itself—real reporters are shown really gathering the front page news which the public reads at its breakfast table. The perils faced by girl reporters in the underworld of a great city are shown in detail. Suave society blackmailers—crafty international spies—shrewd Chinese opium smugglers—terrified murderers—crooked politicians—rich society debutantes—police court habitues—all of these and more are but grist to the mill of the girl reporter. By sheer nerve she meets them all on their own ground—foils their plots—exposes their secrets—makes "copy" of their adventurous lives. The stories are filmed by real artists—produced with care—perfectly photographed. The first story in the series is released Dec. 28th. Each story is in two acts. A new story is released each week for fifteen weeks. Arrange for bookings on this big series NOW!

BLOWN TO ATOMS!

A runaway car-load of dynamite—a downhill grade—a speeding passenger train rushing at 60 miles an hour in the opposite direction. A collision seems inevitable. Death and destruction seem sure to result. Such is one of the thrilling incidents pictured in the latest chapter of "A Lass of the Lumberlands." By skill and quick-wittedness Helen Holmes foils the plot of a conspirator to wreck the Limited. How she does so makes one of the most fascinating pictures ever screened. Theatres playing this sensational chapter-play are packed to the doors. The S. R. O. sign is needed nightly. Startle YOUR patrons with this thriller. Now booking at 68 Mutual Exchanges.

CHARITY

A SENSATIONAL EXPOSE OF CHARITY AND CHILD-WELFARE!

Featuring
LINDA A. GRIFFITH

Miss Caroline E. Hughes, president Child's Welfare Club, Philadelphia:

"CHARITY? is a wonderful play with a very good, strong appeal to the sympathies. It is sure to have a good influence."

Bishop Samuel Fallows, of Chicago, says:

"The play has a distinct value, sociologically speaking. It directs attention to abuses which stand in need of correction."

Mrs. Norton Smythe, president of the Woman's Home Organization of Philadelphia:

"I am strongly in favor of plays, such as this one, which direct the public's thoughts to children's welfare. We cannot have too many of them."

Madame Caroline Le Favre, a lecturer of international repute:

"CHARITY? is a great sermon. It appealed to me strongly because I have been gathering data along the line dealt with in Mrs. Griffith's remarkable drama."

These are some of the opinions of celebrated students of child welfare on "CHARITY?". "CHARITY?" is in seven big acts. As powerful in its appeal as "Damaged Goods." Produced by Frank Powell Productions. Linda Griffith, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis are starred. Available NOW at all Mutual exchanges.

Facts and Comments

AFTER all what a big fine world this is. How it gives us all a chance to get a square deal and test how smoothly it runs along with or without our individual help.

NOW that Sunday picture shows have been declared illegal by a branch of the supreme court having jurisdiction over a certain part of New York state, shall picture theaters merely keep open, as do the soda fountains and the merry-go-rounds, or build "family entrances" like the saloon? Might it not be possible to invent some such subterfuge as the "Raines law sandwich," or must picture theater managers run "blind pigs" and "speak easys"? The situation lends itself to various forms of treatment. Come to think of it, in most houses the main lobby is the real family entrance.

RECENTLY a picture was prohibited in New York city because of its suggestive title. Was it not misleading titles and posters that first brought about censorship of pictures? It has come to be a recognized fact that few pictures are as bad as they are painted on the posters and that pruriently suggestive titles are seldom justified by the scenes of the pictures that follow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., is agitating the subject of children's programs and several meetings have been held looking forward to some scheme for such special programs. Yet it was in Washington that an alert exhibitor—we think of the Pastime theater—who was the first, in all probability, to run a Saturday morning matinee for school children. The Capital seems to be both first and last in line; but the line is lengthening and strengthening, in both quality and popularity, and movements similar to that in Washington are becoming the regular thing. The reason is strong, for it will be the kiddies and their mammas who will stand by the motion picture in its hour of greatest trial.

THE thing that makes real showmanship rare is the difficulty one has in seeing the defect in his theater or show that will cost him money to correct. It takes courage to face the music and it is a deal easier to dream along and complain while one's competitor sees things as they are and is willing to deny himself many things in order to pay for success. It is expensive to redecorate a theater these days, and adequate ventilating plants are not to be had for the asking, either; but an exhibitor who is too much afraid of getting stuck on the harbor shoals will never get out to sea nor bring a rich cargo home.

THE Essanay scheme of announcing the running time of a film instead of its length is a step in the right direction, but we are afraid that some operators are not paying attention. The speeded picture is an injustice to the actors, a hurt to the director and an outrage upon the public. The announced running time is the first step. The next should be the universal adoption of this practice and refusal to rent to theaters that materially shorten the running time. The daily press could help much by giving publicity to the proper time schedules.

DEBARRING the reporters after having voted to admit them and after having held three open sessions and a part of a fourth will not add to the public respect for the deliberations of the committee investigating the charges of Fleischman & Goldreyer against Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The exhibitors of the United States and Canada, and especially those who are members of the League, have a right to know what, if any, evidence may be brought out to substantiate the allegations that Mr. Ochs has prostituted his high office for personal gain.

What is there to conceal?

AN INTERESTING address on the question of Sunday motion picture shows will be found on another page of this issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. It was written by Gustavus A. Rogers and was the subject of a lecture delivered by him at the College of the City of New York recently. Mr. Rogers is an attorney of prominence in New York and has given considerable attention to the relation of the law to the motion picture, and in his discussion of the question he gives reasons which, in his belief, will influence the high court judges to uphold the right of the people to attend Sunday motion picture shows.

Star Exactions

By Louis Reeves Harrison

LET us use the name "Abra" as the brand of production to be made famous by superior quality. The Abra brand must eventually mean something to exchange men and exhibitors if there is to be any such thing as good will in the business of making and marketing moving pictures. Without a relatively high position no producer can have more than a temporary success and an unstable value which may vanish at any time, as it recently has in the case of old and seemingly well-established concerns. What is the stock of any motion picture concern in the country really worth if it has nothing more back of it than assets that could be turned into cash and an organization ready to do business?

The few concerns which have aimed steadily at the establishment of an Abra brand are not herein referred to except as they have yielded to a policy against their own good judgment. Many such producers have started determinedly on the right lines, but have had confidence in their own judgment shaken by a new condition which is bound to grow more burdensome the longer it is continued. This condition has not been brought about by the exchanges, nor by the exhibitors, nor by the people who attend the picture shows. Producers themselves are responsible.

Almost from the very moment that the attractive visualization of stories became possible, a story-loving public of many millions flocked to the little theaters and created a demand beyond the power of producers to supply. Great fortunes were made, not because the demand was adequately met, but because it was always far in excess of the supply. There are even producers modest enough and sensible enough to admit that this is the plain and unvarnished truth. Manna fell on their heads.

These enormous and unexpected profits were demoralizing. Men were in the business to make money and they were getting it so fast that appeals made in these columns week after week for improvement and progression were not heeded. Even these editorials excited antagonism. What business was it of mine to point out a business policy to those who were in the game and rivaling the richest gold mines in the matter of profits. Men were getting rich so fast that their egotism went up to the boiling point—they imagined that they were creating the demand.

More careful judgment has since been applied, but it has been influenced by the necessity of filling a program. If an exhibitor changes his features so many times a week he must have so many hundred new releases a year. Hence the driving process. Authors must write masterpieces in a week. Directors must hustle day and night and all with an extravagant lack of system. Big features are hurried to completion with the usual result of too much haste. There was, and still is, a wretched incompleteness, like that of a badly printed book, in the visualization of these stories, obvious to critic and public.

All the weaknesses which result from rush production may be pointed out by the critic—the public has no such chance. In front there has long been recognition of mediocre story structure and treatment and there was no Abra brand to which people could turn with assurance of enjoying a superior quality of story. The story did not count with the producer—how could it with the audience? Production was the whole thing. Production of what? Production, when applied specifically to a work of art carries to the senses, particularly in the case of an art of expression something of value or interest to be adequately expressed.

Let us produce something. No matter what it is, let us go to work and photograph it. Production is everything. Spend money freely in that department and in every other department, but as little as possible on what is produced. What a brilliant idea! How could any Abra brand be built up, as is every business of sound principles, by any such methods? Years ago one house rose to eminence through turning out pictures superior to the great mass. If the pictures of that brand were shown on Wednesday, exhibitions were crowded to the doors that day. The producers made many millions, grew indifferent, refused to recognize artistic elements in their organization, and they are now merely a remembrance of former glory.

There have been attempts since that time to establish a brand, especially by talented directors, and with partial success, but the most important element of production, the thing to be produced, has not yet been given full consideration. People in front have grown weary of the independability of this or that brand of photoplay and have looked about them for something on which to fasten attention. One thing always good in a production is the attractive personality of this or that unusually good interpreter of the pictured story.

The superior interpreter of a story, especially when possessing an engaging personality, is now and always will be of high value. That fact is strongly established. There is nothing new or startling about it. It is not my purpose to dim the luster of any shining star, but rather to give that star bigger and better opportunity. Besides, the star has a right to coin money out of the helplessness of the producer just as the producer did out of the helplessness of the public.

The moving picture public has been compelled to depend upon the player rather than the play; the star exacts a large salary instead of a small royalty, as authors do, and the producer now finds that it is not his brand which counts—his concern is practically valueless, having no intrinsic worth of its own, if he is abandoned by his stars. No matter if he turns out an Abra brand of the most entertaining and interesting kind, he cannot dispose of it to any large and profitable extent unless he pins a star on the cast.

It is not too late to remedy this dangerous condition. Let us chase around and find some screen authors. Where are they? It is now generally recognized that novelists seldom make good dramatists, and dramatists rarely good novelists—each art has its own creative and constructive methods, but, as yet, no attempt has been made to nourish and encourage those writers for the screen who have shown an aptitude for the work. Some of those who have succeeded are having all creative talent crushed out of them as hack writers for small salaries; while others are occasionally permitted to write seven-reel masterpieces in five days, the height of absurdity even from a physical standpoint.

Let stars ascend to lofty heights and shine as brightly as they can, but if this business of production is not composite, depending upon a harmony of effort on the part of author, director and interpreter, if it must depend entirely upon the actor, he cannot be blamed for exacting such a proportion of the profits as he actually represents in the assets of a concern engaged in production. From the controlling attitude, we may expect to see, in due course of time, producers as poor, neglected and humble as the author.

Something for Nothing

UNDOUBTEDLY exhibitors are no different from people in other lines of business in their readiness to consider any scheme that seems to promise something for nothing. Judging from the complaints received at this office from all over the country, we should say that theater men neglect very few opportunities to try out the plan of any promoter who presents any kind of a proposition along the line of a beauty contest for a solid silver spoon, or anything that offers to increase his patronage at no cost to himself.

It does seem strange that business men will listen to the glowing descriptions of these promoters and enter into their schemes without knowing of their responsibility as to whether the solid silver spoon will be forthcoming for so many green tickets or whether any of the obligations of the promoters will be met. The warnings that we have published in response to numerous complaints along this line should convince anyone of the necessity of a thorough investigation before entering into any of these schemes.

One of the worst phases of the whole proposition is that it is usually the theater patrons that are disappointed and who, as a consequence, carry a grudge against the theater management. It is not an easy matter to explain the failure of the promoters to live up to their agreement and it is quite safe to state that the majority of these popularity or beauty contests and premium and gift schemes result in dissatisfaction and an actual loss of patronage far more often than otherwise.

In the same category might be placed the many plans evolved from time to time which promise exhibitors relief or better conditions under the guise of stock promotions for exhibitors' co-operative film manufacturing or film renting with their exaggerated statements of yearly saving and large profits. Advancing capital with which the other fellow may do business is a mighty poor business investment, whether the plan is an advance deposit, a payment for stock, a promise of a large share of mutual profits or an unearned bonus of any sort.

We venture to say that there is not a single individual who has been connected with the film industry for the past few years and who has any knowledge of actual conditions who does not realize that the same laws of supply and demand operate in the moving picture industry exactly the same as they do in any other line of business. Again, anyone who is at all familiar with present conditions is well aware of the fact that there is perhaps even more keen competition in this field at present, both manufacturing and exhibiting, than can be found in any other industry. Why is it that so many connected with the business for years are still ready to listen to any Moses who comes along and offers to lead them out of the present difficulties into a land of large profits and quick returns by any kind of a scheme that can be supported by a plausible "line of talk?" Beautifully engraved stock certificates may be printed at so much per thousand like the colored inserts in our advertising pages and in themselves they have far less earning capacity.

Glowing promises on the part of those who have never yet demonstrated any particular interest in the welfare of the exhibitor as such may reasonably be discounted, especially when past performances show no interest beyond that of personal profit and advancement and the development of purely personal business schemes. Under the present unsatisfactory conditions in the industry in many sections of the country what opportunities are presented for a strong organization representing exhibitors over the whole country. A real representative organization and one including at least a fair proportion of the bigger men in the exhibiting field whose investments run into very considerable figures would be welcomed by every branch of the industry. Such an organization, however, should be too large and representative of the exhibiting interests in every part of the country to be used other than for the best interests of the whole. A word to the wise, ORGANIZE.

Ignorant Criticism

OUR [illegible] space to these excellent example of the mental calibre of those who in these days still hold such unwarranted views of moving pictures. The second letter is also an excellent example of the temperate and dignified yet forceful "come back" that every friend of the pictures should be prepared with.

Treasurer Oldt and the Third Street Theater Company of Easton, Pa., are to be congratulated on their record of co-operation and interest in local welfare and betterment. It is this sort of attitude on the part of exhibitors everywhere that will do most to overcome any local agitation for censorship or special regulation that may spring up. Exhibitors like every other business man, have everything to gain by cultivating and retaining the good will of their fellow townsman. It is also the most unanswerable reply to unjust criticism.

Bangor, Pa., November 27th, 1916

Mr. Chas. F. Oldt.,
Easton, Pa.

[illegible] language I usually use along that line. It isn't half strong enough, but I cannot find every word of it for I am [illegible] are running the shows and those who go to them, are going with the foes of God and the church. I don't know any other institution to-day that is doing more to hinder the work of God and the church, than the Moving Picture shows.

You never find anyone engaged in that line of business who makes [illegible] church and even be a member of one, but he hasn't much use for the religion of the Lord Jesus. If the Preacher is true to his ordination vows and strikes out against such a thing, he gets out of the church, or gets the preacher out of it. You never find the patrons of such places very good prayers or attenders at the prayer meetings or ever trying to win others to the Lord Jesus.

But there is no use my arguing with you about it, for you are in it for the money you can get out of it, and whether it is wrong or right, you'll stay right there, but you can depend on me doing all I can everywhere to keep the young from frequenting such places. I am against you and your business, for you and it are against God and the Church. I would lose the favor of God if I gained yours or those with you in that sort of business. Believe me,

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) WM. NICHOLSON.
Easton, Pa., November, 28, 1916.

Rev. Wm. P. Nicholson,
Bangor, Pa.

Dear Sir—I beg to acknowledge your favor of yesterday in answer to my inquiry as to your reference to the management and patrons of Motion Picture theaters as "foes of God." I note that you say it is useless to argue with me as I am in the business for the money I can get out of it. I might reply to your statement by saying I doubt if you would pursue these evangelistic activities unless you made some money out of them. Am I not right? I think we are about "fifty-fifty" when it comes to the money end.

Your statements were a great surprise to me, and I can only think they are made because you are not familiar with our business or the class of people to whom we cater. They are without a doubt greatly superior in intelligence and character to the majority of those you draw to your meetings. For example in this city we recently gave invitations to all ministers of all denominations and over three fourths of them attended. When you state that we never do anything towards winning others to the Lord Jesus you show a lamentable lack of information as to what the film industry has done along this line. I venture to say that the Picture entitled, "The Life of Our Saviour," has educated millions of people as to His life and made them know many things about it which they never knew before. Last year on one occasion we showed the picture in this theater for the benefit of a local church. The receipts were $530, and we took $30 to cover our necessary house expenses and gave $500 to the church. Furthermore you may not know that every picture shown in the state of Pennsylvania has been passed by the National Board of Censorship, a large number of which are clergymen of the highest standing.

A year ago when a revival campaign was about to be started we donated the use of our theater two days to the organization com-[illegible]

I don't presume any of my statements will change your opinion of an industry which now ranks fourth in the land, but which is your main opposition in attracting the public, but I will say that I can hardly conceive how a real sincere Christian could compose the insulting and libelous letter which was addressed to me and signed by you.

I shall see to it that it is given national publicity in our trade journal.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) CHARLES F. OLDT, Treasurer.

Natianal Association Has Busy Week

Many Meetings of Sub-Committees Held and Considerable Business Transacted— Board of Directors Also Holds Extended Session

THANKSGIVING WEEK was a busy one for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. There were meetings of the Board of Directors and meetings by several of the various classes into which the membership of the Association has been divided. They met morning, afternoon and evening, stopping only for a session with Marse Turkey on Thanksgiving Day.

Probably the big meeting was that of the Board of Directors on Wednesday, Nov. 29. It convened at 11 o'clock and lasted till quite late in the afternoon. Present at this session were President Wm. A. Brady, Director General of the World Film Corporation, who presided, and the following directors: William L. Sherrill, President Frohman Amusement Corp., New York; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players Lasky Corp.; Maurice A. Choynski, Newberry theater, Chicago; Thomas Furniss, Brunswick Amusement Company, Duluth, Minn.; Frederick J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Peter J. Jeup, Detroit, Mich.; Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; Samuel H. Trigger, Tremont theater, New York; A. P. Tugwell, Los Angeles, Cal.; Donald J. Bell, Bell & Howell Co., Chicago, Ills.; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Kodak Company, New York; J. H. Hallberg, New York; Hiram Abrams, Paramount Pictures Corp., represented by Kenneth Hodkinson; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph V-L-S-E, Inc., New York; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Corp., New York; Richard A. Orwland, Metro Pictures Corp., New York; Fred J. Beecroft, New York Dramatic Mirror, New York; F. C. Gunning, Times Building, New York; Arthur James, Metro Pictures Corp.

Probably the most interested action taken was the appointment of a committee consisting of Wm. A. Brady, P. A. Powers, Arthur James, Samuel H. Trigger and Louis L. Levine to plan out and assemble the series of all star films to be shown in the theaters of the country for the profit of the Association. The manufacturers who are members of the Association have offered to furnish cutouts from all their great pictures, and these will be assembled in five or more reels, each complete in itself and showing "How the Stars Make Love," "Great Facts of Great Stars," "Funny Scenes with the Funny Stars," "Movies stunts and Daredevil Feats," "Great Thrills," etc. These reels will be rented to exhibitors and will be shown all over the country. It was decided that the regular meetings of the Board of Directors should be held quarterly, the first to be held in March, 1917, on a date to be set by President Wm. A. Brady.

The board voted to join the National Fire Protection Association, and was extremely interested in the verbal report of the meeting of the Fire Prevention Regulation and Insurance Committee which was held on Tuesday. Executive Secretary Elliott was appointed as a committee of one to confer with the National Association and Manufacturers regarding the co-operation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with it in its plans for National education for the conservation of all the industrial resources in the United States. The immediate request of the manufacturers is that the set of ten slides containing the text of some of their educational posters be used in the motion picture theaters of the country.

A resolution of the Authors' League of America regarding the Sunday closing question was read and received with appreciation. The text of this resolution was as follows:

WHEREAS, The Executive Committee feels that a closing of motion picture houses on Sundays affects the interests of many members of the Authors' League who are employed in writing for motion pictures, and

WHEREAS, In the opinion of the Executive Committee the Sunday opening of motion picture houses has not lowered community morals but has rather tended to improve them, now therefore be it

RESOLVED, That it is the sense of the Executive Committee that the Author's League of America, Inc., should exert its full influence against Sunday closing of motion picture houses.

The Authors' League was the first of the big organizations interested in the industry to affiliate with the National Association.

Charters of affiliation were issued to the Slide Manufacturers' Association and to the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc. The secretary also informed the directors that similar action was about to come from Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and that other organizations of a relative position in the industry would soon be forthcoming. The report of Treasurer J. E. Brulatour showed an exceedingly prosperous condition in the Association's treasury indicating that the organization work has produced very substantial returns in a financial way, and that the Association is taking care of itself thoroughly.

Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott's report showed that in the brief life of the National Association its membership has increased to twenty-three producing companies, with prospects of having at least ninety per cent. representation by the first of the year. There are ten distributors, seventeen of the most important supply and equipment houses, and over one hundred individual members.

Meeting of Fire Prevention Committee.

The committee on Fire Prevention Regulations and Insurance held its meeting on Tuesday, Nov. 28. Upon its recommendations the National Association has officially joined the "safety first" movement. Working on the basis of investigations made by J. F. Ancona, expert of the Eastman Kodak Company, the Association will endeavor to induce the makers, distributors and exhibitors of film to do two things. (1) Clean up their establishments and adopt all basic principles of care and caution, and (2) to follow out to the letter all local regulations of city fire departments and insurance companies.

The committee is working toward an ultimate adjustment of insurance rates on film and buildings where film is kept, but the decision yesterday was to get the industry above criticism. The losses due to film fires have been surprisingly small in proportion to the vast total of money invested in the business, but the insurance rates are high, due to the apparent risks.

The general counsel of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is to speak on December 9 at the Safety First Convention in Baltimore, and at that time the first official action of the motion picture people will be in the form of recommended regulations for the motion picture industry.

Meeting of the Producers' Branch.

At the meeting of the Producers' Branch, held Tuesday evening, Nov. 28, the question of the relation of the producers and the stars was taken up. The subject came up on the case of a star whose contract had expired while he was in the middle of a picture, and who had refused to finish the picture, which action had cost the producing company $10,000. After discussion the following resolution bearing on this special case was adopted:

RESOLVED, That it is the sense and feeling of the Producers' Committee of the National Association, that in the event an artist commences performance on a photoplay, it is for the best interests of the industry that such artist, irrespective of any time limitations in his contract, should finish the production in which he is engaged, and in the event that such artist does not finish the production, such artist be deemed to be hostile to the best interests of the industry.

Following up this determination it was resolved to establish a bureau of information which will issue reports similar to those of established commercial agencies, which reports will be confidential and open to members only.

On the question of State Rights the producers committee adopted this resolution:

RESOLVED, That is is the sense of the Producers' Committee of the National Association, that it would be hostile to the best interests of the motion picture industry for a purchaser of territorial rights of a motion picture photoplay to rent or lease a photoplay for which such limited rights were leased or purchased, without the territory covered by the contract of such distributor, and it is further the sense of this committee that any infractions of such contracts will be reported to the committee as a whole or its secretary.

This phase of the work will also come under the jurisdiction of the bureau of information.

Question of Advance Deposits.

The vexed question of the advance deposits now required of exhibitors by many of the leading distributing companies had its innings at the meeting of the Producers', Distributors' and Exhibitors' Branch, on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 28, and wound up on Wednesday after the close of the meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association. After a general discussion, pro and con, it was agreed that the Exhibitors' Branch, which is made up of the membership of the Exhibitors' League of America, formulate what it holds would be a fair plan to be submitted in writing to the distributors.

President William A. Brady presided at both meetings, and there were also present the following: Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, William L. Sherrill, President of Frohman Amusement Corp.; Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary; William M. Seabury, General Cousel; Samuel H. Trigger, Louis L. Levine, Charles H. Phillips, Peter J. Jeup, [illegible] J. Rembusch, Frederick J. Herrington, William J. Sweeney, Louis H. Frank, Lee A. Ochs, Alfred Hamberger.

In the course of the meeting, President Brady offered as a suggestion a plan for incorporating the Exhibitors' League of America so that it would become a financially responsible organization, when it could then guarantee the accounts of its members to the distributors of films. President Brady felt that this would not only solve the difficulty of the distributor, but would furnish strength to the Exhibitors' League, which would result in bringing every desirable exhibitor into its organization to the advantage of the entire industry. The exhibitors felt that this plan was not immediately practicable.

The Transportation Question.

At meeting of the transportation committee, held on Friday, Dec. 1, William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, presided, and directors of the Association from all over the country including the Pacific slope were present. Complaints regarding delayed C. O. D. Shipments, destruction of posters during transport, belated deliveries, red tape inapplicable to film shipments, etc., were received and remedies discussed. The committee instructed Executive Secretary Elliott to take up with the express companies in the name of the National Association the establishment of special film shipment departments, with a view to putting into actual effect remedies for the special needs of the industry which are already realized by most of the companies, but can now be only partially effective.

The National Association will work to secure the adoption by the express companies of a uniform rule covering screen examination of C. O. D. films. The proposed plan is for the consignee to deposit one-half the amount of the C. O. D. with the express agent during the screen examination.

The red tape connected with the yellow "Caution" labels on film cases in shipment will also be unravelled. The National Association will endeavor to get the express companies to agree to provide all their agents with these labels, which they will replace on the cases in case the originals are damaged or destroyed.

The suggestion was also made by Chairman Sherrill that the Association take the initiative in getting traffic representatives of all the express companies to join in a conference committee with a view to establishing some sort of clearing house through which the film men can work.

Organization of Advisory Committees.

Interesting reports were made to the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at its meeting on November 29, on the organization of new Advisory Committee. Both Judge A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles, and Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, reported that the only difficulty they had had was due to their own misunderstanding of the regulations and dues as applied to branch exchanges.

The schedule of entrance fees to the National Association calls for $500 from national distributors and $50 from exchanges, while the entrance fee of individuals is $2. The question arose both in Los Angeles and Boston as to whether the branch exchange of a national distributor was required to pay the $50 in addition to his company's $500.

It has been ruled by the Board of Directors that the initiation fee and dues paid by national distributors gave membership to all its branch exchanges, and that employes of such exchanges need pay only the $2. The $50 entrance fee was for independent or state exchanges, and was never meant to apply to "inside" exchanges.

In spite of this misunderstanding, now cleared up, the organization of the Advisory Committees has progressed most favorably.

It was voted that all information of possible value regarding the National Association should be furnished the directors, with an idea of their using it according to their own judgment in organizing their territory.

The Board of Directors was informed that Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, and Wallace Thompson, publicity director, would visit Boston within a few days for the purpose of organizing in the New England territory another advisory committee.

Censorship Questions.

Representation of the motion picture interests before State legislatures where the question of censorship will come up this winter will be in the hands of the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. This was decided at the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association on November 29. The situation was brought to the attention of the board by William M. Seabury, general counsel, who made a report of his investigation of the situation and recommended the steps advisable at this time.

Not only will proposed censorship be handled, but a well defined plan was worked out for the states where censorship now exists with a view to procuring repeals this winter. This plan will include co-operation between the National Association, the Exhibitors' League of America and the League's state branches.

Association By-laws Issued.

The by-laws of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the schedule of entrance fees and annual dues, and a list of officers and directors have just been issued in booklet form.

At the same time, another folder with reprints from newspapers was issued. This time it covered the work done by the National Association in the fight for Sunday motion picture shows. The new folder is headed "Sunday Sunshine for 3,000,000 Motion Picture Patrons," and the imposing array of news articles and editorials in New York newspapers is witness to the work which the National Association has done so far.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of December 3 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Lenore Ulrich at the Strand.

"THE ROAD TO LOVE" is the title of the photodrama which was shown at the Strand theater for the week of Dec. 3, with Lenore Ulrich in the principal role. The action of the play takes place in picturesque Algeria, and Miss Ulrich acts the character of Hafsa, the beautiful daughter of wealthy old Sidi Malik. The play was produced by Oliver Morosco, who has given it elaborate settings and surrounded the clever star with a cast of rare balance and excellence. Colin Chase, Lucille Ward, Estelle Allen, Alfred Vosburgh, Herschel Mayall, Joe Massey and Alfred Longsworth have important roles. Another chapter of Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," a new comedy, and the Strand Topical Review news pictures were also shown.

Andrew Aernzer and Nadive Laget were the soloists.

Douglas Fairbanks at the Rialto.

The Rialto introduced a novel entertainment in the form of an all-comedy bill, headed by Douglas Fairbanks in "The Matrimaniac." The latest of the Triangle's Fairbanks features was supplemented by "Shanks and Chivalry," a Vitagraph burlesque on the E. H. Sothern picture "An Enemy to the King," and by the humorous classic, "One Round O'Brien," revived for the occasion. "The Matrimaniac" is one of the most amusing stories which the Triangle studios have turned out in many months. Constance Talmadge makes a capital team-mate for Fairbanks, in carrying out the hilarious adventures of the elopement which forms the thread of the story.

The topical digest and an educational film completed the picture features.

Jenny Dufan and Vicente Ballester headed the musical portion of the program.

"War Brides" at the Broadway.

The run of "War Brides," the Herbert Brenon eight-reel feature picture, with Nazimova and the excellent cast, continues at the Broadway. This powerful screen play is one of the finest examples of the motion picture art, and is appealing to large audiences.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-First Street theater, four new pictures were shown Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dorothy Gish in "The Children of the Feud" and a Keystone Comedy were featured.

On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Lillian Gish in "The Children Pay" and a Mack Sennett comedy were the picture attractions.

JEAN STUART IN ART DRAMAS PRODUCTION.

Jean Stuart has been engaged by the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation to play an important part in that company's forthcoming Art Drama "The Rainbow," in which Dorothy Bernard is being starred, and in which Robert Conness has the leading male part.

Believes Court Will Uphold Sunday Pictures

Gustavus A. Rogers, of Wide Experience in Motion Picture Litigation, Says Any Other Step Would Be Retrogressive

LECTURING at the College of the City of New York on the evening of Tuesday, November 28, former Assistant Corporation Counsel Gustavus A. Rogers, who has been retained to argue the Sunday motion picture case before the New York State Court of Appeals, delivered a scholarly review of the legislation associated with the showing of motion pictures on Sunday. Mr. Rogers, who has in past years represented exhibitors in their battles against hostile measures as well as manufacturers in trade litigation, believes the Court of Appeals will uphold the right of the people to attend motion picture shows on Sunday. He calls attention to the fact that any other view by the Court would mean that New York, instead of advancing, would be going back to the reactionary days of Europe fifty years ago. Mr. Rogers said in part:

It is the most curious and anomalous situation that while it is legal in the 2nd other section of the State to give motion picture exhibitions on Sunday, in other sections, where judges of the Supreme Court and Appellate Division have taken a different view, it is not legal. What is criminal in Albany is not criminal in New York City, and this strange disparity in the law exists after the people, not only of this county but practically of the civilized world, have reached a pretty definite conclusion that the motion picture is a legitimate and proper part of the Sunday rest and recreation.

In my opinion, after a careful survey of the law throughout the country, there is not the slightest doubt but, that the Court of Appeals will uphold the right of the people to attend motion pictures on Sunday, and the doctrine, as established by the court in New York City, particularly in the Hemleb case, in which Judge Gaynor wrote the opinion, will be accepted as the law rather than the recent decision of the Third Department, in which Mr. Justice Hooker wrote for the court.

Any other view held by the Court of Appeals would mean that New York, instead of being in the vanguard of progressive judicial decisions, would be going back to the reactionary days of Europe, fifty years ago. The entire tendency of Europe, as well as this country, has been to regard the motion picture as an educational and important method of public expression, and for New York to adopt an attitude of mind so entirely opposed to the tendency of the times would be worse than revolutionary.

An interesting analogy might be drawn between the attitude of mind of the people who would abolish the motion picture on Sunday and that of the ruling powers in Europe in the Middle Ages, when playing cards were first introduced in Europe in the thirteenth century. Playing cards, as we all know, were invented in the East and were founded on the game of chess, known as the four kings. When they were introduced into Europe they became so popular with the people that various German towns passed ordinances, between the years 1400 and 1438, forbidding their use by the people. In 1440, however, a concession was made, allowing the people to use playing cards on holidays. In England Parliament passed a law forbidding their use by common people except on holidays. In other words, the fact that the people had found something that amused them was a sign that they had been lured away from virtue by the devil.

In the first place it should be thoroughly understood that in 1908 this entire question was thrashed out in the Appellate Division of the Second Department, and Judge Gaynor, sitting in Brooklyn, writing for the court, handed down a decision in which he declared that the giving of a motion picture show on Sunday was not a violation of the statute; that the Legislature had not included in its provisions anything specifically against the motion picture or a motion picture exhibition, and therefore it was not prohibited.

As a result of that decision, and other decisions by Mr. Justice Davis and Mr. Justice Greenbaum in the Supreme Court in New York County, and of Justices Carr and Stapleton in Brooklyn, it was assumed to be the law in New York, excepting in a few sections where up-State judges had taken a contrary view, that motion pictures could be legally exhibited; with the result that practically throughout the country the example of New York was followed, and that in many places, where there had been a feeling against the motion picture theater being open on Sunday, that feeling passed away, and the example of the decisions of the First and Second Divisions was reflected in the legislation and judicial decisions of every State in the Union. New York blazed the way, and the consequence is that today, throughout the country, the people have become accustomed to regarding the motion [illegible] and beneficial Sunday amusement

Mr. Rogers said that, aside from any question of precedent and public opinion, there is the strongest reason why legally the Court of Appeals must uphold the right of having motion picture exhibitions on Sunday.

There is no prohibition in our statute against the operation of a motion picture show on Sunday. There is nothing in the constitution of the State which prevents it; as a matter of fact, all that the law does is to recognize Sunday as being a religious day, and it is because of this that the Legislature has undertaken to inhibit the transaction of certain secular business on Sunday. It is the accepted law of the land that the Legislature prohibits and inhibits only those things against which it legislates. This is particularly true of all penal statutes. There is nothing in the statute which affects theaters, that prohibits the giving of a motion picture show on Sunday, for the things which are prohibited are stated. This is Section 2152 of the Penal Law, Section 1181 of the Greater New York charter as amended by the Board of Aldermen and passed in 1908.

There is only one other statute, therefore, which can be applied to the situation. It is the statute which generally prohibits public sports and public exhibitions on Sunday. This is Section 2145 of the Penal Law, formerly Section 265 of the Penal Code. That Section distinctly states what is prohibited and the motion picture shows as such are not in any manner mentioned; in fact, when that statute was originally passed, in 1881, the motion picture show, or exhibition, was unknown. It is of course obvious that the Legislature could not have intended to legislate against a form of exhibition which was then non-existent.

Assuming that balloon ascensions were prohibited by the law of a community, it could not very well be argued that a penal statute, which contained merely the provision as to balloons, enacted before aeroplanes were invented, also prohibited an aeroplane making a commercial trip on Sunday.

The rule of construction of a penal statute is, under the doctrine of ejusden generis, that only those things are considered embraced which are either specifically referred to in the particular cases. Therefore, by the ordinary process of elimination, it may readily be assumed that the Legislature had not included, nor did it intend to include, the motion picture exhibition. The statement may be accepted that there was no person in the Legislature wise enough to conceive or advance the idea that in 1907, sixteen years later, we would have motion picture exhibitions.

While, as I have said, I have not the slightest doubt as to what the outcome will be, I realize there is going to be attendant upon this discussion a great furor over the sanctity of the Sabbath, and that under this cloak there will be a recrudescence of the movement to not only prohibit motion pictures on Sunday but to censor them as well; and in this connection I believe clear-thinking people should remember that the censoring of either the film or the theater or the press is a dangerous innovation in a country that has never tolerated it, especially in view of the fact that in king-ridden Europe the censorship was slowly passing away when the present war broke out, and that of course changed conditions.

The trouble with so many of our people—good people but superficial—is that they are viewing this new industry in much the same way the Lilliputians viewed Gulliver when he arrived in their country. Their first thought seems to be to tie it up with all kinds of laws, a habit of mind which I might say characterizes our day, and which tends to substitute legislation for thought. The laws on the statute books would take care of any criminal offense, and there never was any reason why the ordinary procedure should be put aside in order to permit the capricious judgment of some one person to be exercised, with the result that the burden of proving himself innocent, contrary to our fundamental principles, will be placed upon the man who is charged with the dereliction.

In no more than half a dozen States in this country has the experiment of censorship been made, and I think it can be safely said that in those it is not a success. In the militarist countries of Europe there was naturally an endeavor to censor the motion picture, but in the more liberal countries it was assumed that the penal laws would take care of any offenses that might be committed.

This much must be understood, that if the movement to have a Federal censorship of the film should ever turn out to be successful, there would be absolutely no reason why it should not be followed by a successful attempt to censor the press. The main ground that has been urged for justification of the movement to censor the film is that Congress is given the right to regulate interstate commerce and that the film passes from one State to another in the course of exhibitions.

If this should be held good law, then by the same right Congress would be able to regulate the press and newspapers, which also pass from one State to another; for, despite the fact that the Constitution declares that the freedom of the press shall not be abridged, the Federalist Party, under John Adams, passed a sedition law, and for several years arrested and placed in jail a number of editors under its provisions.

By the time that the constutionality of a censorship act could be tested, thousands of people would be made to suffer. And after all, it can easily be seen what an analogous situation would arise if a newspaper should be allowed to print a cartoon in its paper, uncensored, but that the moment it tried to place that cartoon on its screen, the Government could step in and say that the cartoon was prohibited.

ANTHONY KELLY'S STAR IN THE ASCENDANT.

Among those who have been showered with congratulations as a result of their masterful work toward the success of The Frohman Amusement Corporation's extraordinary release, "The Witching Hour," Anthony Kelly, the author of the photoplay version, was in the foreground.

Kelly has written some wonderful successes, both adaptions and original stories, but he feels that he has never equalled himself as he has in "The Witching Hour." As a result of his work, in writing the scenario on that production, Mr. Sherrill has engaged his to adapt other plays and books, which are to form extraordinary or special releases of The Frohman Amusement Corporation.

WANTS SUBJECT FOR SCREEN MAGAZINE.

Editor Jack Cohn of the Universal Screen Magazine is anxious to obtain material suitable for presentation in his animated magazine and will purchase all such material that he may use. The object of this unusual release is to furnish entertaining and instructive studies of every phase of life possible to be photographed and any movie fan who can suggest improvements in the reel or advance an idea that can be adapted for this feature will be recompensed for the same.

Buffalo Theater Men Meet

Sunday Closing Decision Stirs Them to Action - Want to Make Fight

PLANS [illegible] at the movement to close moving picture theaters on Sunday are [illegible] in Buffalo, N. Y. Preliminary preparations for the fight took concrete form at a meeting of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association at the Star theater Tuesday afternoon, November 27. It was decided that a committee of the association would confer with a committee representing the Buffalo Screen club to devise ways and means for the protection of the exhibitors and others allied with theatrical business in Buffalo and vicinity. Dr. P. C. Cornell, manager of the Star theater, presided at the meeting. He is president of the association.

The managers' association sent out numerous telegrams to all Buffalo exhibitors, large and small, to attend the meeting. The attendance was very gratifying. All realized that the exhibitors, managers of the legitimate houses and the exchange men must work in harmony in the "Sunday closing" battle, which, if lost by the exhibitors, would mean the putting of many of them out of business. One feature of the meeting was the disbanding of the old Motion Picture Exhibitors' league of this city. The members in turn joined the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association, which called the meeting.

Believing that in union and numbers there is strength with which to fight Sunday closing, the managers' association invited all the exhibitors present to join the organization. Forty-five became members. The total membership is now fifty-eight. Many other exhibitors who were not present are expected to join. These will include the managers and proprietors of out-of-town houses. It was pointed out that the Sunday business of the Buffalo moving picture theaters was 25 per cent. of the weekly gross receipts, which indicated the popularity of Sunday shows.

In order to attract many exhibitors to the managers' association, the initiation fees were reduced to the following basis: Houses up to 400 capacity, $10 a year; 400 to 600 capacity, $15; 600 to 800 capacity, $20; 800 capacity and upward, $25. The monthly dues are $3.00.

The officers of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association are: President, Dr. P. C. Cornell; vice-president, John R. Oishei; secretary, Valentine O'Grady; treasurer, Harold B. Franklin. These officers, with the following, comprise the board of directors: Henry J. Carr, Jules H. Michael, Ira M. Mosher, Earl L. Crabb and William F. Graham. The local body will co-operate with the Theatrical Managers' Protective Association of America in opposing the Sunday closing movement.

"If this agitation in favor of Sunday closing goes into effect, it will cripple every theater in Buffalo," said Manager Michael of the Academy theater, who was one of the speakers. "If we lose the best day's business each week, many of the exhibitors would be driven out of business. The loss of part of our gross receipt would also reduce the earning powers of our employes because the loss of one day a week would mean the reduction of their wages."

"We are not after the exhibitor's money, but we want his co-operation in this Sunday closing fight," said Manager Franklin of the Lyric. "All may join on an equal footing. We are organized according to the laws of New York State. This is the time to act."

Manager Mosher of the Palace theater explained how he had addressed the Buffalo Screen club on the proposed fight of the managers' association against Sunday closing. He said the club, which is composed of exchange men and exhibitors, offered to give its support to the movement.

"The managers' association," said Mr. Mosher, "will not conflict with the membership of the screen club. We must organize and work for the good of the general cause. We must put the moving picture business on a legal and honorable basis."

David Cohen, manager of the Symphony theater, Binghampton was another speaker. He said in part: "Last week the mayor of Binghampton gave to each exhibitor of our city a copy of Justice Lyons' decision and ordered us to close our shows on Sunday. He said if we disobeyed our licenses would be cancelled. Our loss as a result of Sunday closing is 25 per cent of our weekly gross receipts. If we lose our case in the Court of Appeals, then we must fight for State legislation for Sunday opening."

"We mustn't wait until the rope is around our necks," said Harry Marsey, who advocated immediate action on the Sunday closing movement. "There must be no friction between factions."

President Christoffers of the Buffalo Screen club took exception to a remark that the club was purely a social organization. He pointed out the remarkable growth of the club and its ability and willingness to co-operate in the fight under discussion. Charles Taylor and others said Sunday closing and not membership should be given attention at the meeting. It was brought out that the managers' association was well equipped to adjust differences with operators, musicians and other union labor connected with the theaters and that this would be an advantage to the exhibitors who become members. It was announced that the association would hold frequent meetings while the Sunday closing battle is being waged, and will spend a large amount for the best legal talent obtainable to protect the interest of its members.

"THE SINS YE DO" NOT KEENAN'S LAST.

November 22, 1916.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—The daily and trade press have fallen into an error in the statement that the present release, "The Sins Ye Do," is my last release at the Rialto theater. While it is true that my contract with the Triangle has not been renewed, two subsequent films were taken at Los Angeles, and they will, in due course, find their way to the stage of the Rialto and other playhouses enjoying this service. "His Slave" and "The Crab" will surely be received as representative of the best work I have done under the competent Triangle direction. This correction is due to the Triangle as well as myself. Yours truly,

FRANK KEENAN.

PAULINE FREDERICK RETURNS FROM CUBA.

Pauline Frederick, Thomas Meighan, her leading man, and the rest of "The Slave Market" company have returned from a four weeks' stay in Cuba, where the Famous Players adaptation of Frederic Arnold Kummer's play, "The Slave Market," has been staged. As the entire action of the story takes place in Spain and the West Indies, the choice of Cuba as the setting of this forthcoming Paramount Picture is considered to be ideal. The picture, by the way, is the first Famous Players production in which Thomas Meighan has appeared since his arrival from the Pacific Coast, where he has gained an enviable reputation by his work in Lasky Pictures. Besides Miss Frederick and Mr. Meighan, the cast includes Ruby Hoffman, Wellington Playter, Daniel Pennell and Albert Hart.

BURGER VISITS ATLANTA.

J. K. Burger, assistant general manager of the International Film Service, stopped with the Atlanta branch a few days on a tour of inspection of the company's offices. He was bubbling over with enthusiasm regarding the tremendous hit Mrs. Vernon Castle, in "Patria," is bound to record, and expressed himself as much pleased with the steady growth of collections at the Atlanta branch and its solid array of Golden Eagle bookings. Mr. Burger's stay was enlivened by his usual practice of instilling into the branch workers his uniformly correct methods of getting the business and his visits along that line are always looked forward to with much pleasure.

DIRECTOR HARBAUGH HAS NEW ACTRESS.

Alter long deliberation, Carl Harbaugh, who is directing Stuart Holmes in his new picture for William Fox, has given a small part in the screen play to his young daughter. Miss Harbaugh is very well fitted for her role. Miss Harbaugh will soon celebrate her first birthday.

HORSLEY LIGHT SHIFT PATENTED.

David Horsley has just received word from the patent office in Washington that he has been granted a patent on his device for an automatic light shift in printing films.

Ochs Committee Gets Cold Feet

Decides to Throw Out Reporters and Proceed with Hearing in Executive Session—Violates Pledge to Furnish Summary of Proceedings to Press.

THE committee of nine investigating the charges preferred before the Manhattan local branch of the Exhibitors' League of America as the result of the letter published in Variety directed against Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, decided after a session of nearly two hours on Friday, December 1, to throw out the reporters and proceed in executive session. This action was directly contrary to that of the session thirteen days before, at which it was agreed, following the initiative of Chairman Samuel H. Trigger, to permit the attendance of representatives of the press. It was by the committee agreed before the departure of the reporters that Secretary Charles Steiner should issue to the press a summary of the proceedings of the executive session. Mr. Steiner could not be located at the headquarters of the exhibitors on the day following, and the stenographer of the committee declined to give out a report in the absence of instructions from Mr. Steiner.

When Tobias A. Keppler, counsel for Fleischman & Goldreyer, against whom charges are pending before the Manhattan local for writing the letter that started the rumpus, was informed of the situation he declared that the last action of the committee on Friday before adjourning until December 8 was to instruct the secretary to prepare a summary of the proceedings for the press. Mr. Keppler declined to state what had taken place, saying for reasons which now he deemed sufficient he preferred the announcement should come from the committee. When the lawyer got in touch with the young woman stenographer he was informed if he would send a stenographer to the office of a new trade paper a transcript or rather a dictation of the testimony would be given him. It may be said in passing the secret session lasted from 1:30 until 5 o'clock. A World reporter tried in vain on Saturday to locate Mr. Trigger or Mr. Steiner.

When the session was called to order by Chairman Trigger at 11:40 a. m. on Friday all of the members of the committee were present or came in shortly afterward. Present also were Mr. Ochs and his counsel, Mr. Goldsmith, and J. Robert Rubin, as counsel for the committee. When Mr. Keppler arrived in company with his clients, he found Mr. Goldsmith examining Mr. Ochs. The lawyer objected to the procedure, saying he insisted upon the original arrangement being adhered to—that he should examine Mr. Ochs and then put on his witnesses. He also protested against the presence of Mr. Rubin on account of his representing Metro. Mr. Rubin said not only did he represent Metro as counsel, but that he was assistant secretary of the company. He added that he likewise was the general counsel of Variety. Mr. Rubin said, however, nothing in these affiliations prevented him from advising the committee and he assured the members he was in the best position to know that no stockholder or employe of Metro had any connection with the new paper. He declared he was present solely in his capacity as counsel for the league.

Under examination by Mr. Goldsmith Mr. Ochs said three meetings of the national executive committee of the league had been held during the previous week, that the matter of the examination of the books of the new paper had been taken up, that the committee had looked them over, and he declared that the members had found no record of any film manufacturer or employe being connected with the company. Mr. Ochs said the board of directors of the new paper was composed of W. Stephen Bush, Merritt Crawford, Louis F. Blumenthal, Leslie Mason and himself. He said the voting trust was composed of Mr. Blumenthal, Mr. Crawford and himself. "We do not want to make public who owns the preferred stock," he said, in answer to a question.

Mr. Keppler complained that he had not yet received the minutes for the session of thirteen days before. He was told they were in the room and a copy was furnished him. In response to a remark by Mr. Goldsmith, Mr. Keppler repeated his offer of two weeks ago to go to immediate trial of the libel suit of Ochs vs. Fleischman & Goldreyer. He said he had not yet seen a copy of the complaint. Mr. Goldsmith said he had it in his pocket.

"Then we can go to trial tomorrow," said Mr. Keppler. "There we can force witnesses to testify. We will be delighted to meet this issue if you will give us our day in court."

"You annoy me," said Mr. Goldsmith. He did not accept the challenge, however.

"In view of the charges against Mr. Ochs, we submit," said Mr. Keppler, "our understanding of the law is that if the publication is a failure the league will have to pay its debts. If the league could not afford to pay them it might wreck the organization. Therefore, I feel the league is financially interested."

Mr. Keppler called attention to the fact that at the hearing two weeks before Mr. Ochs had promised to produce the stock certificate and other books and that they had not been forthcoming.

Mr. Goldsmith accused Mr. Keppler of going on a fishing excursion.

Mr. Trigger explained his telegram to the members of the national executive board asking if the books should be shown to the committee. Mr. Keppler suggested the members were not aware of the identity of the particular books, but Mr. Trigger insisted they were, and that they withheld consent. Mr. Keppler insisted the chairman had no right to send the telegram.

Mr. Blumenthal, who was present as a spectator, said that he as custodian of the books had been absolutely ordered by the national executive committee not to show the books, and that he would abide by the instructions.

During the general discussion there was a running fire of interruptions from Messrs. Ochs and Goldsmith. All were complaining about getting nowhere. Grant Anson threatened to resign from the committee if there was not more of a semblance of order in the proceedings.

After a great deal of talk by about every one immediately concerned, Mr. Keppler agreed to produce all his witnesses and documentary evidence. "We will endeavor to get the consent of the national committee for the production of the books," he said. "If then Mr. Ochs will testify we will then permit Fleischman & Goldreyer to answer questions. If Mr. Ochs will not answer questions we will put Fleischman & Goldreyer on the stand, but we will not permit them to be cross-examined unless Mr. Ochs will first submit to cross-examination. When we get through then Mr. Ochs can offer all the evidence he wants to in his own defense."

Mr. Goldsmith complained that the reporters seemed to be paying too much attention to what Mr. Keppler said and not [illegible] were doing.

[illegible] was [illegible] that the reporters be excluded.

Mr. [illegible] suggested that the press would get a true [illegible] what they said.

[illegible] the fact that Mr. Ochs has a perfect right [illegible] report anything he wants [illegible] Mr. Keppler.

[illegible] be obligated," said Mr. Kerner.

We are not in favor of any move that will prevent the [illegible] getting the news," said Mr. Keppler. "I decline to [illegible] myself not to talk to reporters."

A vote was taken by calling the roll. Mr. Trigger declared the action of the committee on the question of exclusion was unanimous.

Fleischman & Goldreyer Protest.

Fleischman & Goldreyer have submitted to the national executive committee of the league a protest against the action denying them an examination of the stock subscription and other books of the trade paper. It says in part:

We respectfully request that the members of the committee are entitled to some explanation as to why you have refused to permit the stock certificate book and stock ledger of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, Inc., to be offered in evidence at the hearing upon the charges preferred by us against Mr. Ochs, the president of the organization. We do not think there can be any reasonable objection to the exhibition with the effort to introduce them into evidence should have been denied.

The charges against us asked that we be expelled, and we submit that from every point of view any evidence that will throw light upon this matter should be produced.

As a part of the examination for our complaint we did crave [illegible] the hearing from the mouth of Mr. Ochs himself that he had taken away from our business various programs that we had for a long time found best for our use, and that with the Paramount [illegible] he submitted he got the service for $40 a week, where our price was $150, and where we had put up our check for $600 cash deposit he had cash to put $200 in cash. He claims that that was simply business competition. We did not have a hand in the matter. The companies never asked us what price we would give, our programs were simply taken away. We appeal to you and ask what hand did we have to continue to compete with him under such circumstances? What was to become of our investments? Mr. Ochs admitted on the stand that he offered to sell his theaters to us but we could not possibly pay the price he demanded. Suppose the national president built a theater on each side of your theater and you lost your four choicest programs, what would you do? Would you expect the members of your organization to help you against a person no less than the president of the City Association, the State Association, and the National Association? Isn't he supposed to set the finest example of the way and not live in our business? Isn't it only natural that the [illegible] of our position made us cry out for justice.

Quite a number of other things concerning him were brought out in the testimony, and if you are interested you can easily get a copy, but as the matter in which you have refused to permit us to examine the books, without asking our version of the affair, related to the Exhibitors' Trade Review, it is necessary that we take that matter up specifically, and in behalf of the members of our Association we respectfully ask for an explanation.

Mr. Ochs admitted that one-third of the common stock has been given to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, so it might seem that a large portion of the debts, if there were any, would fall upon the League, and if that would happen it would in all probability wreck it, and the directors of the League would also be personally liable in addition as it is a membership corporation. If the League did not pay up. Can the League, or its directors, afford to take that chance? Who should it?

If Ochs did not use his position as national president for his own benefit, will you please explain what chance he would have had to have promoted this trade paper and claim it is advantageous to our Exhibitors' Organization, with the voting power as we have indicated, if he had not been national president?

Will you also kindly explain, since you have refused to permit us to see these books whether you think it beneficial to our organization to permit a few men to solicit funds from our members, under the financial plan we have outlined, with watered stock, so that the running of the organization will not be done by a few insiders?

Do you think it good policy, under these circumstances, to permit the national president to launch a publication for his own benefit, so that [illegible] are willing to [illegible] the cream of the [illegible] when the cost [illegible] was not paid for, and on which [illegible] a very small part of their contribution, and the returns upon which, as far as the organization were concerned, depended upon the good will of the various exchanges, one of whom has [illegible] deal with the [illegible] and another of whom, so far as we know, is not even an exhibitor.

[illegible] for a few members, through the medium of such a journal, to be able to mould and influence sentiment as they desire in the association, [illegible] sufficient to make every right-minded man demand an examination of [illegible] of the Executive Committee in having refused to permit those books to be opened [illegible] to the interests of the organization to be furthered by the opening [illegible].

At a hearing held on Saturday, November 18, our attorney, Mr. [illegible] Mr. Ochs [illegible] had any interest in this proposition, and Mr. Ochs denied that. Thereupon Mr. Keppler defied him to produce the stock certificate book or [illegible] Wouldn't you, in Mr. [illegible] have made every effort to have forthwith produced those books, if Mr. Keppler was wrong?

Our By-Laws expressly prohibit even an exhibitor from joining our organization if he has any connection with a film company, then how about a national president who hopes to make money from film companies, which constitute the principal advertisers in our trade papers?

Is it not bad policy for officers of our organization to go into new enterprises, made possible only because of their positions, so that they will have financial interest against other members? Sooner or later [illegible] that must result in corpses and [illegible] and the interests of the [illegible] organization.

What would the attitude [illegible] be if the president [illegible] position to launch an exposition or a ball, or any other enterprise, for his own benefit, which he could not do except for the fact that he was president?

If the running of a journal is a practical thing for exhibitors, of which we have our grave doubts, why couldn't the organization own it, and make all the money? Then it could refuse any advertisement which might tie its hands in any way.

The advertisements of this journal were obtained when the journal was only an idea, so if the men of the association could have gotten these advertisements why couldn't they have been gotten for the association? Wouldn't the exhibitors of this country have averaged at [illegible] dollar apiece in preparing [illegible] We [illegible] to give one of the four voting powers to a man who for years has done nothing but work for film companies?

[illegible] not [illegible] for the organization to have the interests and loyalty of its members tempted in any way by affiliations designed to make money through the organization? The unsolved problems of the exhibitors of this country are many. The exhibitors personally have not the time to solve them. They should be solved by specialists retained by a powerful national organization, the members of which have no interests except to pay dues and loyalty to the organization.

These issues are involved in the charges we have brought, and which are still undetermined.

In your respective positions the members of our organization are entitled to explanations, because there is very great dissatisfaction among many exhibitors and a movement is constantly gaining force to start another organization, the foundation rock of which will be that no member or officer will be able to use their connection with the organization, in any way, for their financial benefit, except their interest as exhibitors of motion pictures only.

Upon a proper disposition of these issues the integrity and existence of our organization depends, and we appeal to you for justice.

Discussing Minnesota Convention

Northwest Exhibitors Said to Oppose Holding a Trade Exposition.

POSSIBILITIES of holding another moving picture exposition in Minneapolis in connection with the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, next spring are waning if discussion in the weekly meetings of the corporation and talk among the exhibitors outside of the meetings can be taken as a criterion.

The exposition at the Armory last year was a big success financially and had a few more stars been present, it would have given the Chicago show a close race for laurels, but the exhibitors feel that the attractive display detracted from the thing that should have had the exhibitors' undivided attention every day—the convention. The members of the Northwest body feel that the convention is far more important for them than the exposition and when the time for a final decision on next spring's doings is taken it is expected that the exposition side of the argument will be without support. It has been pointed out that although the exposition last year was a big financial success such a show is a chance proposition and that many extra hours of labor and much extra expense is necessary to put it on. The corporation now being a branch of the National league and entitled to a portion of the receipts from the national exposition at Chicago; some members believe the Northwest body will profit just as much by giving up the local exposition and boosting the national show only.

It is also probable that all entertainments, banquets, balls and sight-seeing tours will be free to exhibitors at the coming convention and that the convention will last three days instead of four as previously. Thomas J. Hamlin and T. E. Mortensen of "Amusements" have agreed to give $200 toward entertaining visiting exhibitors at convention time and have also offered to handle all publicity work and program arranging gratis. The sale of tickets to the public for the midnight show and grand ball will also be added to the fund for entertaining visiting exhibitors and the corporation's treasury.

Efforts are now being made to have a membership of at least 25 per cent of the exhibitors of the territory by next convention time so that the business of the meetings can be properly transacted. At last week's meeting of the Northwest body the committee fighting the deposit system reported fair progress and it was voted that all members of the state legislature be given complimentary tickets which would admit them to any theater in the state which is enrolled in the corporation. It was also voted to have printed and placed "booth rules" comforming with the state laws.

HERRINGTON VISITS NEW YORK.

Fred J. Herrington, National Organizer of the Exhibitors' League, spent a few days in New York City and left on Friday for Pittsburgh. The first gathering of exhibitors that he expects to attend is the coming Michigan State Convention, at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, on December 12.

New York Movie Ball a Great Success

Surpasses All Previous Events in Point of Excellence—Many Publicity "Stunts" Put On by Producing Companies.

WITH more than six thousand persons in attendance and with a dazzling brilliance that dimmed into half-light any previous affair of its kind, the Sixth Annual Movie Ball, held in Madison Square Garden on Thanksgiving Eve under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Local No. 1, passed into history in the great big hours of Friday morning as the event to date in the film world. Practically every one even remotely connected with the motion picture industry in New York and many other cities was there, in addition to thousands of film fans.

The magnet that irresistibly drew the film-loving horde to the spacious arena despite a heavy rain storm was, mostly, the presence in the gigantic auditorium of a firmament of motion picture stars and satellites such as has never before been observed by the Fan-Astrologer who, on Wednesday night, ceaselessly promenaded before the boxes containing the players, and who proved to be, collectively, a deeply appreciative and adulative star-gazer. And to the observers the stars, transported for the occasion from their studio-sky to the place of common meeting-ground with their admirers, seemed to twinkle and scintillate even more brightly than they do on the screen.

Exhibitors from all over the country traveled to New York for the event, and it is to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League that the public owes a debt of gratitude for the countless scores of features offered. On their arrival at the Garden the exhibitors and their families and friends immediately became the guests of those in charge, and were entertained in a manner that brought forth commendation from every source.

The doors of the Garden were opened at eight o'clock, the opening being heralded by the blare of a band at the head of a procession that had started for the Garden from the local headquarters of the Exhibitors' League, 218 West Forty-second street. The rain made this a rather smaller feature than had been planned. By eight-thirty the famous enclosure was already thronged.

The Oriental decorations used the night before for the Ten Allies' costume ball had been retained. Moorish in general tone, the effect of the whole scheme was pleasing to the nth degree. The structure was bathed in a glow of soft light that was pierced ever and anon by the concentrated rays of a score of spotlights, which played upon the moving throng with a startling effect. The floor plan devised and put into effect adapted itself admirably to the needs of the occasion. The floor itself was covered with canvas, smoothed and painted to represent the floor of an Oriental palace. It was roped off on its four sides.

During the earlier hours of the evening dancing was secondary to the program of special features. These numbers consisted mostly of publicity "stunts," and they were the big features of the evening. The stunts proved a revelation to the assemblage, many of them being staged as elaborately as if they had been intended for permanent attractions. Cabaret numbers, also, were numerous and well-received. These attractions followed the introduction to the assemblage of a constellation of stars whose aggregate salaries would make the Federal Reserve Fund look like the contents of a small boy's bank. The players were introduced by William F. Haddock.

To enumerate all the "stunts" conceived and presented and to do them justice would take many pages. Each tableaux and pageant vied with the other; each tried to outdo the other in originality, beauty, lavishness and advertising value. That the "stunts" were popular with those present was attested to by the applause that each received. These events took place in as nearly as was possible as pre-arranged order.

Early on the program the Universal staged a pageant in which forty persons took part, chief among them being Violet Mersereau and Harry Reichenbach. Pathe's demonstration was headed by Pearl White, astride a white horse. Other Pathe stars and about sixty "extras" took part in the number. Thanhouser's contribution was a parade of 'rickshaws containing Florence La Badie, Gladys Hulette, Doris Grey and other stars. Anita Stewart, Lillian Walker, Marc McDermott and other Vitagraph stars had their inning in a number that was participated in by forty persons. Lucille Lee Stewart, of the Ralph Ince forces, appeared in a timely pumpkin stunt. Roger Peirrot came in his "submarine." The Monmouth Film Corporation staged a parade with E. K. Lincoln, Edna Hunter, Paul Panzer and others. Metro was represented by Viola Dana, Mabel Taliaferro, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and many others. The International held the floor with Grace Darling, Jane Grey, Betty Howe and others. All during the evening surprises were being staged by the manufacturers, and every once in a while a star became a comet that momentarily attracted all attention to herself or to himself.

Shortly after midnight interest centered in the Grand March, which was led by two dozen of the brightest stars in filmdom. This was an innovation that was welcomed by the assemblage, and in the vanguard of the marchers were seen players whose followers are numerous enough to elect a President. Under the direction of Oscar Lund the marchers were led into formations that reached their climax of symmetry and the spectacular when, with human figures, the giant initials "M. P. E. L." were formed. Among the many out-of-town delegations was one from Boston, the members of which still carried on them the happy marks left by the success of the Boston Ball of week before last.

Cabaret, Hawaiian Dances, singing in the Concert Hall and other attractions than those on the main floor drew their full quota of attendees. The Universal Band furnished music in the cafe.

Arrangements for the affair were supervised by Thomas Howard, state secretary of the League. The Executive Committee was formed of the chairmen of the various other committees. It was comprised of the following:

I. N. Hartman, L. F. Blumenthal and William Hilkmeier, joint General Chairman Arrangement; L. E. Atwater, W. C. Smith, Lee A Ochs, Thomas Howard, Charles Haring, Benjamin Lyons, Charles Steiner, William Haddock, C. R. Martineau, Gus Koenigswald, Otto Lederer and Samuel H. Trigger.

Following is a list of the boxholders:

Pathe (including Astra, Balboa, Thanhouser and Arrow); Vitagraph, Universal, International, Metro, World Film, Paramount, Frohman, Art Dramas, Selznick and Brenon, Marcus Loew, Fox Film, Monmouth, Mutual, Kleine, Essanay, Sherman-Elliot, Inc., Nicholas Power, McClure Pictures, Brook Feature Film Corporation, Precision Machine Co., Feature Film Corporation, Unicorn Film Service, Ronley Theater, Fleischman and Goldreyer and others.

The floor boxes were reserved for the use of the Arrangement Committee, M. P. E. L. of New Jersey, Entertainment Committee, N. A. M. P. I., and the loges were retained for the use of guests of the League.

Many public officials attended the ball and a complete list of those present, besides practically every one in the film business would have to be compiled from the City Directory, Telephone Directory, the Blue Book, the Social Register, the City Record and almost every other book that has names of any sort listed.

Meeting of Buffalo Screen Club

Will Take An Active Part in Fight Against Sunday Closing.

IN POINT of attendance and enthusiasm of its members the Buffalo Screen club of Buffalo, N. Y., held its most successful meeting Monday evening, November 27. President Christoffers presided. As a result of a campaign for increased membership fifteen new members joined the club. The campaign will be continued throughout the winter. Upward of 100 film men attended the session. The club agreed to do everything in its power to protect the exhibitor in the fight against Sunday closing. It was pointed out that at the present time Sunday was the only day of the week that many of the moving picture theaters here showed a profit.

Various speakers also emphasized the fact that the majority of the people of Buffalo were in favor of Sunday shows because that was the only day of the week on which they could take their families to the theaters for a few hours' enjoyment. The club will appoint a committee to get the views of the theaters and their patrons in regard to Sunday performances. The members decided to get into closer touch with the screen clubs of Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburg.

President Christoffers said he was delighted with the attendance and that the club was closing the year of 1916 in a flourishing condition. The members and their wives will have a social evening at the club rooms December 9th. Dancing and a luncheon will be a feature of the program. Plans are going steadily forward for the Screen club's ball at the Elmwood Music hall, Monday evening, January 29th. The committees are working with a vim to dispose of their various details and as one member expressed himself, "the ball will be the talk of the town." Arrangements have already been made for the band and orchestra music for the evening. The names of some of the screen stars who are likely to appear at the ball will be announced shortly. The printing has already been started and the newspapers are giving the event considerable publicity.

Noisy disclaimers are not convincing when it is so easy to show the proofs. Where is the stock and why?

F. I. L. M. Club Doings

New York Organization Makes Favorable Report on Expressage Question.

The committee appointed to meet with officials of Exhibitors' Locals on expressage, reported that they found the Brooklyn, Manhattan and Jersey Leagues were not opposed to paying express charges both ways after January 1st, 1917, and that the other local Associations would, perhaps, voluntarily agree to this soon.

Hoy Reporting Service submited a list of exhibitors' complaints against exchanges and all but one were settled in favor of exhibitors. F. I. L. M. club has taken a decided stand against their own members mistreating exhibitors. On the other hand exhibitors will be expected to fulfill all contracts they enter with exchanges, that worthless checks must not be issued, that subletting films will be charged for and collected.

A communication was read from one exchange, saying that within the past 30 days over $1,000 in old claims had been adjusted through Hoy Reporting Service without suit. Several members present reported having had very gratifying returns.

Reports were received of a F. I. L. M. club having been organized at Omaha, Nebraska, and another at Salt Lake City, Utah. The Secretary was ordered to extend them welcome on behalf of New York City members.

National Exhibitors League President Ochs' alleged recent speech, reproduced in a Minneapolis trade paper, was read and referred to Grievance Committee, as there were several statements in the article that did not conform to facts about conditions in New York City. The club instructed its publicity committee to correct the erroneous impression that the New York F. I. L. M. club had changed its policy in any way, as would appear from this article.

The meeting night was changed from Thursdays to Tuesdays.

"BRINGING UP FATHER" NOW BEING ANIMATED.

"Bringing Up Father," that famous pictorial comic created by George McManus, may now be seen in animated form in films released by the International. The first of this series has just been released and others will follow at regular intervals as part of the International's animated cartoon service. This is the first appearance of Mr. McManus' work on the screen, though his former creations have all been dramatized and produced on the stage.

Mr. McManus joined the Hearst force five years ago—when he began his present popular series "Bringing Up Father," now to be put on the screen by the International. It is singularly interesting to note that this successful young craftsman never attended an art school.

"The Deemster" Series at Block Island

Arrow Company Will Go There for Many Exterior Sets.

HALL CAINE, the famous Manx author, has granted the Arrow Film Corporation exclusive picture rights on his book, "The Deemster." Great difficulty was experienced in making the arrangements because of the fact that the war and English censorship interfered with negotiations. It was impossible for Mr. Caine to come to America, and business deferred Mr. Shallenberger from going to England, consequently negotiations had to be carried on by Hall Caine's son, Derwent Hall Caine. A representative of Mr. Caine made arrangements here, then went to the Isle of Man and completed the transaction with Hall Caine.

Another great difficulty was experienced when the representative attempted to bring the location photographs to America. In order to have the production authentic it was necessary to take a great many photographs at the instigation of the author on the Isle of Man. When Hall Caine wrote "The Deemster" he had certain locations in mind, and the Arrow Film Company's representative made photos of these under Hall Caine's personal direction. The aid of the American Consul had to be enlisted to get the photographs through censorship, as graphic plans and panoramic views accompanied them. When the representative finally succeeded in getting his material through customs a great deal of time was spent searching for similar locations in the States. Finally it was decided that the only place on the American continent which faithfully portrayed the scenic requirements of the Isle of Man was Block Island.

A staff of carpenters and masons was sent to the Island and the replica of a Manx village was built, following the plans and specifications faithfully. The houses used in "The Deemster" were constructed of stone and concrete throughout, and after the picture was finished they were sold to the inhabitants of Block Island. The interiors were not made in a studio, but were actually taken at Block Island in the special houses constructed for the purpose. "The Deemster" is absolutely realistic and authentic, and the locations had been selected and passed by Hall Caine, the author, to whom photographs were sent for O. K. before the actual work on the picture began.

Tom North Comes to New York

Popular Exchange Man and Amusement Expert Decides to Open an Office Here.

TOM NORTH has come out of the West. Not that he belonged there by right of birth, but he was in the coast country for over three years, and it sort of got into his blood. For over a year and a half he was the representative of George Kleine in the California jurisdiction, with headquarters in San Francisco. Then for a period as nearly as long he was in charge of the V-L-S-E Seattle office. He more than made good in both positions. What he did 'way up there in the Northwest breezed about the country in one way or another; principally through the house organ which he conducted, V-L-S-E Pal, an organ for his house, but to the exhibitors of his own territory a most newsy and welcome visitor. And there was interest in it for those on the other coast, too. It is doubtful if there ever was an exchange organ which quite matched it.

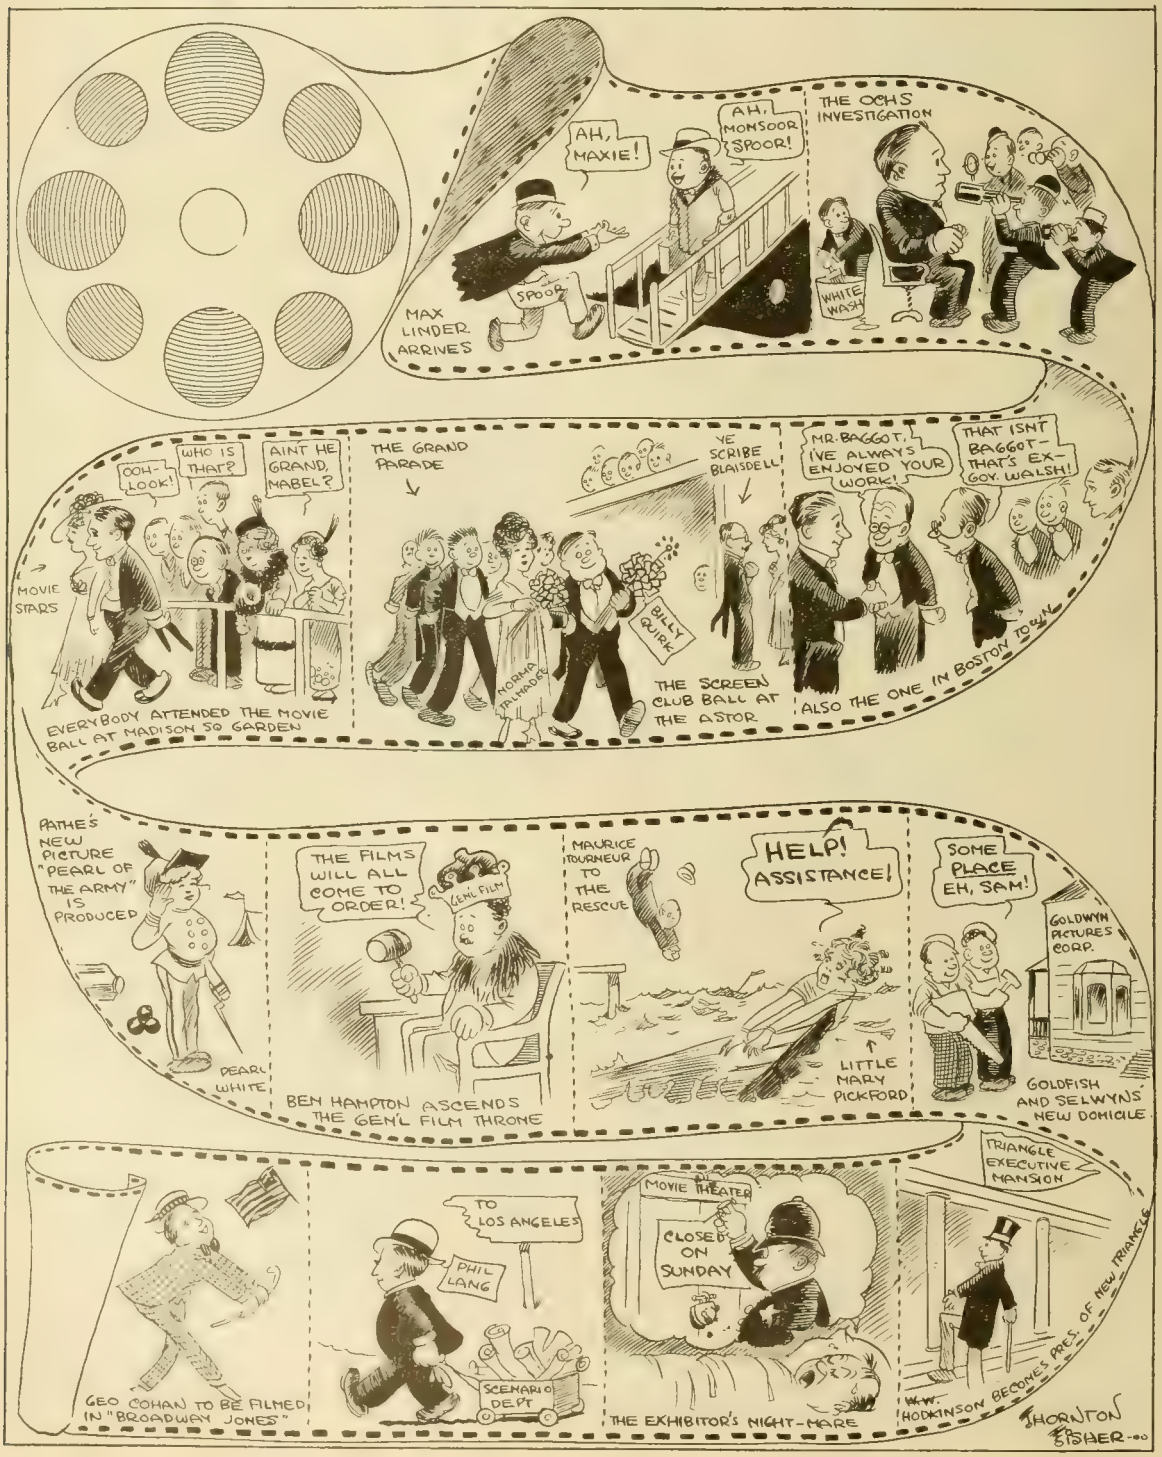
Tom North.

Mr. North has been in New York a couple of week, stopping with Mrs. North at the Knickerbocker. He has had several offers that sounded very tempting, but he has come to the conclusion he will paddle his own canoe. He will open an office, where he will act as special representative of western capitalists interested in making sound investments in the motion picture business. Also he will handle special publicity, of the stunt sort or otherwise—and he knows all kinds. He will act as special representative for motion pictures and players. All this ought to keep him moderately busy. If it prove to be more than that, he will be right there, as he is a horse for work when it is to be done.

For over a score of years Mr. North has been associated with amusement ventures. His first connection was with Price's floating operas, showing on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. Then he was with Jule Walters' old-time melodramas. He was with Gentry Brothers' show, with Charles Whittaker and with Lincoln J. Carter. For two years Mr. North conducted dramatic shows for Arthur C. Hastings. Then for two years he was the advertising man and later the director of the Leffley-Bratton company. He was for several summers with the Ringling Brothers' circus as press man. He booked and directed road attractions for Harry Askin for three years. It was following this he went to the coast. At first he was in Los Angeles, later going to San Francisco, where at one time he directed sixteen road companies on five Kleine shows, all of which he had organized.

It may be judged from this partial and brief review of his activities that Mr. North has had experience in amusements. He is one of those who can travel in any company. As a business man he is strong on the square deal stuff. He is a thorough musician, an expert at the piano, and as well has many compositions to his credit. That he will receive a warm welcome from the trade in New York goes without saying. It will be very much contrary to the usual rule if he misses it here.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD NEWS REEL FOR NOVEMBER



Goldwyn Pictures Enter the Field

Samuel Goldfish Brings to the Industry the Selwyns, Margaret Mayo and Arthur Hopkins

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, who recently resigned as chairman of the board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, has in association with Edgar and Archibald Selwyn, Margaret Mayo and Arthur Hopkins, organized a motion picture producing company, to be known as the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, with a capital stock of $3,000,000, all of which has been subscribed for by the organizers and their associates.

Samuel Goldfish.

Film rights to a large number of plays controlled by the members of the new company have already been obtained and contracts with leading legitimate and screen stars and dramatists entered into.

The scenario department will be in the hands of Margaret Mayo and Edgar Selwyn. The productions will be looked after by Arthur Hopkins, who will have associated with him Robert Edward Jones as art director. The officers of the company are Mr. Goldfish, president; Edgar Selwyn, vice-president from the combination of whose names, the new firm derives its title—and Crosby Gaige, treasurer.

Mr. Goldfish has occupied a prominent position in the moving picture field for several years past, as one of the founders of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., and later as head of the board of directors of the combined Famous Players and Lasky companies. He has been a power in the furtherance of everything which makes for the best interests of the industry.

Margaret Mayo.

Mr. Selwyn, who is president of Selwyn & Co., is a dramatist and producer, who has been in the front ranks in the development of the stage along artistic channels.

Individually or jointly Mr. Selwyn, his brother Archibald; his wife, Margaret Mayo, also a celebrated dramatist, and Arthur Hopkins have been responsible for such well-known successes as "Within the Law," "Fair and Warmer," "On Trial," "Polly of the Circus," "Country Boy," "Under Cover," "Twin Beds," "Baby Mine" and others.

Mr. Hopkins, as is known by all who are familiar with things theatrical, is one of the foremost producers of the day, with a long list of unusual successes to his credit. His present Broadway production is "Good Gracious Annabelle."

Robert Edward Jones is the man who has created a sensation in the art world by reason of his scenic conceptions for the Russian ballet, "Good Gracious Annabelle," and other stage productions.

The new company will produce pictures both in California and in the East. Announcement of the location of these studios and the executive offices will be made soon.

In the meantime a statement of the stars whom the company will exploit is being looked forward to with more than ordinary interest. It is reported these will be of unusual prominence. The eminence of the incorporators, the record of achievement behind each of them, guarantee that not only will the players be of the highest rank, but that the productions in which they will be seen will take their place among the best motion pictures of the time. Mr. Goldfish, while declining to enlarge upon his formal statement, did intimate that the things he aimed to accomplish in a motion picture way would be larger than what he had heretofore done. He added that he believed his ambition would be surely realized—that the personnel of his associates would insure it.

Edgar Selwyn.

First Foxfilm Comedy

It Will Be "Social Pirates," with a Large Cast.—January 1 the Release Date.

"SOCIAL PIRATES" is the title of the first Foxfilm Comedy, and the release date is January 1, 1917. Charles Arling is the featured comedian and he is supported by a large cast, including Amy Jerome, Annette de Foe, Olive Bruce, Martin Kinney, Bill Hauber and Frank Alexander.

The first Foxfilm release is remarkable in many ways. It combines so-called polite comedy with just the right proportion of slapstick, and its finish is of the surprise type that puts the whole production over with a smash.

The second release of Foxfilm Comedies probably will be "Chased Into Love," featuring Hank Mann, supported by Carmen Phillips. Mr. Mann is known to practically all followers of motion pictures as a comedian of undisputed laugh-producing qualities. Miss Phillips, in addition to her screen fame, is a singer of some note. The supporting cast is large and highly efficient.

In connection with Foxfilm Comedies, Mr. Fox has announced a complete publicity service conducted independently of the general publicity bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. A weekly newspaper, the Foxfilm Comedy Service Newspaper Notes, dealing entirely with comedies and comedy players, will be issued and in addition a photographic service will be maintained.

Foxfilm Comedies are destined to supply a world-wide market, according to the plans of Mr. Fox. They will be released through the twenty-five branch offices of the Fox Film Corporation in the United States, and the Fox offices in the following foreign cities: Montreal, Que.; Toronto, Ont.; St. John, N. B.; Vancouver, B. C.; Winnipeg, Man.; London, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Leeds and Birmingham, England; Cardiff, Wales; Glasgow, Scotland; Dublin, Ireland; Sydney and Melbourne, Australia; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Sao Paulo, Brazil; Buenos Aires; Rosario, Argentine, and Montevideo, Uruguay.

BRENON COMPANY GOES TO ST. AUGUSTINE.

Herbert Brenon and a large force of players and assistants left New York this week for St. Augustine, to make the exterior scenes of his next Selznick picture, "Lucretia Borgia." The atmosphere of the quaint old Florida city is ideal for the period of the Borgias.

"The Garden of Allah" by Selig

About Ten Reels in Length, This Great Production, Adapted from Robert Hitchens' Book, Promises to Surpass All Former Selig Super Films.

FOR nearly four months Director Colin Campbell and a big company of players, both in and outside the Selig ranks, were employed in the production of "The Garden of Allah," founded on the famous novel of that name by Robert Hichens. In the visualization of this remarkable story in moving pictures, so rich in desert life, scenes and solitude, there is a realism that no stage production can ever achieve. All the desert scenes have been laid in the Mojave Desert, California, while the Selig Zoo, with its manifold scenic types, has also lent itself admirably to the pictures.

Director Colin Campbell was given carte blanche in the selection of the great host of supernumeraries employed, while Mr. Selig and he devoted several weeks to the selection of the people in the cast. In some of the scenes many hundreds of people are shown, of varied types, each type always garbed in correct costume. In the scene showing the watch tower at Mogar, we see a company of French zouaves in nattty uniforms, which fit the men perfectly. This is not by chance, however, as the uniforms were tailor-made, by order, for the occasion.

Helen Ware, the widely known emotional actress, was selected and brought on from New York at an outlay which alone would cover the cost of the production of many a modern photoplay. She assumes the fine character of Domini Enfilden, and the expensive costumes worn by her were all made specially for the occasion. Thomas Santschi appears as Boris Androvsky (Father Antoine), a renegade monk; Matt B. Snyder appears as Count Anteoni; the Sand Diviner, who can read the future in the sand, is taken by James Bradbury, and all the other important roles have been assigned with equal care as to fitness, both from the acting and personal viewpoint.

All the street and bazaar scenes in Beni-Mora and Amara, as well as the French military watch tower at Mogar, and the scene showing the garden of Count Anteoni in Beni-Mora, have been solidly built. The view of Amara, the great city in the northern Sahara, especially impresses the beholder as being massive and real, while the moving throngs in the streets give a distinct Oriental atmosphere. The street of the Ouled Nails in Beni-Mora is another remarkable scene. The dancers are all real Arab women, who were engaged specially for the work. All these scenes have been made from actual photographs of the places represented, so that perfect atmosphere has been secured.

One may mention, as an illustration of the complete success achieved by Director Campbell in conveying to the spectator the various phases of life on the Sahara Desert, the thrilling fight between a roving band of Arabs and a caravan. The conflict is fierce, and we afterwards see the triumphant members of the caravan marching and carrying the heads of the conquered rovers on the ends of their pikes.

The sandstorm that breaks on Beni-Mora and the surrounding desert—just as Domini and Androvsky are setting out on their honeymoon—is another realistic scene that will fairly thrill and astonish the spectator. This is no weak effort to imitate one of Nature's sternest moods. Tents are blown down, palm trees are brought to the earth, the air is thick with flying debris, and men who encounter it are forced to hide their heads in their robes to save their eyes from the keen edged sand. Just how it has been done by Director Campbell must remain a secret, as it is of his own invention, and promises to hold the palm for realism in filming happenings of this kind for some time to come.

In no previous super film production made by him has Wm. N. Selig taken such a zealous personal interest as in "The Garden of Allah." While in close contact with Director Campbell at all times during the progress of the work, he has bestowed the closest personal attention to the tinting of various scenes and to the assembling and trimming. He has viewed the films over a dozen times, ever on the lookout to make changes that tend to make the story more complete. The subtitles have received his particular attention, every one of which has been taken from the Hichens' book.

The photoplay is in three parts, a little over 10 reels in length. The original was between 15,000 and 16,000 feet, and it can be readily inferred that there is not a single redundant foot of film in the photoplay as it now stands, and as it will be seen by the public.

The book was adapted to photoplay form by Gilson Willets, whose work is remarkable for its action and intense interest. When it is remembered that the book is largely descriptive, with little of action to commend it for photoplay purposes, Mr. Willets will be entitled to no small measure of credit to the great success that undoubtedly awaits this fine production.

Unusual interest has been manifested by the trade in Selig's production of "The Garden of Allah." For some time past mail has been pouring into the Chicago offices concerning the production, from prominent men in the business, while others have come long distances to see it on the screen. These men are all intending purchasers for state rights to the picture. Stage stars in Chicago, who have never before dignified moving pictures by deigning to look at the screen, have called and seen the picture in the Selig private projection room.

Selig Denies Sale to Sherman & Elliott.

Mr. Selig was most emphatic in his denial of the statement, which appeared in a New York contemporary, that the rights to "The Garden of Allah" had been purchased by Sherman & Elliott.

"It is positively false," he said, when interviewed Monday, Nov. 27. "'The Garden of Allah' will be very carefully placed, and when the sale is made, it will be duly announced from this office. JAMES S. McQUADE.

WATCHING MARY.

The matter of handling the crowds that gather to watch Mary Pickford at work on "location" has become an item of no small concern to the producers of "Little Mary's" new photoplay, "The Pride of the Clan." When it was learned at Marblehead, Mass., recently, that the famous screen idol would produce exterior scenes there for her new Scotch picture, the entire surrounding country laid plans to see her at work. The roads leading to the "location" became congested with automobiles daily and the local police proved entirely incapable of handling the crowds. Director Tourneur, the well known French producer, who is staging Miss Pickford's latest Artcraft vehicle, soon found it impossible to go ahead with the production and a force of special police had to be engaged by his assistant to handle the eager spectators who unintentionally spoiled many feet of good raw stock by getting within the camera lines. When finally the site had been roped in and the staging of the play again resumed, many among the large "audience" perched themselves upon housetops and other points of vantage.

Watching Mary.

Cast for Next Artcraft Subject

Particular Care Evidenced in Selection of Players to Support "Little Mary" in "The Pride of the Clan"—Matt Moore Appearing Opposite Star.

PARTICULAR care has been evidenced in the selection of the players who will be seen in the supporting cast of Mary Pickford's new production, "The Pride of the Clan," which is now being produced under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, and will be released by Artcraft Pictures. Each character is portrayed by an artist especially fitted to the part and one who has achieved success on the "legitimate" stage as well as on the screen.

In the role of Jamie Campbell, the chief supporting part to Miss Pickford is Matt Moore, whose effective screen characterizations have made him particularly popular with the photoplay public. As the stalwart Scotch youth and sweetheart of Marget McTavish, Mr. Moore will undoubtedly appear to particular advantage.

Kathryn Browne Decker, who will be seen in the role of the "Countess of Dunstable," first became known to the theater-going public as Kathryn Browne in many metropolitan stage hits under the managements of William A. Brady, Charles Frohman, Henry Miller and other well-known producers. On the screen she portrayed leading roles in "The Fifth Commandment," "The Closing Net," "The Beloved Vagabond" and "The Prima Donna's Husband."

Warren Cook, who appears in the Pickford-Artcraft subject as "The Earl of Dunstable," is also widely known among devotees of both the stage and screen. During his career of twenty-one years on the stage and in motion pictures he has won many friends in this and other countries as a result of his finished work.

A particularly difficult character has been given to Edward Roseman, in "Pitcairn," the village atheist, and judging from early reports, his work in "The Pride of the Clan," will be one of the features of the photoplay. Mr. Roseman is another member of the "old school," having spent fifteen years behind the footlights. Among his screen characterizations are those displayed in "The Barrier," "The Pit," "The Wishing Ring" and "The Secret of Eve."

Another principal player of note in Miss Pickford's new production is Joel Day, who portrays the part of the Dominie. In theatricals Mr. Day appeared in stock and with various road companies for three years after which he joined the Edison Company appearing on the screen under the direction of J. Searle Dawley. Mr. Day has played in motion pictures for some seven years, during which time he achieved particular prominence in his portrayals of President Lincoln in "When Lincoln Was President" and "Lincoln for the Defense." Among his other well-known screen characterizations were those evidenced in "The Cub," "Heart of Blue Ridge," "Lola," "Runaway June," etc.

The balance of the cast in "The Pride of the Clan" has been selected with equal care and it is readily felt that never before has "Little Mary" been afforded such exceptional support.

New York Film Salesmen Organize

Seventy Energetic Film Boosters Get Together—Officers Elected.

UNDER the name of the Film Salesmen's Association, the first organization of New York film salesmen was formed at a meeting in Wurlitzer Hall on Saturday, November 25th. Practically every important film company in the Greater City was represented at Saturday's meeting. The organization has on its roster the names of upwards of seventy-five salesmen.

After a preliminary discussion as to future plans and purposes of the organization the following officers were elected: Jack McNevins, president; Austin Interrante, vice president; Emilie Bullwinkle, treasurer; Horace Fuld, secretary, and M. Weisman, sergeant-at-arms. The newly-appointed officers were instructed to draw up by-laws to be submitted before the organization at its next meeting, which will be held in the projection room of the World Film Company, 126 West Forty-sixth street, at 5 o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 5th.

The charter members present at the first meeting were: A. Interrante, B. Frank, R. S. Clark, H. Fuld, F. A. Lappen, E. F. Johnston, J. Goldstein, H. M. Johnston, J. G. Hallett, A. H. Corn, H. Danto, H. Ginsburg, E. C. Bullwinkle, J. McNevins, W. C. Carter, J. B. Zimmerman, W. Lamb, H. G. Segal, J. Feibush, R. Perry, P. Smith, M. Weisman, M. J. Kronacher, W. J. Weisfeld, S. Rubenstein, M. Westebbe, J. Weinberg, H. Erickson, C. Saunder, C. Johnston, C. Rosengarten, J. Schwartz, B. Schwartz, H. H. Thomas, I. Goetz, M. Felder, F. Goldfarb, W. Roosevelt, J. Conlin, C. H. Zerner, E. J. Drucker, H. Stern, I. Stremer, J. Knopfle, J. Bellman and W. G. Schmidt.

Creative Producing Its Initial Subject

Leon Wagner at Head of Concern—Jane Gail to be Featured.

LEON WAGNER, Donald Campbell and Jack Weinberg, all widely known in the film business, are the announced officers—respectively president, secretary and treasurer—of the newly organized Creative Film Company, which recently began the production of a big feature photoplay which is expected to be ready for the market within the next few weeks. The capital for the enterprise is more than adequate, it is announced, and the practical experience which the promoters of the company have had in the various lines of the business will undoubtedly be used to great advantage in the operation of the company.

Leon Wagner will be recalled for his association with the Sterling Camera and Film Company, but is best known through the reputation he has established as a technical expert and cameraman. With the Creative Film Company, Mr. Wagner, although president of the concern, is already engaged in active work in the production of the picture and is personally supervising every detail of its making, co-operating with Director "Select Bill" Haddock.

Jack Weinberg and Donald Campbell have been engaged principally in the sales end of the film business for a number of years.

The Creative Company's plan is to make its picture bring its profit by reason of the careful manner in which it is produced. There has been no stinting in any of the preparations, it is said. A splendid cast has been selected, with Jane Gail, international screen favorite, in the leading role. Prominent in her support will be Stanley Walpole, May Simon and Violet Stuart.

JACK LONDON POSED FOR PICTURES.

The biggest scoop of the week in motion picture news circles is the work of Bertin E. Moisant who filmed Jack London for The Mutual Weekly three days before he died. Mr. Moisant happened to be in the vicinity of Glen Ellen, Cal., where the London ranch is located, and being a friend of the family called upon the author. Jack London looked the picture of health, and the cameraman little thought that he was grinding out a picture of historic importance in the literary world because the journey into the shadow was so close at hand.

Jack London was pictured just as he lived—a hale, big-hearted fellow of God's great out-of-doors. He is shown driving a farm wagon, currying his favorite horse, feeding his blue-ribbon pigs, and lounging about the ranch house where his recent stories were written. There are charming glimpses of home life, as pictured in the splendid companionship between himself and his wife. The author is shown as he helps her mount her horse and waves to her as she passes out of sight. And the last picture of all shows the author of "The Call of the Wild," and other red-blooded volumes that are truly American, as he holds a squirming, squealing armful of little pigs whose antics cause him to laugh heartily. These exclusive pictures are shown in Mutual Weekly No. 101

CLASSIC PLAYERS GOING TO JAMAICA, W. I.

Two companies of Classic film players will sail early next month for Jamaica, West Indies, where the Arabian Nights in twenty instalments of two reels each will be elaborately produced, as well as a ten reel picture of huge dimensions. Mr. Turner is well-known in Jamaica, as it was he who constructed the massive and artistic settings for "A Daughter of the Gods," the big Annette Kellermann picture now playing at the Lyric Theater.

CHARLOTTE BURTON JOINS ESSANAY.

Charlotte Burton, well-known leading woman in many feature productions, has joined Essanay and is now in Chicago to start in her first play by that company. Miss Burton has been in pictures for the past three years, before that having played on the stage since she was a small child. She is best known perhaps, by her work in heavy leads, or adventurous types.

"Intolerance" Wins the Praise of Chicago Critics.

THE opening presentation of David Wark Griffith's "Intolerance" in Chicago, at the Colonial, Tuesday evening, Nov. 28, was witnessed by a gathering that fairly represented the intelligence and critical acumen of the city's photoplay goers. Had the "theater beautiful" a capacity many times that which it can claim, every seat would have been filled; for the house was practically sold out several days before the opening.

The Chicago dailies devoted much space to a critical discussion of the production, which was pronounced "colossal," "stupendous," "wonderful," "overwhelming," etc. The following excerpts from the criticisms will serve to convey the various viewpoints:

Mae Tinee in the Tribune:

David Wark Griffith, looking into his crystal, has viewed reform through the ages and has thought it not good. Therefore with the wizardry that is his, he has assembled from four corners of his world, and breathed into it the breath life a spectacle that dazes and dazzles by its stupendousness, to prove his point. Through three and one-half hours he holds you still, tense, and gasping, fairly hypnotized by sound, color, and the swift and perfect action that is marred by no flaws of production. When the last curtain falls, mentally you fall with it. Your brain is all of a heap. And you say to your neighbor, as your neighbor says to you:

"Wasn't it wonderful—wonderful? But just what was it all about?"

"Intolerance" is, to be frank, the splendid utterances of an intolerant. The reformers would down with a lot of things and Mr. Griffith would down with the reformers.

Louella O. Parsons in the Herald:

"Intolerance" was presented last night at the Colonial with ushers clad in the gorgeous raiment of Belshazzar's time. It knocked at Chicago's door and asked admittance, not on the strength of the merit of "The Birth of a Nation," but because of its own tremendous power.

"Intolerance" is not a photoplay of individuals, it is too colossal a creation to deal with such unimportant things as persons. It deals with people collectively, their foibles, their sorrows, their joys and their passions. A sun play of the ages, its creator calls it. Four separate periods are concerned in the making of this great picture drama.

The mental strain of seeing "Intolerance" staggers with its excess of emotion. We have seen so much beauty, so much revelry, so much joy, such bitter sorrow and such intense hatred of warring clans that the brain fairly staggers under the burden. We are so absorbed in the picture that the weariness is not apparent until the curtain falls and we are recalled from our "Arabian Nights" vision to our workaday life.

Bob McKnight in the Examiner:

"Intolerance" is the most colossal achievement of the screen. Some might even go so far as to say it is the most colossal of theatricals. Certainly no film ever recorded anything so big before and in my opinion never will again until Griffith completes his next cinema play.

Griffith has shown things that no other producer would have dared to even consider. He has fought a noble battle against bigotry and he may win more than we or he can have the remotest idea of. He has made his fight that of love against hate, or the poor, weak and friendless against the rich and powerful. He has shown hate is the same since the dawn of man; that it is in incessant conflict with good; and sometimes wins.

Griffith is a great prophet and this is his greatest sermon. He sees "meddling" as the greatest evil; the most necessary to remedy.

W. K. Hollander in the News:

If one were to be critical he would complain of the bigness, greatness and massiveness of the production, which make it impossible for consumption at one sitting. Much of its grandeur and sensational display escapes the attention of the spectator. Yet few will venture into the Colonial a second time, for its attraction does not possess the alluring qualities which compel more than one inspection.

Oma Moody Lawrence in the Post:

There are wonderful historical pageants for the lover of history; there are heights of emotional acting that have never before been achieved on stage or screen. There are moments of deepest tragedy and touches of the most delicious comedy. There are thrills for the man who enjoys the spectacular, and the lover of simplicity will be charmed in equal measure.

The Optimist in the American:

Never were there such mob scenes, such massed attacks of humanity, such a display of ancient warfare, such a picturization of history past and present mingled in so beautiful a way with a truly stupendous number of close-ups as well as distance effects.

More can be learned there in three hours than could be absorbed in books during months of study.

The Critic of the Journal:

The shifting of the scenes from the modern to the medieval and then to the ancient, back to the modern and then to the Babylonian age is effected by the showing of a woman—Lillian Gish—rocking a cradle. From the interminable rocking of the cradle the scenes portrayed are brought forth.

The shifting at times brought gasps of annoyance from the audience, particularly when, during a sixty-mile-an-hour race between a racing automobile and a flyer to save the boy from hanging for murder, the scene shifted to show the forces of Cyrus approaching Babylon, and then shifted again for part of the massacre of St. Bartholomew's night.

But eventually the wild race was taken up again, and the boy saved just as the noose was being adjusted.

During an intermission Mr. Griffith responded to widespread calls for a speech. He thanked his players, the musicians and the audience for the great success of the opening, and modestly hid the star of the evening behind the praise bestowed on others.

The prices of admission to "Intolerance" at nights and Saturday matinees run from 25 cents to $2; other matinees run from 25 cents to $1.

Prominent London Buyer of Export Films Believes Product Will Soon Be Shipped Direct from America to Destination.

A prominent London buyer of films for export purposes pays a handsome tribute to American producers in a recent issue of the Kinematograph Weekly. After paying due compliments to British makers the buyer refers to the extraordinary efforts America has put forth in the export line.

Employing a huge amount of capital, and spending with great liberality, the American manufacturers have been able to produce on an immense scale hitherto undreamed of. With immense areas easily accessible, and scenes of incomparable natural beauty, the American starts with a great advantage, and the fact that there are within the borders of the United States a hundred millions of people, for whom he can cater, is an additional fact in his favor.

For some reason or other, I don't know quite why, we don't get in the British films the same well-defined marks of national interest that the American maker imparts to his products. Neither can we here, apparently, produce the same exciting films—"blood and thunder" films, if you like—that the American maker puts on the market. Neither here nor on the continent are there now the circuses that used to exist, with their troupes of clever gymnasts, performing remarkable feats of skill and agility. The result is, that in spite of the great improvements in Britsh films, and the splendid perseverance of British makers, I should think that 90 per cent. of the whole of the films that go to some of our Overseas Dominions are American and I cannot see anything that is likely to stop this American "invasion." The Americans are spending unlimited supplies of money, they have some wonderful producers, and the whole business seems to be a part of American life.

Questioned on the likelihood of export films being shipped direct from America to their destination, instead of being sent through London as the distributing center, the buyer agreed that this would be done, and proceeds:

First of all, of course, the American manufacturer and the British buyer have experienced great difficulty in getting the goods across the danger zone. The producer naturally does not want to see his output go down to the bottom of the sea, and finding less difficulty in getting his wares to countries lying wide of Britain, he naturally ships direct those goods which in the ordinary way would first have come to London. There are, of course, certain advantages in shipping to one center, and that is especially the case where producers who, in acquiring English rights, have also, under the same contracts, acquired the rights for all the Overseas Dominions. But these advantages are now more than counterbalanced by war risks, import duties, and other restrictions due to the war.

Much of the buying for Australia, India, Japan and even for Canada, has been done here in London, but as things are, there is no reason why this should continue, and the practice is largely diminishing. Some of the dominions, of course, give British products a preferential tariff, in certain cases 25 per cent., but this is not of great moment in the film trade, and frankly, I am afraid the chances are all against the British film producer ever becoming a serious competitor with the American film manufacturer.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Chauncey Goldsmith, leading legal representative of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, arrived in the city Monday morning, Nov. 27, and immediately got in connection with Mr. Mock and other stockholders of Motography, with a view to the purchase of that publication. He returned last Wednesday when he returned to New York on the Twentieth Century without having been able to close a deal. It can be said without fear of contradiction that Mr. Brulatour has not changed ownership and will remain under its present control and be published as formerly.

N. William Aronson, business manager for Francis X. Bushman, has sent this office the following communication: "On account of the persistent rumors being circulated that Francis X. Bushman, of the Metro Pictures Company, would resign January the 1st, and would at once begin making pictures for a certain Broadway film distributor, it is due both to Mr. Bushman and the Metro Company that this story be definitely denied. As Mr. Bushman's personal representative and business manager, may I state that he has no intention of severing his connections with the Metro Company, notwithstanding any stories to the contrary."

Educational pictures showing the industries and resources of Sweden and also several war incidents were seen at Orchestra Hall, Thanksgiving afternoon, under the direction of Axel Palmgren, one of the editors of the Stockholm Dagblad, the largest newspaper in Stockholm. This picture will also be shown at the Strand theater—reopened specially for the occasion—on Dec. 7, 8, 9 and 10. The proceeds will be devoted to the American Red Cross.

"Film row," the district on West Madison street, between Clark and Dearborn streets, was the scene of a riot, in which opposing locals of moving picture operators' unions participated, on Wednesday, Nov. 29. Guns were drawn and billies were used before a riot call brought a large force of police in a hurry to the Rose theater, where business agents of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 157, and the International Alliance of Theatre Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators, Local No. 110, had clashed on the question of jurisdiction. It appears that Henry Gunthrie, Arthur Koch, George W. Halladay and Arthur G. Allison, members of Local 157, tried to enter the cage of Ralph E. French, an operator at the Alcazar theater, with the avowed purpose of attacking him. These men were arrested and held to appear in the South Clark St. court Friday morning, Dec. 1. Frank Gusenberg, another operator, who was arrested on the complaint of George Heiss, on a charge of attacking him, will also be arraigned in the court.

Mae Marsh stole a march on moving picturedom in Chicago last week. She arrived in town unheralded, Saturday, Nov. 25, and took the place of an usher at the Colonial and handed out programs on the closing night of "The Birth of a Nation." Strange to say, no one among the spectators recognized the famous star. Miss Marsh was accompanied by her mother and her sisters, Misses Marguerite, Mildred, Frances and Leslie.

The members of the Chicago Political Equality League announce another city-wide examination of moving picture theaters. The committee on moving picture censorship has already made plans to introduce a new bill for state censorship at the meeting of the new legislature in Springfield. Every moving picture theater in Chicago and vicinity will be visited daily, for a period of 10 days, during the month of December, and a report of the character of the photoplays offered will be made. A mass meeting will be held Dec. 29 to lay plans to replace the bill passed by the legislature at Springfield and vetoed by Governor Dunne early in the current year.

Mayor Johnson, of Gary, Ind., granted a permit Thursday, Nov. 30, for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" in that city. This action was taken after the owners of the film had unsuccessfully sought to enjoin the city authorities in the Superior Court, at Hammond, from preventing the presentation. Representatives of 3,000 negro residents of Gary asked for the suppression of the picture, and many threats were made. Six policemen guarded the theater in Gary at the matinee and evening shows.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Studebaker—"War Brides" (Selznick), featuring Nazimova, will begin a run at this theater on Tuesday, Dec. 5. "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" closed on Dec. 3.

Ziegfeld—E. H. Southern and Edith Story in "An Enemy to the King" (Vitagraph), the Vitagraph "Scarlet Runner" serial, and a comedy.

La Salle—"Idle Wives" (Universal) opens on Dec. 3.

Colonial—"Intolerance" (D. W. Griffith) opened on Tuesday, Nov. 28. The crowds in front of the theater since the opening reminds one of the first days of "The Birth of a Nation" in the city.

BROOKLYN PROJECTION ASSOCIATION DANCE.

The Brooklyn Projection Association, which consists of operators, managers and all employees of the moving picture theaters in that section, announce a carnival and ball, to be held at the Brownsville Labor Lyceum, at Sackman street and Liberty avenue, Brooklyn, on Sunday, December 31, 1916.

In this connection, the association, which was incorporated last February, wishes to announce that its books are open for membership for all employees of the motion picture houses in Brooklyn and they wish the active co-operation of all such employees in order to make the association a truly fraternal body of value to everyone interested. Mr. Benjamin Greenwald is the secretary and his address 449 Shepard avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

At the ball many prominent moving picture stars will appear and it is expected that the affair will be enjoyable in every way. The association is arranging to have local moving pictures of the vicinity, which will be shown at the ball. Committee: A. Mauckler, A. S. Meyers, Benj. Greenwald, Gus. Hirsh, J. E. Tobin, M. Silverman, Al. Salton, M. Fein.

CAPRICE COMPANY GOING TO FLORIDA.

June Caprice's fifth photoplay for William Fox is now well under way. Next week the company will leave for a well-known winter resort in Florida, to snap some beautiful exterior scenes. Chief in Miss Caprice's supporting cast are Frank Morgan, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Betty Prendergast, Grace Stevens and Tom Brooke.

We cannot be blamed for feeling that there must be a good reason for such frantic efforts to withhold the most important evidence. Who got the stock and why?

At Yorke-Metro Studios

Company Back from Monterey Is Now Filming Final Scenes of "Pidgin Island"—Will Soon Start Production on New Feature.

THE Yorke-Metro studios are again active. Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Producer Fred J. Balshofer, Lester Cuneo and the entire Yorke-Metro organization have returned, after spending ten days in Monterey, where seacoast scenes were staged for use in Harold MacGrath's novel, "Pidgin Island."

Producer Balshofer brought back with him five thousand feet of negative that promise to more than compensate for the expense of taking a company to Monterey. Harold Lockwood and May Allison feel that they did the best work of their screen careers in these scenes staged along the beautiful seventeen-mile Pacific Coast Line, and the balance of the cast, headed by Lester Cuneo, are of the same opinion.

A thrilling episode of this feature production was filmed at the Yorke-Metro studios this week. It's an aeroplane disaster and the flying machine drops 800 feet and is smashed as it strikes the ground. This aeroplane, according to the story, is employed by a gang of diamond smugglers in order to evade the custom house authorities on the border line. Harold Lockwood plays the part of the secret service agent who tracks down the gang and May Allison, as winsome Diana Wynne, is the girl in the story.

Not being able to secure a suitable aeroplane for the taking of the scenes, Producer Balshofer had an exact duplicate of a Martin plane built, under supervision of an expert aviator. It took several weeks to get the machine ready, but only a few minutes to have it wrecked while the cameras followed every motion of its downward swoop to destruction.

Producer Fred J. Balshofer will soon start production on a new feature. This week the Yorke-Metro Company closed negotiations with J. P. Hendryx for the screen rights to his novel "The Promise," published by J. P. Putman & Co., of New York and London.

"The Promise" is a story of the timber lands, laid in the American Northwest. The hero of this story is a social derelict who in a series of interesting adventures "comes back" and in his battle wins a great prize, the love of a woman who has made his reformation possible.

Director Balshofer has cast Harold Lockwood and May Allison for the two stellar characters.

Production will be started on "The Promise" immediately after Harold Lockwood and May Allison have completed their work in their present feature, "Pidgin Island."

No More Julius Caesar Money

Actors' Fund Controversy Regarding Proceeds.—Failure of Effort to Satisfy Beneficiaries' Demand.

When a few members of the Hollywood Board of Trade and officials of the Hollywood Carnival Association, the organization that managed the Julius Caesar extravaganza last summer, promised a committee representing the Actors' Fund Association October 27th that they would see the latter received $1,500 in addition to the $2,500 profits already turned over to the association, they reckoned without their hosts. Recently C. C. Craig, prime mover in the "raised ante" movement, stated that all hope of accumulating the necessary fund had been abandoned, the citizens of Hollywood rebelling against what they believed to be the "big stick" methods used by the actors' committee in requesting the extra money for the fund.

And unless the unforeseen arises, the last chapter of the Julius Caesar "unpleasantness" has been written, with the status of both sides exactly the same as when the controversy began. The Actors' Fund received the $2,500 profits accounted for in the report of Harlan G. Palmer, secretary of the Hollywood Carnival Association and the Hollywood business men are out nothing more than their trouble and pains. Some of them believe the amount expended for the necessities of life was more than it should have been.

Theaters on Coast Busy

Many Changes and Improvements in Southern California Houses—Season Opening Good.

Improvements have been commenced on the Auditorium theater in San Bernardino which necessitate the closing of the theater for one week when it will be reopened for a period until it becomes necessary to tear out the present stage in order to connect up the addition, which will make the theater one of the largest in the entire orange belt.

Dan F. Eselin and wife, new proprietors of the theater will direct the improvements, which will include the decoration of the lobby, painting and renovation in various ways.

The architect is now preparing plans for the extension of the building to a depth of thirty-five feet. The plans include a new and larger stage, with additional upstairs dressing rooms, also 300 additional seats. Several hundred opera chairs will be installed to take the place of the seats now in use.

The plans at present call for a picture program the first three days of the week, four acts of vaudeville and three reels of pictures for Thursday and Friday and an entire change of vaudeville and pictures for Saturday and Sunday.

A new feature will be the seggregation of Mexican patrons on the balcony, the entire lower floor with the 300 additional seats, being sufficient for the patronage that is expected to follow the introduction of high-class vaudeville and pictures.

VISITORS AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. McAdoo, his wife, formerly Eleanor Randolph Wilson, daughter of President Wilson, escorted by Postmaster Charles W. Fay of San Francisco, spent two hours at Universal City on the afternoon of November 20, met the leading actors and actresses, viewed the sets on the various stages and posed for pictures before the camera of the Universal Animated Weekly.

Mrs. McAdoo expressed a wish to know how railway wrecks were filmed and Director George Marshall staged one in which Neal Hart bore the brunt of the battle and which brought forth enthusiastic applause by the Secretary and Postmaster Fay. Mrs. McAdoo was sure one of the men had been badly hurt and she was not convinced until he appeared again on the scene laughing.

The visitors displayed much interest in a church scene being filmed by Director Douglas Gerrard and even offered suggestions to the directors regarding its action. Postmaster Fay was delighted to find that Director Allen J. Holubar was a native of San Francisco and he introduced his distinguished friends to him and also to Director Charles Swickard, who is well known in San Francisco.

The visitors were reluctant to leave when the time came to proceed to Santa Barbara, later in the afternoon, but the Secretary and Mrs. McAdoo declared the next time they came to Los Angeles they intended to spend a whole day at least at the film capital.

Other visitors this week to Universal City were Richard Hennerdell of Pennsylvania and chairman of the American Automobile Association and Edsel Ford, son of Henry Ford, with his young wife.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SHOW HUGE SUCCESS.

The vaudeville given at the Hollywood theater by the Hollywood Young People's club Tuesday evening was a success. Neal Burns, the clever comedian loaned by the Christie Film Company, delighted the large audience with his songs.

Josephine Head gave a beautiful interpretative dance, "The Blue Danube," and Babe Eloise Smith, a little seven-year-old child, won hearty applause for her impersonations and dainty dance numbers. Both are artists and are pupils of Miss Gladys Day, dancing teacher at the Woman's Club House.

Two end men from a famous minstrel show, who on account of the war in Europe were able to appear at this special performance proved to be Lonie and Frank Spearman. They brought down the house with the colored dialect, stories and songs.

Dr. L. F. Luckie, former house physician at the Children's Hospital, announced the entertainers. He also made a few remarks, telling of the splendid work being accomplished by Mrs. Lindsay who has been instrumental in the organization of the club.

Home-made candy was sold in the lobby by Misses Maude McLellan and Sue Roen. A bevy of attractive young ladies assisted as ushers.

After the performancne about twenty of the club members were entertained at a merry Dutch supper by Mrs. Lindsay at her home on Yucca street. Many photoplayers were present.

LUMBER FILM IS INTERESTING.

The importance of Los Angeles as a lumber center is illustrated in a motion picture entitled "From Tree to Consumer," which following its showing in Los Angeles, will be sent on a tour of the country. The Hammond Lumber company, which had the film made, and whose yards and shipping are shown in the picture, has received a letter of commendation from Arthur Kinney, commissioner of the Industrial Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce of this city. The picture shows the forests of the great northwest, the sawmills, a ship of the lumber company laden with 4,000,000 feet of rough lumber and the unloading in Los Angeles harbor.

The picture is being shown at the Pantages until Friday of this week. The film contains 1200 feet of pictorial representation of the lumber industry.

WALNUT INDUSTRY FILMED.

Puente walnut scenes, showing the progress of the nuts from the trees to the time they are loaded into cars, were filmed this week by the Pathe company to be released in their weekly program of current pictorial history. The film will be an educational picture, featuring this growing California industry. Pictures were taken of picking and harvesting scenes on the Hurst and Rowland ranches, and through the courtesy of Mr. Neeley, manager of the La Puente Walnut Association house, the Pathe people were enabled to get excellent scenes in the packing house, showing the processing of the nuts, and all the methods that are employed in preparing the nuts for the consumer.

One of the pictures that will be of interest when the film is released at the Orpheum next week is a forty-car trainload of Diamond brand walnuts that was taken as it went through on its way to the eastern markets.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

H. O. Davis, vice-president of Universal Film Manufacturing and general manager of Universal City left on November 22nd for a hurried trip to New York. He expects to be back "on the job" again within two weeks.

Anita King, the Lasky star, went to Oakland this week to preside at the dedication of the Turner & Dahnkens new theater. It was Miss King who turned the first shovel full of earth for this edifice and the theater owners made a special request that she be permitted to appear at its dedication. In addition to Miss King, Miss Myrtle Stedman, the Morosco star, will also preside at the dedication ceremonies.

United States District Judge Trippett on Saturday, December 2, will for the first time in his experience witness the exhibition of a feature film without paying for that enjoyment. This will occur when the court adjourns to the city of Monrovia to inspect a showing of "The Daughter of the Don" at the plant of the Monrovia Feature Film Co.

This feature film is involved in an injunction proceeding brought against its producers by Rand McNally Company of Chicago, who instituted action alleging the scenario was taken from a work entitled "Dons of the Old Pueblo," written by Percival J. Cooney, a copyright of which is alleged to be owned by the Chicago publishers.

Winfield Hogaboom, one of the defendants named in the suit, declares the scenario was assimilated from an early history of Los Angeles, of which he was the assistant editor, and a history of California recently placed on the market by John S. McGroarty.

The decision of the court is awaited with particular interest by many writers and film produces for a possible new construction of the copyright law.

A fire of unknown origin started at the Fox Hollywood studio one morning this week, and partially demolished the front building, where the offices were located. Luckily no film was lost which amounted to anything. R. A. Walsh had directed a few scenes on a new picture the day before, and this negative was lost, but the sets were still up and the cast engaged, so practically no loss was suffered. A small amount of positive was lost. Outside of a few scenarios, and files no other damage was done. This section of the Fox plant belonged to Thomas Dixon, and the report is that rebuilding will start immediately. Several firemen were hurt while fighting the flames.

This week Roscoe Arbuckle started work on a comedy picture at the Sennett studios. It is laid in a bakery and the shop girl, pretty Alice Lake, whom Roscoe brought back from New York, plays opposite the rotund comedian.

Alice Lake is a demure little maid with eyes that speak louder than words, and she is an accomplished actress and can dance in a professional way. She was recruited from the east, and likes the coast very much.

The Lasky Company is building a new series of scene docks, which will occupy an area of fifteen thousand square feet. Upon the completion of these docks, which are being erected between stages one and two, the carpenter force will begin a new shop facing Argyle street and extending from the site of the present scenario writers' offices to the corner of Sunset. These new shops will cover nearly 25,000 square feet and will be so arranged that they will supply both the location grounds in the block across Argyle street and the stages. These buildings will be of fireproof material and will be equipped will all the latest wood working machines. It is expected that the present shops will be run in conjunction with the new plant.

Charles Monroe Lathrop, the publicity representative of the Clune Film Company is to give a lecture on the "Relation of the Motion Picture Plays to the Legitimate Drama" before the members and friends of the Drama Section of the Young Women's Christian Association, on Monday evening November 27.

Mr. Lathrop's talk will be illustrated by Pathescope films shown by Clyde Slatter of the Pathescope company.

The Public Works Committee of the City Council will this week recommend that the Lasky Motion Picture Company be given a temporary permit to close Argyle avenue between Hollywood and Sunset boulevards.

The company owns the property on both sides of the two blocks and intends to put in an ornamental lighting system, erect iron gates and have a watchman. It wants the street closed for six months so that it may be convenienced in its moving picture business. It states that the temporary closing of the two blocks will not interfere with the public as that portion of the street is little used.

So popular was the success of the Lasky production "The Soul of Kura-San," at the Imperial theater in San Francisco, that it has been held over for an additional week—the first time a picture has ever run for a second week at the Imperial theater since the production of "Carmen" by the Lasky Company, we are informed. John Partington, manager of the theater and a recent visitor in Los Angeles, motored back to the Bay City this week and took with him Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsusu Aoki, the popular Japanese Lasky stars, who will appear at the theater during the coming week. Miss Myrtle Stedman has also promised to make an appearance in conjunction with the Hayakawas at the San Francisco Imperial theater.

The Franklin Brothers will soon begin actual work in the filming of the first story for the Fox company. It is a children's play and tests have been made of more than 100 children, most of them fairly well known in the screen world. In order that the youngsters may be properly cared for the company will carry a graduate teacher as part of the staff. School will be called every day and the children given opportunity for education as well as for play.

A fifth company to make comedies for Fox is expected to be organized within a short time. Negotiations have been carried on with several directors of distinction for some time past. Further announcements will soon be made by General Representative Carlos.

Billy Garwood, formerly leading man for Universal and recently in stock with Morosco, has been engaged this week by Thos. H. Ince to appear opposite Enid Bennett in a new Triangle Kay-Bee play that has just been passed in course of production under the direction of Charles Miller. Mr. Garwood has been assigned to the important role of a young inventor who becomes involved in a romance with Miss Bennett as a girl of the slums. Billy Garwood has been a motion picture idol for six years and appeared in prominent productions of several companies both in the east and west.

For the first time since he abandoned the speaking stage for the silent drama, William S. Hart, the Ince-Triangle star, made an appearance in public this week when he addressed a crowd of two thousand persons from the pulpit of a little church in Santa Ana, Cal. Hart did not assume the role of a preacher, but he introduced one. And that one is no less celebrated a figure than Al Jennings, the famous ex-train robber who once ran for Governor of Oklahoma. Jennings and Hart are intimate friends and the actor was not surprised, therefore, when asked to make an address on the occasion of the one-time outlaw's initial bow from the pulpit. Word was sent broadcast throughout Santa Ana and surrounding towns that in addition to Jennings, his noted screen prototype also would appear in person and the edifice consequently was crowded to the doors, while an overflow stood in the street. Following the sermon, both celebrities were kept busy for an hour and a half, shaking hands with admirers.

Jack Livingston has been engaged this week to appear in support of Charles Ray and Dorothy Dalton in the current Ince-Triangle play by Monte M. Katterjohn, now being filmed under the direction of Reginald Barker. Livingston has been a screen leading man for four years and has played important roles with many of the big organizations of the industry, and is consequently well equipped to undertake the work of assisting Ray and Miss Dalton. Margaret Thompson, Gertrude Claire and J. Barney Sherry also are in the cast.

After a week's absence from the Signal studios, Helen Holmes, Paul C. Hurst, William Brunton, William Behrens and Charles U. Wells have returned from the Yosemite Valley with exterior scenes made for the production of the eighth and ninth episodes of the serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands." Since their return the interiors of the ninth have been completed and the tenth and eleventh installments, that they may make another trip to the mountains for exteriors before the winter snows set in in earnest.

Returning from location on a hand car with a push car trailing, on the last day of their stay in the valley, the company met with an accident which laid up two of the players temporarily and distributed minor bruises and scratches impartially among all the others of the party. The cars were hurrying along a piece of down-grade when they struck a curve too sharp to be made at the speed at which they were traveling and jumped the track, throwing the players to the ground. Paul C. Hurst, director, struck on his shoulder, tearing loose the ligaments and necessitating that he wear it in a brace for several weeks; Behrens was thrown against a small boulder, the shock of the fall leaving him unable to work for two days.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Catching the Kiddies.

GETTING back into the dear past, theatrical managers used to devote their efforts at getting women into the house on the proposition that where the women went the men were sure to be. Dave Udell, voicing the modern proposition, says to get the children who will bring their mothers and naturally the men will follow. Mr. Udell who is familiar to readers of this department through the frequent reproduction of his advertising, has told it in his own words, but before we yield the floor to him, we are going to quote from the letter that covers his article, for here he voices another great truth when he writes:

> Bring the "Birth of a Nation" to town. Go to a few school teachers and other interested people and tell them about it. Don't bill it. Just send rumors around to the high-brows that you are going to have "The Birth of a Nation," a great historical feature, etc., etc. What will happen? Why, Mr. Birth of a Nation will fall flat. That's all.
> And even so with the Children's Program. It has been a fizzle in most places because the exhibitor told a few, tacked up a few black notices about the great educational benefit derived from such a thing and scared every child in town into believing that he was being schooled in the theatre, and we all know how easy it is to instruct children with hard, cold facts. They want everything wrapped up in fiction; their education must be given in saccharine doses; and subtility must be given to the advertising and knowledge and discretion to the program. On another page I have outlined the way which was a success here and will surely work the same the world over.

Then he goes on to discuss the matter in regular written-for-the-paper form and this is interesting, but he said more than half of it in the paragraph just above. This is his more formal argument:

It is the guess work in advertising a production or a set of pictures that is seriously injuring the prestige of the average moving picture theatre. When a picture falls short of the advertising there is always a complaint. After a repeated number of these complaints the public will no longer heed the advertising, which they consider hot-air.

The first thing an exhibitor needs is something solid to advertise; something that is sure to be good, not only once or twice, but all the time. Permanent quality well advertised will keep a theatre head and shoulders above water.

"The Children's Program," can be averred as the best advertising proposition on the market. That is, if it is ADVERTISED. Boosted and shoved with plenty of push and the same dexterity that a mammoth production is advertised.

The following points can be considered in advertising "The Children's Program":

1st. Saturday' afternoons from two to six is the best time for a program of this nature, because more people are at liberty on Saturday afternoon than any other time.

2nd. The Parent Teachers' Association should be informed as to the running order and requested to help in selecting subjects which are being promulgated in their work and the work in the schools. All organizations should be informed as to the plan, because all organizations are in some way connected with child life.

3rd. The prices should be 5 cents for children and 10 cents for adults.

4th. On every program there must be a comedy of a refined nature. Look them up. There are many.

5th. As a background to the program a child's song or chorus should be sung by a child or several children.

6th. A fairy tale should be the main feature of the performance.

7th. Any clever novelty musical act is O. K., but not necessary. Neither is the singing necessary, but helps to attract.

8th. Following is a list of three programs which I have shown with the greatest success. The attendance doubled each week, and although we cannot expect this to be the case always, a good crowd will be in attendance:

First Program: Baby Early in "Such a Little Princess"—fairy tale in three acts; Hearst Pictorial; Powers Cartoons; novelty musical act featuring a harmonica player.

Second Program: Baby Early in "In the Kingdom of Nowhereland"—fairy tale in three acts; Billie Jacobs in "School Days"; novelty dog photo vaudeville act.

Third Program: "Beauty and the Beast"—fairy tale in three acts; Hearst Pictorial; Powers' Cartoons.

9th. There are many better programs than these, but not much better. The children were delighted. The parents who were also there in behalf of the children, "Never saw children so overjoyed." Such pictures as above mentioned cannot offend. They please and educate. They should be boosted to the skies. You cannot over-advertise a good thing like this. It is the lack of advertising which places such programs in the background.

10. ADVERTISE TO THE CHILDREN. To children from 5 to 12 years of age send printed personal letters with sentiment something like this: "Once upon a time 'Such a Little Princes' was left all alone in the woods. And the woods was dark and dreary. And this little princess didn't have any mamma or papa. And a great big lion, and lots of other animals saw her and they didn't eat her up at all—they liked her. If bad men would try and steal this princess the old lion would run right after them and chase them away."

"And a little child shall lead them." This old saying is true to the core. The child interests the parents and the grand-parents are interested too, because they are childish. The old folks like to come 'just to please the children."

The mind of a child is more receptive than an older person's. You cannot humbug a child. They are too quick of comprehension.

Just give them a good, clean show and boost it to the skies, and see if they don't flock thick and fast.

Then to prove he doesn't know it all, Dave asks why producers overwork the fade and the close-up. Huh! If we could tell why a producer does any one of the seven thousand foolish and unreasonable things he does, we would not be running this department. We'd be down in Wall Street working about seven days ahead of the market. That is something that not even a clairvoyant can find out.

Superlatives.

Under this title the Stillman, Cleveland, prints a story in its program, and it is worth reading. Sobriety of adjective is a thing greatly to be desired and a succession of "greatests" and "bests" will soon nullify the effect of any advertising. Print this in your own program and live up to it:

> The Stillman theater has not yet announced to its patrons that it offers "the biggest film of the year" or "a masterpiece of photoplay" or any other undeserved or ridiculous superlatives. Neither has it proclaimed itself "the most beautiful theater in America"—or in Cleveland, even; nor talked about how much it cost, nor spoken of its programs as the best that can be bought, or the best in the city.
> We believe that the picture-play will never be at its best till it discards the superlatives. We believe that even in cases where superlatives are justified by the facts they will not be believed, and are therefore injurious.
>
> From the current issue of a trade paper we cull a few descriptive phrases from the advertisements of different productions by different producers:
> "The greatest cinema spectacle in the world."
> "The most magnificent spectacle drama in the history of the screen." (Also it "eclipses the possibilities of the spoken drama.")
>
> "The year's most novel and daring achievement in filmdom."
> "The greatest super-feature of the year."
> "The greatest detective drama ever produced on the stage or screen."
> "A feature . . . play that stands out pre-eminently in the film field."
> Can it be possible that some of these statements are inaccurate—for it is certainly impossible that they all be true? And if that is the case will we not be cautious about believing that one program offers "the greatest stars on earth in the greatest plays yet filmed"—particularly as none of these stars or plays are among the attractions described by the group of superlatives just quoted? Further, it is still another producer who offers an actor described as the "crowned king of the screen," starring with the "queen of motion pictures"—and we'll register a guess right here that the lady so described is not the lady you thought of when you read that phrase. And please bear in mind that all these laudatory statements are published over the signature of the company fathering them; they aren't mere obiter dicta; they're evidently published—and intended to be taken—as serious statements.
> One more little group: You may be interested to know that though one offering is "the greatest box-office success in the history of the screen" it is quite another that is "the biggest and safest proposition ever offered in the motion picture business," while another "protects, secures, guards against any influence that tends to deprive your box-office of even a single ticket." And all the time (but elsewhere) "the sweeping on-rush of bookings for the might (we won't name it here) program stands unparalleled."

And we give you our word that we're leaving out what we consider the gem of them all—because it's too long to reprint.

We mention all of this because we want you to know that we're "agin it." When we can offer you a play that we think is a good play—and we don't expect to offer any other kind—we won't tell you it's the greatest production the screen has ever seen. Even if we thought it a correct statement we wouldn't say it, what would be the use—you wouldn't believe it! We'll try to make our offerings sound attractive, of course; but we'll stick to what we honestly believe to be the truth about them, and if that doesn't bring you to see them we'll at least have the big satisfaction of knowing that we didn't lure you here under false pretenses—and send you away dissatisfied. We're going to be mighty cautious with superlatives.

Why? Because we want your confidence in our advertising statements. We want you to believe what we say about Stillman offerings. And the only way we know to get your confidence and your belief is to be truthful in our promises.

Take Your Choice.

H. A. Chenoweth, of the Opera House, Westfield, Mass., is making a new use of his paint idea. He got out a circular for "The Crimson Stain," following the general lines of the trade paper advertising for this feature, and in the center he uses the panel shown to the left of the cut. The stain is a smear of red paint, which does not wholly fit the reading matter. The panel on the right shows the original use for which the text was intended, the panel here being covered by a strip of white cloth stained with a red dye down the center and suggesting a bit of discarded bandage. This feature can be worked in many ways. If paint is used, the text should be changed and, as Mr. Chenoweth recently explained, flat paint should be used, as this dries quickly.

HOLD THIS CRIMSON STAIN UP TO THE LIGHT—You may see through it. But if you want to see a wonderful serial GO TO THE OPERA HOUSE and see "The Crimson Stain Mystery. ? ? ? ? ? ?

Here's a Stunt.

The Kauffman News, the one-page house organ of the United Film Service, Memphis, Tenn., prints a stunt that can be used for any picture. One of its clients paraded a "blind" man with a dog, and on his sign was printed "I would give $100 if I could see the Avenging Conscience at the ———" It would be better to use a fake blind man as sympathy, for a real blind person might offset some of the effect, and he can steer through a crowd better, as well.

Here's That Bagley.

It took Ray Bagley a long, long time to get into a letter-writing frame of mind, but he writes so interestingly that we'll forgive him, but we'll hound him if he takes so long again. We do not like to lose touch with old friends, but evidently Mr. Bagley has been busy. Let him tell it:

> When I tell you that business has been so good down here that I haven't had time to write to anyone, I think you will pardon the delay. I'll bet you thought I'd gone back on the road again, selling slate pencils, when your query as to "What had become of Bagley" some time ago failed to get a rise. I saw it and intended to answer pronto, but forgot it in the rush.
> I am now associated with Mr. Hoyt, for whom I managed the Empire Theater in Missoula, Montana, and who is directly responsible for my being in the moving picture business today. Our new Liberty theater, Long Beach, Calif., was completed last June, seats nine hundred, and we think it is about the keenest "fillum shop" in the entire state. We have a large pipe organ and a wizard at the console and are using three changes a week of Triangle and Fox. "The Grip of Evil" is doing a big business for us, largely on account of the local interest, the Balboa plant being located in this city.
> Our beautiful theater, good music, good pictures and original methods of presentation (some of them are Ralphruffner's, but don't tip it off) have made a decided hit with the film folks appearing on our programs and they frequently come down here to see their pictures. Bessie Love served punch at our opening on the afternoon of June 15th, and appeared on the stage at both evening performances. De Wolf Hopper came down and recited "Casey" for our audiences when we played the picture and the following other stars have appeared on our stage in person at one time or another: Charles Murray, Louise Fazenda, "Slim" Summerville, Bobbie Dunn, Fred Mace, Harry Kerr, Glenn Cavender, Edward Kennedy, Mary Thurman, Harry Williams (Key-

Of course, this isn't so much of a novelty down here, but the stars are just as popular here as anywhere else, and we can bank on capacity business any time we advertise a star in person. Douglas Fairbanks made his "entrance" right over the footlights the night he was here. The audience had just seen "Manhattan Madness," and they sure gave him a reception.

little and watch the crowds come in. It has been an uphill grind, but we've got things coming our way now. I'll bet I have me a "Henry" in the spring.

I don't think we have put over any ideas that could be called new, but here are a few stunts, some new and some old, that "brought home the bacon":

We put on a Midnight Matinee at advanced prices [illegible] over twenty-five members of the Key [illegible] out and there were stunts [illegible] Fred Mace Charlie Murray [illegible] Will[illegible] Slim Summerville and [illegible] the box at midnight and [illegible] It created quite a stir [illegible] out in advance. [illegible] all that sort of thing.

Monday of this week we [illegible] tion with [illegible] up clear across the sidewalk. I'm sending you ads and write-ups on this which explain it better and quicker than I can. Our space in each paper here is never less than forty inches a day on the average and we [illegible] a few ads I hope not to have at least and we [illegible] to run very [illegible] from [illegible]

All kidding aside, this is the [illegible] for four months, and it's just 3:35 a. m. in the morning, now, so you see I haven't all the time I need yet.

That Midnight Matinee must have been [illegible] imagine Fred Mace about that time of night—and Polly Moran.

As might be expected the Bagley exhibits are [illegible] of the natural born hustlers. As a sample, here is just how the Fashion Show works. We've told how the house booms the store and the store reciprocates, but here is the top of a three-column down-the-page ad that shows just how the store does its share. The cut shows about the top six inches. Here it gets the shopper who is not a regular theatergoer, just as the companion advertising in the house [illegible] gets the theatergoer for the store. The house advertising is even better and shows a drawn design that is worth reproduction in spite of its size. The original is 10¾ inches across four columns. If you can afford to splurge it will pay to do something distinctive like this. The effect on a heavy page is unusual. The press story ran across three columns, nearly a full column in all, and it was not under "theaters," but "Social and Club Life." It gets where people who are not regulars will see it treated as a news event and not merely as something at the theater. We are saving up a couple of general advertisements to reproduce later, but this is all the space we can spare this time.

Needs a Name.

The St. Denis, Montreal, sends in a program unique in that the name of the house is not mentioned save in a back page write-up. Here the house is named twice in a running story. It should have been put on the front page and also on the inside pages containing the program. The latter is printed both in French and English. The front page and the back are reproduced here to show how it is laid out. It is printed in green and yellow on a pea-green stock, and plays up the music strongly, this house being the home of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra.

We think it would pay to give the musical program as is done at so many houses now. With a real symphony orchestra very prominently featured, it is an oversight that more is not made of the musical program, naming the selections and giving a few lines of description. The picture on the mimic screen is changed weekly.

Safe and Sane.

Frank Stanton, of the Fenway, Boston, makes a point over most managements when he announces that though the Board of Health will again permit children over eight to attend the theater, he will delay the Children's Matinees until the situation further improves. Many exhibitors during the paralysis scare made an unpleasant impression upon mothers by their efforts to keep open. Mr. Stanton adopts the wiser cost. And to keep interest alive, he is already announcing souvenirs for the first morning performance. Another stunt is an addition of a Mary Pickford reissue to the matinee program each day. These pictures are not shown in the evening. This is better than some cheap souvenir as a business builder for matinees.

More Calendar.

The calendar card [illegible] Lester W[illegible] chester, of the Pathe Exchange, sends in one that is so unusually good that it gets printed. The original is a card 6½ by 10 inches, a deep cream, printed in brown with an attached print in sepia, tinted very slightly. The calendar space is countersunk and it is evidently a stock [illegible] The is something that is pretty as well as useful and that will find a place almost anywhere it goes. It costs more than the others, but first cost is not the proper way to figure. If you can get something that will do for a cent each and something better for two cents, the two cent card is cheaper if more of the cards go on the wall and stay there for a month or more. Figure costs as proportioned to results and not merely costs alone. The card is put out by the Twilight Theater, Cheney, Wash.

Here's a Good One.

C. J. Ver Halen, of the publicity end of the Minneapolis Paramount Exchange, is giving his clients a good idea. He has had printed up small folders lettered "Stars I have seen at the ———— theater." These have cord ties and are given out on an announced date with one portrait of a Paramount player. Each succeeding week a different portrait is given out, and only regularity in attendance will permit the collector to get the entire set. The scheme makes business on Paramount nights, and makes it week after week instead of losing its pull after the first shot. That greatly enhances its value, and the longer it runs up to a certain point, the better it becomes.

One of this exchange's clients takes the Paramount small features, the cartoon comedies and the Holmes travelogues, and a prize is offered each week for the best essay written on the travelogue by a school child. This, too, is a good idea in that it drives home to teacher and parent the educational possibilities of the pictures. Don't talk about the educational side, or you'll queer the scheme. Make it merely a contest and let the rest work through observation. Both schemes are worth the attention of managers in other territory.

Contest Calendar.

The Alcazar, Tampa, Fla., gets out a monthly calendar that is also a contest, for across the page is a string of Paramount star cuts without names, and prizes are offered for correct identifications. The calendar is 11 by 14 inches and the date figures are large enough to be plainly seen. It is printed on card heavy enough to hang well on the wall, and here is one point that too many overlook. A paper calendar will not stand up for a month. Use a card stock if you would get the best results.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Getting It Clear.

BEFORE you start to write your story, have it wholly clear in your own mind. Do not start with an imperfect lead and trust to luck to straighten it out as you go along. Know intimately all of your factors before you start. Grace refuses to marry Jim. That is her inherent right. But why does she refuse him? Tell yourself before you write the story. Do not start off on no more of a thread than the title Grace's Rebellion. Know before you write the title on paper that she refuses to marry Jim, which is the rebellion in question, know why she refuses, and how she refuses, and then, when you frame up Jim's character you can, according to your story, make him a person who should be refused, or a person no sane girl would refuse. This naturally raises the next question of why she should be expected to marry James. You know she refuses and now you know why. If he is the right sort of man, then you know it is because her father wants to see her married to the right sort of man. If he is not suitable, then you must find some other reason why Grace is asked to accept the diamond solitaire.

Get the entire story fully clear in your own mind before you seek to impart it to the mind of another. Get it all laid out and orderly. It is just as easy to do that as to stop and go back and change your story after you have it partly written. You must have the entire story in accord. One single false note will spoil the entire harmony. It is as easy to write a plausible story as an improbable one if you go at it properly, but you must know precisely what you want to do and why you do it if you would write the story properly in the first draft, and it is easier to think ahead than to work back.

Half of the trouble with produced plays is to be found in the efforts of the director to make a change in the story either after he has made some of the scenes or without looking back and harmonizing the other incidents with the new development. He perhaps has made the scenes in three sets. Now he hits a scene he does not like and changes it. He cannot go back and have the sets built over again. He leaves some jarring incident in the film and when it is shown the public it does not match up.

It is the same way in writing the story. You must justify the entire related action if you make a single change, so it is better to make the changes before you start to write. "Because" is never the proper reply to "Why," unless the word is supported by an ample and convincing reason.

Most authors work carelessly. They slap the story down on paper and think that if they hit the high spots hard the lesser happenings will not be noticed. This is not true. The play is witnesses as a whole and even when the conscious mind is not observant the subconscious intelligence is always active, and this sub-conscious brain will tell the reasoning part that the story is wrong for some reason. The play will irritate even though the reason for the irritation will not be apparent.

It is not enough that you know that the reason Grace refuses to marry Jim is because he is not kind to his mother. You must show in action or in leader that he is unkind to the old lady. You must show him in the act of caving her face in or doing something less violent, or you must use a cut in leader in which Grace says "I cannot marry a man who does not love his mother." That is a reason. It is not a reason to say that she must refuse to marry someone or you would have no story. That is not a reason, nor even an excuse. It is a display of incompetency. Motivate your story clearly even to the smallest and apparently the most insignificant detail. There is no such thing as an insignificant detail. If it is in the story it is important and it must be fully and completely accounted for.

One reason for stories that lack plausibility is haste. You want to get rich quickly. You dash a story off and hurry on to the next one. You do not stop to examine your work. You write it and mail it out before the story gets cold. Don't do that. Wait until you have plenty of time and then look it over again. If Phil Lang had never done anything more for the business than to invent the phrase "Let it get cold," he would have done a lot. The way to get rich is not to write a lot of stories, but to sell a lot, and the way to sell in quantity is to turn out an article of quality. It is the only way to keep on selling.

Get a List.

If you have not had an address slip lately, send for a new one. But please address the paper and NOT this department.

Be Comfortable.

Look to the small comforts when you write. It means a lot to have your chair so high that you write with your elbows above the level of the keyboard. Don't trust to swivel chairs that screw up and down, even when they have locks. Get a chair the right height by building up the legs. If you write much you'll be surprised at the difference if you never tried it. You cannot do your best work if you are cramped and uncomfortable, and you may not know what it is that makes you uncomfortable. Find out.

Slapstick.

Don't write slapstick comedies. The few companies that are still making slapstick stuff are not buying scripts but remembering old Keystones. Meantime Keystone is not trusting so much to pure slapstick as to effect stuff. The most salable comedy right now is the farce type that brings in mild slapstick when there is legitimate excuse. And while you are writing these, try your hand at straight comedy. That is going to be the development presently—some time along in the spring perhaps. Two or three years from now we'll be doing slapstick again, as a novelty, but right now we are going away from it.

That Song Stuff.

The other day we were given a glance at a song publishing contract. It is the first we have seen in some time, but it is reported that the fake song publisher is thriving now that so many have given up photoplay work. The song was "accepted," as most songs are by these fakers, and a contract was sent for signature. It was to be returned with eight dollars in payment of a musical setting. Eight dollars were to be sent when the song was printed and eight more when the copyright notice was sent. It read mightly well at first glance, but it was as full of holes as a swiss cheese. There was no promise that the musical setting would be exclusive, though it was to be "original." There was no promise of more than one submitted copy. There was no assurance that the copyright would be in the author's name, and no assurance that the song would be pushed other than that the publisher would maintain an office and at least once a month advertise in some theatrical publication inviting professionals to come and hear the songs; not the particular song in question, but the catalogue. In substance the author got one copy of the song and a copyright card for his twenty-four dollars. The only man we ever knew who made a success of this sort of thing stipulated that he should have five hundred copies, and then dedicated his song to a local mineral water concern and sold them the lot at a ten dollar profit. It is a good thing to keep away from.

Writing to Please.

It is not enough that you write good stories. You must write what editors and producers want. Keep that fact in mind. You can write to suit yourself, but if you want to sell you must write to please the editor. He is the man who does the paying, and he can pick as he pleases—always, of course subject to the whims of the star, the kinks of the director and the foolishness of the boss. Apart from that he has a free hand, so write to please him and the others who have a say.

Preparedness.

Writing for information a correspondent adds, "If I am successful I shall buy one of your books." We hope she does not buy the book for she will never be successful if she goes into the work in that spirit. You must learn to write before you can sell, and if selling is your sole aim, it does not matter how many books you may purchase. You must go into the game prepared first to work before you can profit by the fruits of your labor, and unless you are not only willing to work but able to take a delight in your studies you'll never get to the check-cashing point, and the purchase of a book will not aid you in the least. For every letter we get asking help in studying, we receive three asking aid in making sales. The proportion is all wrong.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply by mail without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Brooklyn Operators' Notice.

TIME, midnight Thursday, December 7th. PLACE, Broadway Casino, 790 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y. OCCASION, open meeting of all operators, both union and non-union. YOU are cordially invited by Local Union No. 306, and this department and its editor urges you to attend.

There will be no obligation incurred by you in so doing, but it is hoped you can and will be convinced that YOU ought to join with us in the organization to protect your interests and secure for the profession of projection that respect to which its importance justly entitles it.

There will be able men present to address you. The editor of this department will be there and hopes to meet you. Bear in mind you don't have to join because you come, but be a good sport, come out and hear the argument, and then decide for yourself.

Notice to Unions and Examining Boards.

During the past years a great many requests have come to the editor asking him to set forth a list of questions for examination. This has been an impractical thing to do, for reasons which have been repeatedly explained.

I now, however, make this offer. During my tour of the country next spring I will be glad to, wherever time permits, appear before either official or union examining boards, and examine either a genuine candidate or one of the examiners himself, in order to show what, in my opinion, an examination ought to consist of, and the way in which it should be given.

I cannot promise to do this in all cities, because in some cases where the distances to be traveled are long I might not have the time, but where time and physical and mental strength will permit, I will be very glad to accommodate in this respect.

Question No. 167.

If you were operating 15 amperes with two electrists in series, how many amperes could they deliver if used in multiple?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 157.

The Roll of Honor on Question 157 is [illegible] F. N. Irvin, Lufkin, Tex.; M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas; C. H. [illegible], Syracuse, N. Y.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas.

It seems to me that Question 157 is best answered by Brother Irvin, Lufkin, Texas.

Reply to Question No. 157.

By F. N. Irvin, Lufkin, Tex.

The Question:

[illegible] The slope will in each individual instance necessarily depend upon the length of the house and the height of the bottom of the screen above the auditorium floor, so far as the main auditorium be concerned. As to the balcony, the slope it must have will depend considerably upon its distance from the screen and its height above the bottom of the screen. It will ordinarily be impracticable to give the main auditorium floor of the long house the same pitch it may have in the short house. I believe on an average house a pitch of one in ten will be found very satisfactory, but in some cases that figure may be increased to the point where the question of safety is encountered. Under no circumstances should the slope go above this point, since the rule should be safety first, last and all the time. Under no conditions should there be sufficient slope to require steps in the aisles. Steps in the aisles, even though they be but an inch or two high, should be absolutely prohibited, though the seats themselves could be placed on steps if desired, but it will increase the cost of cleaning. The best method of determining the minimum slope is to stretch a line from the bottom of the screen to the last row of seats and have the top of each row about 3 inches higher than the one in front of it. This will call for a slope of about 3 inches in 32 which is approximately one in ten.

M. M. Moon, Sherman Texas, says in answer to Question 157:

The slope should be just enough so that a person of average height sitting anywhere in the audience can get a full view of the entire screen. There should be never a pitch of more than 1½ inches to the foot. This will give more than 4 inches rise in 32, which is sufficient for a person sitting behind another to see over his head.

Best Books on Projection.

H. W. Squire, Buenos Aires, Argentina, South America, orders a Handbook and asks:

> What do you consider as being the best books to get on the subject of optical projection; also where may they be obtained?

You have ordered the Handbook, and I believe that volume contains more real information within its pages than you will be able to get anywhere else on this particular subject. That is to say, it contains more real information on the optics of moving picture projection.

There is, however, another book, called "Optic Projection," by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage, which is, broadly speaking, an excellent work, and well worth its price to those who really wish to study the optics of projection. It is published by the Comstock Publishing Company, Ithaca, N. Y., from whom it may be obtained.

Motor Drive.

Nelson W. Williams, Jackson, Ga., sends in drawing of a motor drive he has constructed. He says:

> Enclosed find sketch of my new "home made" motor drive and speed regulator, in which you will observe that I have eliminated all belts, so that there is absolutely no loss whatever through friction, so great is the gain through this that whereas the usual motor employed to drive a projector is one-eighth horse power, the motor I am using is one-thirtieth, or, in other words, a sewing machine motor. The driving shaft is square, being turned up around at the end to receive the bearing. The hole in the adjustable friction wheel is, of course, square. The whole thing sets on a wrought iron driving unit with parts of an old Powers lamp to shift the friction pulley wheel. The adjustable friction wheel is nothing more than two cast iron discs faced off on one side with a round piece of sole leather between. The disc attached to the projector is 6 inches in diameter. It is of cast iron and is faced off smooth and fastened to the pulley of a regular motor drive attachment.
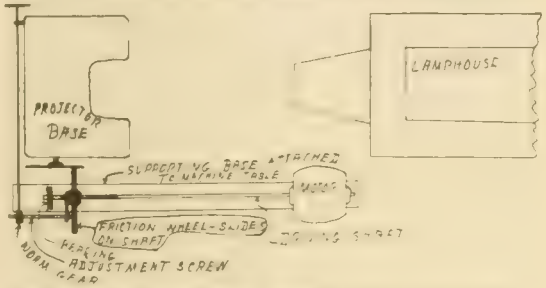
> We have the only show in town, but are not the kind to give just any old kind of projection because there is no competition. We have two Powers Six machines, 60 cycle A. C. through Fort Wayne compensars, and are always trying to see who can get the better picture, which results in very good projection and steady, flickerless pictures, even with our two-blade shutters.



I think the drawing conveys the idea all right, so that no explanation is necessary. I should suppose, however, there would be considerable trouble in getting the leather friction surface to run through and quietly in the disc. The brother is in error in saying that all loss through friction is eliminated because the pressure between the friction surfaces sets up friction in the bearings, though it may not be, and probably is not equal to that set up by tight belts.

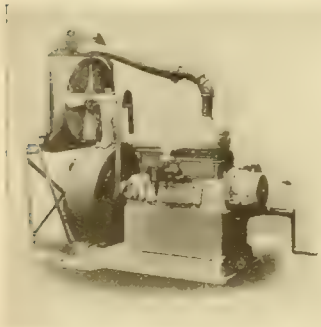
Motor Generator Set.

The Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh, Wis., has made quite a number of changes in their portable lighting plant as described on page 973, May 6, 1916, issue.



In the picture the complete self-contained plant is shown. The motor is the regular 4 cylinder, 4 cycle type with ignition equipment, governor, carburetor, and a 4 K.W., six-pole generator. There is a radiator and fan, the same being mounted as an integral part of the outfit, as shown.

Some theater men have attracted considerable attention by using this outfit as a sort of ballyho, placing it in front of the theater properly encased in glass, of course.

The generator may be had in either 60 or 110 volt pressure, the advantages of each being too well known to the fraternity to require setting forth in this article. The generator is of a special type designed to work with a Universal engine. The armature of the generator acts as the engine fly wheel. This makes a very compact unit. The governor is of the throttling type, which supplies more or less fuel, according to the load, and the engine can use either gas, gasoline or kerosene.

The outfit here shown is the one which is used by the state of North Carolina, which has been referred to several times in the department. It is mounted on an automobile truck, the weight of the outfit complete being 480 pounds.

Projection in the Schools.

This is a matter which I am approaching with considerable hesitation by reason of the fact that it is likely to stir up considerable argument, and I know that very many operators will disagree with the position I am about to take; also some of them will probably disagree more or less strenuously. However I do not feel that it would be right to side-step this particular proposition because of that fact.

To begin with the public school system of this country lies very near to the very foundation of the prosperity and happiness of its people. Anything which hampers, or tends to hamper the progress of the public schools is a very, very serious matter indeed. It is a very generally conceded fact that the moving picture is, in the future, to play an extremely important part in the educational work of the country. There are those, myself among them, who firmly believe that the time is not far distant when a very large proportion of education will be accomplished, one way or another, through the medium of motion pictures. This will apply particularly to geography, botany and similar branches; also it is quite possible, and even probable that certain branches of arithmetic, such as trigonometry and things of that kind can and will be to a considerable extent illustrated by means of moving pictures of diagrams. In other words a sort of system of cartoon work.

Now the modern school consists of anywhere from two to fourteen or fifteen rooms—some of them very many more, and in some of the New York City schools there are as many as fifty teachers. In New York City alone there are, incredible as it seems, between 22,000 and 25,000 school teachers actively employed in the schools of the city. It would, I think, be utterly impossible, at least at this time, to induce the Board of Education of Greater New York to employ even one regular motion picture machine operator for each one of the schools. That would mean several hundred operators, and if these operators received an average salary of $20.00 per week the additional expense to the public schools would be something close to $50,000 per month. Now I believe you will all agree that it would be entirely out of the question to induce the School Board to stand for any such added expense as this. In one year the amount would be about $600,000. Yet there is or soon will be urgent need for a practical motion picture machine operator in every single one of these schools, and practically in every class room, though probably in the larger schools two or three operators could do the work in all rooms; but each school should have at least one.

Now gentlemen what are you going to do with a situation of that kind? Are you going to lie back and retard the development of the moving picture in the school in order to force society to provide positions for a huge number, taking the country as a whole, of motion picture machine operators? Or are you going to do what seems to be the only really practical thing and let school teachers themselves take up motion picture operating? Of course, I know the allowing of teachers to do this involves a somewhat serious problem from the moving picture machine operator's point of view, but the fact remains that, whether you like it, or whether I like it, or anybody else likes it or don't like it, that is precisely what will eventually be done. It is precisely what has got to happen, and if you attempt to prevent it you will simply be butting your head against a stone wall. You may, through political influence, succeed, in some of the cities, in retarding the matter for a time, but in so doing you are retarding the development of the school, or rather the development of the motion picture in the schools; also how many unions can supply operators well enough posted on the optics of the projector to eliminate eye strain? Mind you when the school teacher takes up this matter he is going to very quickly discover the fact that the optics of the projector is a hugely important matter from the standpoint of eye strain, and is going to study and understand it. He is not a man who says: "To hell with knowledge"—as, I am sorry to say, all too many moving picture machine operators say. On the contrary he is an individual who thoroughly believes in study, and the absorption of all the knowledge possible.

And now I am getting down to the crux of this whole matter. The fact of the matter is that the really big reason for opposition on the part of operators to school teachers taking up operating lies in the fact that they fear his or her ultimate competition in theatrical work. They fear that if he or she learns to run a projection machine he or she may get out of the job of teaching and proceed to secure, or try to secure a job in a theater. Well, of course, there is something in this objection, but, after all, this only to the short sighted one constitutes a menace. But let us consider. The schools are going to be served by some one. Now if you put moving picture machine operators into the school, that means you will have to have, and will have just that many more recruits to take their places in theatrical work. Granted this proposition, what would be the difference whether the teacher learns it, or other perhaps less desirable men take it up? My own suggestion would be that in the larger cities, where license is required, provision be made to examine and issue to competent teacher-operators a license which shall only be valid for use in the class rooms of schools. Of course this is not much of a protection, because if they are really competent operators they can at any time be examined and take out a regular license. However, the idea, as herein set forth is not designed to convey anything but a general "once over" of the situation.

There are a great many things to be said on both sides of this question, but after everything has been said on both sides, the big outstanding fact is that there are going to be operators in the public schools, and, except for the first hand providing of these operators, it is not going to make one iota of practical difference whether they are teachers or whether they are not teachers, except to him who wishes to force upon the public school system a tremendous and utterly useless additional expense; in other words, force the public school system to employ a great many thousands of non-teacher-operators for which it has no real need.

A Good Scheme.

C. H. Brindly, Souris, Manitoba, says:

I would like to make your acquaintance, though I cannot introduce myself as one of the profession, since I am neither an operator or one having any direct interest in the business. I am an outsider. Notwithstanding this fact, however, I have for the past three years read your department with a great deal of pleasure. I certainly like the way you praise and chastise your correspondents. You are very fair both to the operator and manager, which no doubt accounts for the esteem in which you are held by the moving picture fraternity. If I might be permitted to express my opinion I would say that if it were not for the projection department the moving picture industry would lack several years of having reached its present stage of advancement, and what would that mean? Well, let us not think about it. My view of the matter is that the success of the moving picture industry is and will continue to depend largely upon the manner in which the pictures are projected to the screen. We are paying 50 per cent more to see pictures today than we did a few years ago. Why? I will not say that improved projection saould be given all the credit, but this much is true: Project the best productions of today in the same manner they were projected when the projection department was started, and we would, if we cared to, still view them for the same old nickel. Credit should be given to such gentlemen as La Grow, Griffiths, James, Solar, Martin and a few others who are helping to bring projection to a higher state of efficiency, which will inevitably mean higher (I think, Mr. Richardson, it is called wage, but believe some are fortunate enough to call it salary) salaries. So long as Mr. Operator cannot show the manager better results on the screen than can "Jimmie, the usher," just so long will he, along with the usher, continue to call his weekly stipend "wages." Sympathy is due the operator who takes pride in his work, but cannot get the results he would wish on account of poor equipment or hampering orders from the manager. Why will managers spend hundreds (Thousands, Ed.) of dollars on fancy fronts and interior decorations, and then fall down on the size of the operating room and on its equipment? I have seen your department criticism of the word "coop," but could you by any stretch of the imagination call a 6x6 anything else? But to come down to the object of my writing, I might say that Mr. Harper, the manager of our only theater here, is a personal friend of the writer and on account of that friendship has allowed me the freedom of his operating room. From close observation a few ideas have come to me from those visits, which same I pass along for the benefit of the men—that is to say, if you think they are of value. I enclose sketches, with directions attached; have also made models of two of them which I am sending, so that you may show them to the boys who visit you from time to time, if you think they might make use of the ideas. I know you are interested in the work done in the different houses, and not having seen anything from Souris I might say, briefly, that we have a population of 1,500. Our only theater run by Mr. Harper, seats 240. A 12-foot picture is projected at a distance of 75 feet by a Powers Six, using 8-inch solid below, drawing 30 amperes at the arc, the power being taken from the town plant.

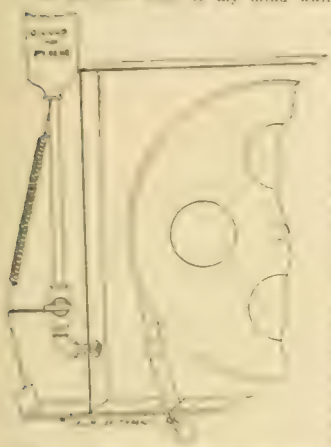
Ideas along the line presented by Mr. J. H. Anderson in your issue of February 26 might be in line, so I append sketch of one that came to my mind while regarding your comment of same. Sometimes one idea brings out another, and the outcome may be somewhat useful. I think the sketch explains itself. You will note, however, that I have placed the outlet at the bottom of the magazine, but it could be placed on the top and instead of an oil cup you could have a small tank, so as to be able to flood the magazine, but perhaps that would not be needed, since before the first could reach the mechanism the film or thread that held the spring would have burnt and released same, thus causing a ray of Pyrene to play on the film as it leaves the magazine. My idea of placing the receptacle for the Pyrene as shown was to increase the pressure. The valve may have to be tested now and then to see that it worked free. This could be done by placing a finger on the outlet and working the valve.



This letter came long ago, but its publication has been delayed through lack of space. Friend Brindly writes a most interesting letter, and some of the ideas he has presented are excellent—so much so that I am going to present one of them this week. It is quite gratifying to know that even outsiders find merit and interest in the department, but this fact has been brought to my attention a great many times and often very much to my surprise. I appreciate Brother Brindly's kind words with regard to the importance of the work of the department, and do not think he has exaggerated the matter to any considerable extent. I shall be pleased to hear from this correspondent again and will try to not delay publication of his letters so long next time.

One of the ideas I have selected for publication this week appears below. Pyrene does not work any injury to the film. You can soak film in it and it does not injure it appreciably. It has no effect whatever on the photographic emulsion.

List of Errors.

M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas, writes:

In October 7th issue of the Moving Picture World you say you would like to be shown why a No. 30 and No. 17 wire would make a 110 ampere fuse, instead of a 47-ampere fuse as you stated in the first sentence, page 84 of the Handbook. If you will read that sentence and think a moment you won't have to be shown. It is so simple it slipped by you. According to your Table on page 83, a No. 30 wire fuses at 10 amperes and a No. 17 at 100 amperes. If you combine the two wires you would add the current required to fuse each of them, which would be 100 plus 10 equals 110, this amperage being very near their combined fusing point. Where you made your mistake was in adding the wire sizes together, instead of the current required to fuse each individual wire. Might I suggest that you print a list of errors contained in the Handbook, so that owners of the book could correct their copies. I think it would help rather than hinder the sale of the book, since it would show you wanted to make it as nearly perfect as possible, and are interested in the books beyond the point of disposing of them at $4.00 per. "Service" its called in some businesses. With regard to your visit here, we have received your acceptance to our invitation, and a committee has been appointed to handle the matter and endeavor to get all the small town managers and operators in this vicinity to attend. A good many have already promised they would be here. They know their "Richardson" better than some of the operators in the larger cities, and some of them are mighty good operators, too. I guess that is the reason. Don't forget the visit. The "necessary local arrangements" will be made. By the way, will that charming daughter of yours accompany you? If so, the local arrangements will have to be elaborated.

I suppose the "elaboration" would most likely consist in the appointment of a good, strong committee (strong in numbers) of the unmarried contingent. Huh? Nope. The daughter will remain right here in little, old New York this time, and continue to project her fingers against the piano keyboard. A 12,000-mile jaunt would be a little too strenuous for a pleasure trip. You need not fear however, but that your Uncle Dudley will be on the job along some time in February.

As to the wire matter, yes, the "47 amperes" is a pure, unadulterated blunder. Apologizes, Brother Larmour. When I published the other I did not stop to look the matter up, all of which tends to show that the editor is only human, occasionally makes some rather absurd errors. I would have no earthly objection to publishing a list of the errors in the Handbook, but I am afraid I have not yet gotten them all together. I have some, but if that kind of list was published it ought to be complete, therefore I invite all those who know of errors in the book to send them in, and we will see if something of that sort cannot be done.

Am I a Member?

Minneapolis, Minnesota, says:

I want to ask you a personal question. Are you or are you not a member of the I. A. T. S. E.? I have had an argument with one of the boys who claim you are not, whereas, I have always understood that you are. How about it?

Yes, Minneapolis, I am a member of Local Union No. 306, I. A. T. S. E., New York City; also last April Local Union No. 384 presented me with Honorary membership, as per the certificate set forth below.

For a time after the Seattle Convention passed a law prohibiting any member from writing anything for publication, I took a withdrawal card and remained on the outside until some time after the following Convention which rescinded the aforesaid law. I only put my card back in No. 306 because a large number of the members and all of the officials of the local insisted that I do so. I did not want to rejoin because I thought it was better that I remain on the outside, and thus be in better position to criticize the I. A., if at any time it seemed to need it. Three hundred and six, however, wanted me to come back, and I did, since which time I have been a more or less active member in that body; also I carry a road card which I, of course, have no real use for.

As to the Honorary Membership, I value it because it carried with it the hearty good will and friendship of every member of Hudson County Local, which is a pretty good sized body, as well as a very progressive one.

As a matter of fact however I don't see that it would or could make any possible difference whether I belong to the I. A. or do not belong to it, so long as I am not actively engaged in operating. The mere fact that a man belongs to the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes of America, or any other organization for that matter, is no proof that he is a credit to the organization, nor is it proof that he is a union man in the true sense of the word. There is many a skunk hiding behind a union card. On the other hand, there are many men outside of the organization who are far more loyal to it than some of its own members.

Now don't get me wrong. I strongly advocate that every operator belong to the organization, but sometimes circumstances prevent a man belonging, such as, for instance, geographical location, or, as in my own case, the fact that I might be able to do better work in advancing the interest of the operator outside than inside. There are times, or there are likely to be times, when an organization stands in urgent need of a rattling good calling down, and there are times when it ought to be done in public, but one cannot very well do that, even though it be for the true and best good of the organization, if one is a member thereof.

Yes, Minneapolis, I am a member, and I believe I can [illegible] work.

pride" to as much real, genuine benefit accomplished for the organization as any other one individual, bar none—at least so far as the operator end of it be concerned. True there are those who will strenuously dispute that statement, but unfortunately for their argument I happen to be in position to produce evidence, and considerable of it is in writing, too, over signatures that might surprise you.

Gives Martin Credit.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., writing under date of September 29, sends in the attached drawing and table, which he has worked out by means of certain experiments. He remarks that it is "very evident that the 6½-7½ combination is the only practical one, since it gives the best values for X and Y."

Following the new course adopted by the department in order to avoid arguments, I sent this drawing and table to Brother Griffiths. I am now making a practice of, previous to publication, referring the various matters, by mail, to Brothers Griffiths, Solar and Martin, who are the three men who have done so much to perfect the optics of the projector, so that before publication we may eliminate, so far as possible, any error in the various articles.

Brother Griffiths writes:

> With reference to Martin's letter and drawing, the drawing is of value merely as showing how the experiments were made, rather than as an illustration of conditions during the experiment. The effect of using such a plate as is shown, is to eliminate spherical aberration, or nearly so, hence Martin's figures, with the thickness of the lens added, are approximately the same as the figures in Table 2, or the same as the curves. What slight difference there may be is due to the slight error still in the lens, plus the difficulty of locating the exact position of the image of the crater. The results he obtained by actual measurement show Brother Martin to be a careful and efficient experimentor, since the results come very close to those obtained by calculations based upon well-known optical laws. It is very gratifying to know that Martin's labor has served to establish the value of Table 2, rather than otherwise. Referring again to his drawing, the rays coming from the circular spot will diverge from the slot, and not from a point in front of it, and under the conditions shown the actual image will be at the aperture. I previously said that the white spot was merely the overlapping of the light, and Martin has proved it, since, in second column of page 1244, August 19th issue, and in italics, Martin says: "In every case the white spot was located forward of the narrowest part of the beam." Yet in his present drawing he has shown it behind the narrowest section of the beam. I have for some time been aware of the fact that the X values as calculated were slightly greater than those found in actual practice, but I have allowed for that in the tables and curves when choosing the distances at which the crater should be located when using various amperages; also I had some time past reached the conclusion that the full information necessary to the proper matching up of the lens system could not be conveyed by one table alone, hence the set of four tables. There was too much of a gap between the figures in Table 2, therefore the curves, which are the same thing without any gap. It might seem to some that I have been harsh in my criticisms of some of Martin's work, but I have not meant to be, since I realize probably better than any one other individual the amount of unselfish labor Friend Martin has contributed to better projection.
> I believe the values X and Y should always be measured from the equivalent plane or curved surface of the condenser, rather than the more convenient plane surface of the lens, in order to maintain the correct enlargement; then one must, for a 6½ inch condenser, allow .9 of an inch and for a 7½ inch condenser allow .75 of an inch.

With regard to this matter of a point to measure from, it seems to me it is one of the crucial things, since not only will it directly and very greatly effect results, but also because you cannot expect the ordinary operator to become sufficiently well versed in optics to locate the optical center or nodal point of a lens. You have got to give him something tangible; something he can see and understand. I cannot locate these various points myself, and I don't ever expect to be able to. That one thing forms the base of a very large study, and in order to locate the optical center of a lens with accuracy one would have to be almost a professional optician.

With regard to the criticisms that the rays diverge at the slot rather than beyond it, why I do not think Brother Martin intended to convey the idea that the ray diverged at the point where he shows the two lines crossing. It is a well-known fact that each pin point of the condenser sends forward a cone of light to the entire spot, therefore it seems to me that the divergance is and must commence at the front surface of the condenser.

A Gentle Tap for Norfolk.

Norfolk writes:

> At the present time I am receiving the truly magnificent salary of $12.00 per, and if I went to the boss for more he probably would ask me if I was losing my mind, because we have a few "operators" down here who receive the sum of $8.00 per week. There is one good job, if you wish to call it such, which pays about $18.00. The rest of the houses range from $5.00 to $15.00 for an 11 to 11 grind. We would like to get your opinion on this state of affairs, and have you drop off here on your southern trip.

Norfolk is one of the very, very few cities where I have thus far found it impractical to arrange for a meeting. If the foregoing is true, I guess it spells the answer. I wrote to the I. A. local, and whereas the reply was courteous, still the local said it was unable to take the matter up. I certainly will stop in Norfolk, provided either the operators or managers of that city have sufficient enterprise to arrange for a meeting. There will be no cost of any kind whatsoever to Norfolk operators and managers, except such as they may incur in making the local arrangements, and the local arrangements may be very simple. In fact it is only necessary to secure the loan of a theater for a couple of hours, after the shows close at night, and secure the attendance of operators and managers.

The trip is being undertaken wholly and entirely for the good of the industry. The Moving Picture World pays the expenses. I am not coming among you soliciting subscriptions or anything else. All I ask is that you get the men together so I can talk to them on practical projection. It is true that some of the local unions or exhibitors leagues make the matter the occasion for quite an elaborate affair, and that, after all, is the best way to do it, because in the end you get more out of it. I will, however, stop in any city named in the itinerary, regardless of whether the preparations be elaborate or be not elaborate. Personally it makes no difference to me. This matter is up to the Norfolk operators and managers. If you have not enterprise enough to make the local arrangements, why most emphatically I am not going to come there and do it myself. If you have I will come and—there you are. But it will be absolutely necessary that I know about this matter positively within the next fifteen days. Cities lying not too far off the route can secure the lecture by paying round trip railway fare and Pullman expenses from nearest point on main route.

As regards conditions named, why most certainly Norfolk managers cannot reasonably expect high class work from a man who is only able to command $5 to $15 per week. Placing this reproduction of a $25,000 photoplay in the hands of a $12 or $15 a week man is about as reasonable a proceeding as it would be to expect a coal teamster to interpret Wagner on the piano. I am told that Norfolk operators are unorganized. Well, if Norfolk managers cannot see how utterly wrong a nd absurd such salaries are I would strongly advise the men to get together and force, if necessary, the conditions the managers ought to give voluntarily as a matter of right and justice.

Harmo-Electric Pipe Organ.

LAST year I described at some length a pipe organ played from a piano keyboard to which it was electrically connected. Some time ago when this instrument was described to a Chicago organist he remarked that "That's a tuba-phone organ," thus implying that it was not a pipe organ. He hadn't seen the Harmo-Electric and took it for granted that the instrument was "only a tubular organ." Now I don't know whether or not this impression was held by other organists; but if so I wish to set them right. The Harmo-Electric is not a tubular organ. Its pipes do not contain reeds. They are genuine organ pipes made by one of the best organ pipe manufacturers in this country and are made with the same careful attention as are those intended for the best church organs. The principal difference between this instrument and the church organ is that the Harmo-Electric is attached (or connected) electrically to a piano keyboard, while a church organ has one, two or more keyboards (manuals). A piano keyboard is a little longer than that of the organ, but otherwise—as a keyboard it is the same thing. Like all organs, the Harmo-Electric presents a slight difference of touch to that of the piano, otherwise an ordinary good pianist will find no real difficulties to overcome in mastering this instrument. Mr. Henri Keates (who is one of Chicago's best moving picture organists) was at the factory on the day I looked at the Harmo-Electric, and he told me any pianist could handle it with a few hours' practice. Mr. Keates seemed quite enthusiastic over this musical innovation. He is playing at the De Luxe theater a beautiful picture house on Chicago's North Side which contains an excellent pipe-organ. Mr. Keates said he could "do anything on the Harmo-Electric that could be done on the pipe-organ." He meant, of course, that he could produce the same effect on the one as upon the other; and judging from what I saw and heard, I believe he could.

The length of keyboard is the same as in all organs—sixty-one notes. The adjustment is so perfect that when a note is struck the organ response is as sharp and quick as the action of a piano, quicker, if such a thing is possible. Rapid, staccato playing is entirely practicable, and even if one wishes to desecrate this noble instrument with ragtime there are no mechanical difficulties in the way.

One of the new developments is a method of connecting either the upper or lower half of any set of pipes at will. This provides a good working substitute for the double keyboard (or "two manuals"). An illustration will make this more clear to the uninitiated.

In the cut a piano keyboard is shown. The arrow in the middle shows where the division occurs. (That is, when you want to use the instrument in this manner.) On the right hand you can throw on any one of the four foot tops its compass running from F in the middle octave upward to its highest note. On the left any eight foot stop can be connected, with a compass ranging from "E" middle octave, downward to its lowest note. This gives the performer a good practical range for solo and accompaniment work with two contrasting voices.

In operating an ordinary pipe organ, the performer—wishing to use a different voice for each his solo and accompaniment (say, flute and cello) will connect one of the stops with his upper manual, the other with his lower. In the economical substitute here offered by the Harmo-Electric, the player connects his flute stop to one side of his keyboard, the cello to the other, thus getting a combination which answers admirably for ordinary work.

You don't need two. You can have more keyboards if you want them, but they cost more. The Harmo-Electric people build organs too, and can supply your instruments with as many manuals as you care to pay for, but the point they are working on is this: To provide the exhibitor with the most satisfactory pipe-organ at the least possible cost. And this new plan of separating a keyboard (say) for a double compass of an octave and a half each, more than compensates for the slight restriction of compass.

I said you could throw any one of the four foot stops on one side and any one on the other. As a matter of fact you can throw on any number of stops (on either side) which you care to use at the time. This gives you a wealth of combination color only limited by the number of stops (sets of pipes) in the style you are using.

Like the most modern organs, the Harmo-Electric has "flappers" to throw off and on the different sets of pipes instead of the old-fashioned "stops" which pulled out and pushed in. These "flappers" all lie just above the performer's hands along the middle of the keyboard and are thrown on and off by an upward or downward stroke of the finger as you play.

Two things should appeal to exhibitors. One is the extreme simplicity of the instrument, the other is the short time required to install it in your house or to take it down, in case you want to move to a bigger house.

Its simplicity of construction reduces to a minimum any chances of getting out of order. They tell me that once a Harmo-Electric is set up no further attention is required beyond keeping the piano in tune—and you have to do that anyway, even when you use only a piano. The Orpheum theater in South Omaha has had one of the smaller instruments in use for nearly two years and hasn't needed fixing once.

The new "Style E" can be set up in three days; the medium styles (those described last year) can be set up in one day. Either could be taken down in three hours. All the pipes are contained in big cases (sound chests) which are placed where most convenient. The organ does not need to be built in your theater.

A detail to which they have given much attention is the automatic player. This is worked through a perforated roll, of course, but with some new features. Here is a partial description as given to me. "The automatic stop-action is operated by air suction to electro-pneumatics and from there to air pressure which opens electro-pneumatics. This is operated by one hole in the perforated roll instead of two, as in other players. Its advantage lies in the saving of paper, tracker bar and other labor on the mechanical end—that is, when it makes and breaks the contact. Makes for durability and simplicity."

Another item is the octave coupler, which is only one and a half inches thick and three and a half inches in diameter.

Style E has eleven stops, including chimes and pedal. The pedal notes are, of course, operated by the feet, but there is a stop which connects these pipes to the keyboard, permitting them to be played by left hand if desirable. This will appeal to beginners.

The Kramer Organ Co. represents the Harmo-Electric in New York in their show rooms in the Film Building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

PANCHO VILLA'S FAMILY PHOTOGRAPHED.

The immediate family and near relatives of Francisco Villa, the famous Mexican bandit and outlaw, have just been filmed for the first time by the International and will appear in the Hearst International News Pictorial. The most notable persons of the group are Mrs. Francisco Villa and her young son Augustin Francisco Jr., who is said to bear a strong resemblance to his notorious father. Next in importance come Hipolito Villa, Francisco's brother, his wife and baby, Maria Louisa, and Mrs. Antonio Villa, widow of the Villa brother who was killed in battle, others appearing in this interesting group are Mrs. Reynalds Martinez Villa, Gen. Caesar F. Moyia, Major Antonio Casteklanos, two notable Villista officers, and Prof. Matias Garcia, of the University of Chihuahua.

"A SHORT-SIGHTED CRIME"—(Tweedledum).

In "A Short-Sighted Crime," which will be released by Unity this week, Tweedledum is given a chance to be irresistibly funny and he lives up to his opportunities from beginning to end. The story is very modern, even though it depends for its fun upon two of our very oldest institutions, marriage and motherhood.

SPLENDID CAST FOR WALSH PICTURE.

A cast which is really superb has been assembled for William Fox's "The Island of Desire," released on December 18. Besides George Walsh, the star, there are such notable photoplayers as Anna Luther, Margaret Gibson, Herschel Mayall, William Burress, William Clifford, Willard Louis, Hector Sarno and Samuel Searles. Otis Turner, who made "The Mediator," had charge of the direction. This is Miss Gibson's first appearance in Fox films.

"CONQUEST OF CANAAN" FOR THE COAST.

The De Luxe Film-Lasky Corporation of San Francisco have secured the Frohman production "Conquest of Canaan," taken from the novel by Booth Tarkington. This is their initial release, and as the reviews of and comments on this big six-reeler have expressed a most gratifying approval, this company is getting off to a good start.

Special Writers Needed

Charles Pathe Says There Is Demand for Scenarios Carefully Prepared.

THE dramatic authors who, in general, consider the moving picture editors as pilferers of their works, have not yet understood that the motion pictures, better than the theater, can lead them to fame and fortune if they devote to the making of a motion picture scenario the time, the attention and the thought which they bring to the writing of a play for the legitimate stage, or any literary work. Yes, there is a repletion of theatrical works and a dearth of good motion picture productions, and I do not believe that I am putting forth a false statement in saying that the motion picture author does not exist.

Charles Pathe.

How is it that the workers of thought do not see that as in all branches of human activity, they must specialize, and this specialization should have as its object not to produce much, but to produce better than the authors more or less qualified are doing now, who, from time to time, and by mere chance, have temporarily become interested in motion pictures.

I consider that the motion picture author and the dramatic author must form in the near future two classes absolutely distinct and separate, and I am convinced that working evenly the first will more rapidly than the second obtain the result which both hope to get from their work and their efforts.

It is useless, I imagine, to demonstrate that the needs of the theater and motion picture, being respectively in the proportion of 1 to 100, the economic law of the offer and request will assuredly benefit the motion picture author in the same proportion.

This question, of course, only moderately interests those already successful, who, having attained glory and riches, have many reasons to continue to follow the paths which have given them fortune and celebrity; but I do not understand why the young authors do not consider motion pictures, where they would find a less crowded path and one easier to follow, provided they produced only well studied, careful and well finished scenarios—the kind of work customary in all plays destined for the theater, which often necessitate a year's work and sometimes more. Two or three motion picture scenarios, I believe, should constitute the annual maximum of production of any author, who has well understood the importance of his interests. In practice, we can state that the few men who have specialized themselves in this art, produce one or two scenarios per month, sometimes one per week. Such hastily written scenarios are bound to be mediocre if not bad.

Therefore, the results are unsatisfactory and financially disappointing, not only for the author but for the exchange man and the distributor who puts the film on the market.

To all producers to whom you desire to give advice, you can say: "Adapt yourselves to do little, but do it well."

PRISCILLA DEAN IN DRAMATIC FILMS.

After having been the leading lady for the Nestor Comedy Company, working with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, under the direction of Louis Chaudet, Priscilla Dean has been transferred to dramatic productions. Edith Roberts succeeds Miss Dean in the Nestor Comedy Company. Miss Roberts has been playing leading parts, both in the Eastern and Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Company, and is considered one of the clever young actresses of the film capital.

Border Tragedy Filmed by Kalem

Actual Event Basis of "Border Wolves," Coming Episode of Robert Welles Ritchie's "Girl From Frisco."

THE publication in the Moving Picture World of December 2, of the news that in staging "Border Wolves," a coming episode of Kalem's "Girl From Frisco" series, the Kalem players journeyed to the Southern California border and enlisted the aid in the battle scenes of a Mexican rebel army of three hundred has brought to light another interesting fact concerning this release in the Kalem series. Information that the story of the two-reel release really duplicated an actual occurrence during the Mexican revolution of 1911 is contained in a letter received last week by Kalem from the author of the series, Robert Welles Ritchie.

"I have been most interested," reads a part of the author's letter, "in reading of the success that you have had in securing realistic atmosphere for the production of 'Border Wolves.' The fact that when your director arrived at the border he found that instead of using ordinary 'supernumeraries' in the big scenes it would be possible to engage a real Mexican 'near-army' is not surprising to me after the knowledge I gained of these bands when I was correspondent for the Sun in Texas and Mexico during the Madero revolution of 1911.

"But there is a remarkable coincidence in the fact that it should be the story of 'Border Wolves,' which these Mexicans engaged in re-enacting. For, in all its essential points, this story is an actual occurrence, which took place in 1911. You will remember that in the story we have Ace Brent, his daughter Barbara, and John Wallace captured by a band of guerrillas just across the border line. They are held for ransom and John Wallace forced to go, under a guard of half-breeds, to the bank across the border to secure the sum demanded. Later, when an attempt is made to double-cross the Mexicans Ace Brent and Barbara are near death before being rescued in the nick of time.

"How close this story is to the real happening you may see from a quotation from one of the notebooks I used while covering the 1911 troubles for the Sun. I had headquarters in San Antonio and had established a string of correspondents in all the railroad towns from Laredo to El Paso. I find this entry:

"'John Hendricks, a wealthy cattleman at Los Vacos and owner of the bank at Del Rio, was lured across the line yesterday on the promise that he could have his brother's body —the brother had been killed by some of Calixte Guerra's band. Hendricks was held at Jiminez, Coahuila, by Guerra for $25,000 ransom and forced to send an order on his own bank for the sum by a half-breed Indian. He tried to double-cross Guerra and was shot. Gen. Geronimo Trevino, commander of the military zone of Monterey, has been notified of the death by Lieut. Leighton at Del Rio.'"

SANGER STUDIO NEAR COMPLETION.

Work on the Sanger Picture Plays Corporation's new studio is rapidly progressing and it will be a matter of only a short time now when Eugene B. Sanger, the president of the concern, will begin on his first release. The studio is located on the southwest corner of Park avenue and 134th street. The main arena is so large that effects can be staged therein that would make the audience believe it was witnessing a scene from the interior of the Metropolitan Opera House. A wide balcony runs around three sides of this, from which lead the dressing rooms, shower baths, etc., on one side for the stars and principals, on the other for the extra people. And the wide balcony itself is to be used as a green room, wherein the player may find easy chairs, books and magazines. Another feature is the projection room—not a cubby tucked into a corner, but an auditorium built below stairs.

KLEINE OPENS BUFFALO OFFICE.

George Kleine announces that he has opened a new branch office at Buffalo, N. Y., for the purpose of handling the feature films of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service in that territory. Upper New York was formerly covered by the Kleine exchange in New York City, but increasing business in that section made the new branch a necessity. The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service is now booked through twenty-four Kleine offices in the United States and Canada. The Buffalo branch, located in the Palace Theater Building, will be under the general supervision of W. E. Raynor, manager of the New York exchange, and in the immediate charge of Julius Schwall, who has been in the New York office for the past three years. Traveling Representative Homer Howard will continue to serve the managers of "upstate" moving picture theaters.

Need of Economy in Picture Business

By F. J. Rembusch

Prominent Indiana Exhibitor Expounds His Views Upon Some of the Present Day Evils of the Motion Picture Trade

ARTICLE II.

Still Another Angle in Economy.

THREE or four years ago we had the stars ten or twelve times a month, now the tendency is to give them to us ten or twelve times a year in our program. If we needed them to make money for us that often three or four years ago, we need them more often now, when our margin of profit is so much harder to find. We eat just as often as we did then; therefore, we need them just as often.

The manufacturer and exhibitor made the big star, and if the profits in this industry are limited, it is only fair that it should be divided fifty-fifty between us all. It is not necessary that big stars receive these enormous salaries in order to play the parts of kings and queens and millionaires through actual experience.

However, I heard something very encouraging last week. One film manufacturer cut down $20,000 a week of his production costs, which means $1,000,000 a year. Now, if the rest of the manufacturers will do likewise, the exhibitor will soon get his film service at a price where he can make money. There is too much waste and not enough work; too much talk of "art," and not enough perspiration. There can be millions of dollars saved for both the exhibitor and manufacturer by some sort of co-operation between both.

The spirit of independence is a great American attitude, and is fine in patriotism, but is often over-worked in business. A combination of forces always helps the whole of any industry. As the saying is, "when there were oil companies without number, coal-oil cost the consumer 60 cents a gallon; when the companies combined, they were able, in time, to reduce the price to the consumer to 8 cents a gallon." The moral is obvious.

Economy in Our Investments.

A man said the other day: "The bankers are getting next to you picture men." A banker said to me recently, "you boys are O. K. in this picture game, but you get too much money wrapped up in it." I take this rather as a good omen, because the banker is the man we all listen to for more reasons than one. A hard-headed business man in Philadelphia, who has made several hundred thousand dollars in other lines of business, recently went into the motion picture business. He had been a manufacturer of staple articles of merchandise for thirty years, and has that solid mental make-up that goes with long association in the manufacture of staple articles of merchandise. Some one got him to spend $70,000 in a moving picture theater in a small suburb, and he wanted me to tell him how he would ever get it back. We sat down and figured the population, the possible amount of territory to draw from, the amount of money people generally spend for amusements, and when we summed it up, it looked to me like he will never get it back.

Sometimes I wonder if anybody ever did start a picture show based on any reasonable calculation, as to what could be expected in the way of profits, because I find people starting picture shows mostly because they have heard that somebody else is making enormous profits.

Every locality has its limits. If a big circus comes to town and another follows it next week, neither one do the business they should. In running an opera house in an average small town, I found that if I had one good show a week, dollar top, I made money, but if I put two shows a couple of days apart, receipts on both days suffered. Here is work for the economist. In fact, this economy grows on me more and more, and seems to have unlimited possibilities for development. The whole issue of this magazine could well be devoted to the subject without exhausting it.

There is one item of false economy practiced to which I desire to call particular attention. A big exhibitor told me that they decorated their theater inside and out every year; that all exhibitors should do likewise. He does not advocate the idea of spending a prodigious amount when the theater opens up, and then never put a paintbrush to it afterward. He says the moving picture theater should be kept new, clean, wholesome and inviting throughout all the year. It should often be renovated. The latest equipment should be continually installed. The machines cleaned and chairs kept up, so as to be an everlasting and continued drawing power in bringing the people inside.

Today many theaters have a shabby-genteel appearance; the machine flickers; the screen is black; the piano is out of tune. As a general thing the exhibitor is willing to keep his place up-to-date. In fact, everything he reads and hears is intended to make him spend his money, because directly and indirectly he must be continually influenced with the idea brought to him from any force that he must keep progressing, that he must spend more money for a program, more for music, more for advertising and perfumery.

As an exhibitor said recently, "I am making a thousand per cent effort in every way than I did three or four years ago. My investment, my equipment, my expense in running, my advertising, everything has increased in the same ratio, and I am putting in many more hours of work and getting less money out of it; therefore, is it I, or is the business growing stale?"

How can the exhibitor keep progressing unless he is making a profit? It is false economy to allow the theater to deteriorate in appearance, but the exhibitor must pile up a surplus in order to meet the depreciation.

Here is a point worth considering. A grocery-keeper became exhibitor, and he finds a great handicap in his business; when his people came to his store they would come in to buy a nickel's worth and walk out with a dollar's worth that they had no thought of purchasing when entering. When our patrons hand their dime in at the box office, that is the first, last and only chance we have to get any further money from them at that time, no matter how well your patrons may be pleased with one picture they cannot show their appreciation by paying you more or buying more, as a merchant is generally favored by a pleased customer.

A million dollars may be a modest sum to invest on Broadway in a picture show, while a thousand dollars may be an exorbitant amount in a tank town. Two thousand a week may be all right in a Strand or Rialto for film rental, while an exhibitor in a small town may be unable to play even on twenty-five dollars a week.

I am much impressed with what the hard-headed business man I have mentioned in this article finally said, "After working a lifetime in making money, I've blown in $70,000 in a picture show, where the investment should have been $10,000. F. J., from what you say, the case with a good many of us is 'we are trying to keep up with the Joneses.'" Let's go back to the beginning of picture making and try rigid economy, because it seems as necessary now as it was then.

NEW THEATER AT COLUMBUS, N. M.

The New Crystal theater of Columbus, N. M., now being erected by J. L. Greenwood, president of the Columbus state bank, will install a Minusa Gold Fibre screen No. 1, sold by the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. of El Paso. When finished this theater will rival any in New Mexico in elaborateness of equipment. Mr. Greenwood assumed charge of the old Crystal a year ago, completely renovated the house, installed a 15 h. p. engine and later added to his equipment three 30 h. p. engines to supply his theater and furnish the town and camps with electricity. The New Crystal will open about December 1 and will exhibit Bluebird features, in addition to the regular Universal program.

LEE MORAN ILL WITH PNEUMONIA.

A severe cold, which Lee Moran contracted recently, developed into pneumonia and the Nestor comedian was forced to remain in his apartment at the club, where he makes his home. It was found necessary to give him serum injections in order to obtain relief from the disease. In the meantime Eddie Lyons has been working without his film partner, with Edith Roberts playing opposite in place of Priscilla Dean, who has been transferred to dramatic productions.

ANNA HELD'S DAUGHTER IN U. PICTURE.

Liane Carrera, Anna Held's daughter, who appeared recently in a comedy filmed by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke at Universal City, gave a very good account of herself, and later, when she completes her season with the "Canary Cottage," a musical comedy company, will enter the films for a year, she says.

Licenses of Moving Picture Theaters

By Hanford C. Judson

Taxes are Like the Weather, There's a Plenty of Both But No Pleasant Taxes—Picture Show Taxes and the Climate

COMMUNITIES license gainful enterprises. The enterprise gives the community something. The monarchy says: How much can we get away from the individual without lessening too much the value of what he is doing for us? The democracy says: How little can we afford to ask for supervising this industry that is giving us benefit?

Private schools need not take out a license, while saloons need, and, like moving picture theaters, they pay heavily. But if any enterprise is to be thus favored with the high privilege of paying a fat special tax there should be some equitable reason for the honor. The matter is in the hands of the legislators, chosen to see that justice is done in all things for the community's advantage. They would not deprive private schools, for instance—these are a beneficial and gainful form of enterprise—of equal tax-paying rights were there not a reason. Legislators and the people are of the opinion that picture theaters make much more money than do schools. This may be why the former are more highly preferred. This is but a passing thought. Our American legislators wouldn't be so snobbish; this is a democracy. Yet and notwithstanding, private schools and picture shows should be treated with something like the same consideration. They both add to the mental health of the community, to its instruction, breadth of view and general attractiveness. In any small village the problem of the idle hours is vital. Do city wards need healthful entertainment less? Suddenly remove all moving pictures from American cities. What will happen?

In taxing these shows, legislators seem to have been led by different theories. Some impose a flat tax on all houses regardless of size, reasoning, no doubt, that it costs the government the same to watch and regulate a large as a small house. Some grade the tax by the amount paid by the patron, perhaps on the fifty-fifty basis, balancing between the exhibitor's power of charging for his show and the community's power of getting back at him, through taxation. Some tax by the number of seats, regardless of whether they are filled all the time or part of the time or not at all filled. This is taxing the exhibitor's hopes and ambitions which are undesirable and should be discouraged. Nowhere is a premium given for good service to the community. But, on second thought, that would be laughable. Every exhibitor becomes a millionaire as soon as he opens a theater. He's a magnate and no magnate can possibly be a public benefactor and the legislators show him "where he gets off."

But not in every state. Maine asks just $10 a year for a license to show motion pictures in the state and no part of the state can lawfully impose any added license tax. It costs the state about that much to look after the theaters. Maine is the most reasonable state license tax in the United States and it is due to the spirit of the people. Maine believes in instruction and is the Mother of School Teachers. It gets value from its picture shows and if some intelligent exhibitor makes a little money by giving his city good service, it doesn't look with jealous eye upon it. There is an exhibitor in Presque Isle, Me., named John J. Hone, who readers of this paper will remember, has the honor of getting the license law through the state legislature. He was unselfish enough to work for others as well as himself and he belongs to a state that is unselfish enough to turn a stroke of good business.

But we won't anticipate our analysis of the figures. We present them for what they are worth. The list is not complete, but is broad enough to give a very fair picture of conditions in this country.

[illegible] that charge a flat rate:

State and City.	License by Year
Maine (all cities)	$10
Troy, N. Y.	$50
Albany, N. Y.	$50
Cohoes, N. Y.	$25
Newark, N. J.	$111
Washington, D. C.	$100
Atlanta, Ga.	$100
Augusta, Ga.	$100
Indianapolis, Ind.	$26
St. Louis, Mo.	$150
St. Paul, Minn.	$50

a year without Sunday show license.

Denver, Colo.	24 cents a seat a year (highest license tax is $480 a year, lowest $48).
Colorado Springs, Colo. (30,000)	$100
Pueblo, Colo. (45,000 pop.)	$60
Grand Junction, Colo.	$50
Greeley, Colo.	$50
Fruita, Colo. (1,000 pop.)	$12 50
Littleton, Col. (2,000 pop.)	$25
Cheyenne, Wyo.	$100
Aberdeen, Wash. (14,000 pop.)	$10 a month.
Concrete, Wash. (1,000 pop.)	$60 a year.
Portland, Ore.	2½ cents a chair a quarter plus a flat charge of $5.
Pendleton, Ore.	$25 a quarter.
Astoria, Ore.	$25 a quarter.
Carvallis, Ore.	$25 a quarter, or $75 a year.

San Francisco has no license at this writing. When the censor law was abrogated the special fee of $25 a quarter lapsed. A new license, it is thought, will be imposed soon.

San Jose, Cal.	$200 a year.
Richmond, Cal.	$10 a quarter.
Sacramento, Cal.	$20 a quarter.
Reno, Nev.	$85 a year.

Communities imposing a sliding scale of license fees:

Maryland state law for five cent theaters only, by the year:

Less than 200 seats	$15
200-300 seats	30
300-400 seats	35
400-500 seats	40
500-1,000 seats	45
1,000 and more seats	50

Maryland law for theaters charging ten cents or more:

Less than 200 seats	$20
200-300 seats	30
300-400 seats	40
400-500 seats	60
500-1,000 seats	80

Extra for each 100 seats	10	17.50	30

Detroit, Mich.:

	Year.
Houses less than 600 setts pay	$25
Houses more than 600 seats pay	100

Tennessee state license fees run for theaters charging five cents only:

	Year.
Seating less than 200	$80
200-300	100
300-400	125
400 and over	150

When ten cents is charged for admission:

	Year.
Seating less than 200	$80
200-300	120
300-400	150
400 and over	200

In Tennessee towns of less than 5,000 the tax is $10 a year.
In Tennessee towns of 5,000-10,000 the tax is $20 a year.

Spokane, Wash., based on price asked for a seat:

	Year.
15 cents a seat	$100
More than 15 cents a seat	200

The Clemmer, Class A, and Liberty pay $200 license fee.

Seattle, Wash., based on number of seats:

	Year.
Less than 250	$125
250-500	150
500-1,000	200

Tacoma, Wash., based on seating capacity:

	Year.
Less than 350 seats	$90
350-500 seats	125
500 plus seats	150

	Year.
Bellingham, Wash., less than 250 seats	$75
more than 250 seats	125

There are several amusing things noticeable in this tabulation which is, of course, far from exhausting the vagaries of license taxation in this country. The flat rate communities show a capriciousness. Why does Maine charge only $10 a year while St. Louis thinks it necessary to charge $150 and San Jose $200 a year? But most amusing of all are the various ways that the scale of fees is built up. Some cities begin with a small fee for the 200-seat house, while others show a more generously proportioned mind and think of nothing less than 500 seats. The former encourage the little man who is beginning, perhaps, in a small way. When he gets prosperous he will give notice by increasing the capacity of his house, then they can get more out of him. It pays to cultivate taxable property. Some make several steps in the scale. This may show a sporting instinct. It is exciting for the tax maker to watch an exhibitor grow out of one grade into the next. Others make 250 seats the point of change. All below, pay this amount; all above, pay that. One wonders why it is that the one method fits one locality and the other fits the second.

If some magic changed the two about over night, would anything serious happen? There is a kind of philosopher who says that every man deserves what fate he has. Supposing all these license taxes should get mixed up and for a whole month the people of Maine should have to pay the tax that the people of Tennessee are paying and that they should get the Oregon tax, how would they straighten it all out? Would they be content to let things remain as they were? No, it is a matter of brains. Each man's business is according to his business ability.

Eleanor Blevins, Screen Actress, an Aviator

AMONG the prominent members of the cast supporting Jane Grey in the photoplay, "When My Ship Comes In," by Gouverneur Morris, soon to be released by International, is Eleanor Blevins, who, having made an enviable reputation as an actress on the Pacific Coast, appears for the first time in New York in this production.

Miss Blevins is a western girl of the superior type. She was born in Lincoln, Neb., and makes her home in Los Angeles. Her training for a stage career was received in that exacting but efficient school known as the stock company, both in San Francisco and Sacramento, where she attained no small measure of success. She won further laurels in the moving picture field until engaged by the International for the part of Mabel Reeves in "When My Ship Comes In."

Eleanor Blevins.

Miss Blevins, "Peggy" as she is best known by her intimates, is devoted to athletics and is proficient in many of the more strenuous sports. She has spent some time in Honolulu, where she became an expert with the "surf plank," the sport so popular and fascinating to all island visitors, besides learning the native Hawaiian dances.

In addition to her skill in other sports, Miss Blevins is an expert motorist and not long ago won the women's race from Los Angeles to San Diego against a field of six. But it is in aviation that this daring young Western woman takes greatest delight. She has "taken the air" with such celebrities as Earl Dougherty, Lincoln Beachy and Hoxsey, and from Christophersen she learned how to manage her own aeroplane.

Besides Miss Blevins, supporting Jane Grey in "When My Ship Comes In" there are Nigel Barrie, Edith Campbell Walker, William J. Kelly and Walter Richardson.

"DAVY CROCKETT," WOMEN'S CONVENTION.

A unique distinction was accorded the Pallas production, "Davy Crockett," of which Dustin Farnum is the star, when it was chosen as the only motion picture to be shown at the recent convention of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs at the Powers Hotel in Rochester, N. Y. A program of general interest to club women that included the showing of the picture and a broad discussion of motion picture topics as related to club work had been carefully arranged, but at the last moment Mrs. Charles G. Hildreth, the then president, decided to confine the evening's entertainment solely to a few musical selections and the showing of "Davy Crockett."

The audience, which crowded the ballroom of the Powers Hotel to capacity, was composed of delegates who represented more than 300,000 women. The picture was accompanied by an orchestra which played the music score furnished by the Paramount Pictures Corporation for all features, and the performance won the hearty applause of all those present.

Australian Notes

DRASTIC regulations have been made under the New Zealand Cinematograph Films Censorship Act. All films must be submitted to the censor for approval at his office in Wellington, and if an applicant desires a film to be returned by the Censor within forty-eight hours there is a special fee. However, the Censor may keep it a longer time and return the fee. The Censor must examine all films. There is a board of appeal. The Censor, if he finds that he has more films awaiting examination than he can conveniently accommodate, may decline to receive any more in that day.

Winter Hall, a prominent actor from Christchurch, New Zealand, who joined the Australian stage in 1907 as Mr. Burchell in the late Herbert Flemming's production of "Olivia," is leaving for the United States with this mail. His career here has included six and a half years with the J. C. Williamson direction in responsible support of Julius Knight, and other starring artists, and he was prominently concerned in the Harry Plimmer patriotic tour of New Zealand, by which £3,500 was handed over to the Dominion Government. Mr. Hall has introductions to the leading film producers of Los Angeles, and as in his own person he furnishes an authoritative type of church and legal dignitaries and financial magnates, he should readily achieve the success which his many friends on this side so heartily wish him.

A peculiar action for damages was heard in Sydney the other day when George Chard sued the Haymarket Picture Theater, Ltd., for £75 compensation for damages sustained. Chard's case was that certain metal rods were used to keep the theater seats in position. One of these rods was placed so that it projected upon a passage used for ingress and egress. The result was that the plaintiff, while leaving the theater, was injured by the protuding rod, which cut his leg. The defense was a denial of liability. The judge found a verdict for the plaintiff for £11.

The British Official War pictures of the Battle of the Somme drew tremendous crowds to the Crystal Pictures and Lyceum theaters last week. It is the best box office attraction of its kind since "Britain Prepared." The series are exceptionally well photographed, and form an interesting addition to the war pictures already shown. "The Battle of the Somme" will probably have arrived in America by the time this appears in print.

Australasian Films, Ltd., have secured Australasian rights for the Pathe serial, "The Iron Claw," and the first episode was released last week.

Many exhibitors and picture fans here are looking forward to seeing Thomas Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation." No arrangements have yet been announced here as to where the picture will be screened.

At present all single men between the ages of 21 and 35 are in a military camp under the Defense Act. This has, in common with other industries, affected the picture business here, as many theater employees have been called up.

Up to the date of writing the Federated Showman's Association has not announced whether the public will have to pay the new Amusement Tax, which takes effect on November 1. At present many of the smaller picture houses are doing very poor business, owing to the long programs run in the bigger shows.

Censor Talk at Washington Monday Club

District Commissioner Brownlow Divides Interest With Messrs. Perkins and McGuire of National Board of Review—Many Picture Men Attend

WHILE to the members of the Monday Evening Club, which met in the assembly hall at the Young Men's Christian Association building, Washington, D. C., on Monday evening, November 20, W. Frank Persons, a member of the executive committee of the National Board of Review, and W. D. McGuire, the board's executive secretary, were the principal speakers of the evening, to the little group of motion picture exchange and theater managers the words of Commissioner Louis Brownlow were by far the most interesting. National censorship was given a great deal of impetus during the last session of Congress by residents of the District of Columbia and the attention of the whole country is naturally focused on the national capital. Therefore, when one of the rulers of the District of Columbia characterizes censorship as "bad medicine," a great deal of weight is attached to the statement.

The club had before it the subject, "Motion Picture Shows: How Shall They Be Regulated in the Public Interest?" "On this question," said Mr. Brownlow, "I have had a very definite idea for a very long time. I have been interested in motion pictures for a good many years. As a newspaper man I wrote a good deal about them when the industry was in its swaddling clothes. I have kept up with the whole trade, more or less, by taking the trade papers, and I have read for the last seven or eight years almost every one of them. Besides that, I had been a 'movie fan.' I like to go to the movies myself. Lately, I have had too many other engagements, so I have been robbed of that pleasure.

"I have always been opposed to censorship. When the bill was before the House of Representatives I talked to Judge Towner several times in opposition to Federal censorship. I had the idea that censorship of pictures was like censorship of the press—so undemocratic, un-American, and not to be tolerated. I still hold that opinion, but I have had experience that has not changed my opinion, but has shaken it. By reason of my position, whenever I get into a street car, enter a club, or meet a group of people on the street, I am asked why I do not do something about motion pictures.

"I know that films are getting better, so far as the majority of the producers are concerned, but the last year or two there has been a distinct deterioration, which is measured almost exactly by the increase in art.

"I think the children's matinees now being planned in the District of Columbia represent a very good thing, but I think all moving pictures should be clean enough for the children all the time. One of the very best things about this universally cheap form of amusement is that it gives the American family in ordinary circumstances an opportunity to go out together to the theater at but little cost.

"I cannot understand," continued Mr. Brownlow, referring to some of the remarks made by Mr. Persons, "why the censorship is censorship whether exercised by legally constituted board, by licensing authority, by the chief of police, or by a group of social workers. In all of these there is some one who comes forward and says where a picture is considered objectionable, 'You cannot show this picture,' as in the National Board of Review. If the necessity comes in this city for some sort of censorship, and I have been putting that off, I would like to have the members of the Monday Evening Club and other people in the city help in this work, but I do not think that there is any difference between that and real censorship. The licensing authority in Washington is not organized to cope with the situation. Whatever is done must be done through the police. That is, if a picture is exhibited that is indecent, we can take the operator or the manager of the theater into the police court. I would like the support of the social workers of the city in working out a censorship that will not be brutal, but will have all of the benefits."

Mr. Brownlow briefly referred to the photoplay "Purity," saying that in the first place the advertising of the film was extremely objectionable; that there was nothing to it but an invitation to come to the theater and see a nude woman on the screen. This incited the District Commissioners to take the first action, that of laying down a general rule to the effect that, as they would not allow a nude woman to appear on the stage, they would not allow one to be shown on the screen. He explained his unwillingness to view the picture before condemning it, saying that had he gone to see it it would have been censorship.

"What I would like to see better than anything else," concluded Mr. Brownlow, "would be the moving picture exhibitors say, 'We will not bring that type of picture into Washington.'"

Rev. Randolph H. McKim startled his audience when discussing this same film by intimating that had he his way he would censor nudity in art and would clear our art galleries of all such. He denied having ever given "Purity" his endorsement.

A. Brylawski told of how general conditions in the film industry had improved since the days they were indeed a novelty, stating that he had co-operated from the beginning with the District Commissioners and was responsible for many of the innovations which were to regulate the exhibitions.

Mrs. Jacob John Locher, who is back of the children's matinee movement, spoke briefly of her project and later in the evening created considerable merriment when she upheld as perfectly proper the carrion scene in "The Three Little Godfathers," which Commissioner Brownlow alluded to as being horrible—the inclusion of such a bit of realism of buzzards tearing to pieces a human being was unnecessary, while Mrs. Locher contends that it is highly proper, emphasizing the difficulties of censorship. Mr. Ferguson, better known as "Gardner Mack," who is in charge of the motion picture department of the Washington Times, gave a highly interesting talk, showing the development of motion pictures, and he won the hearts of all when he said, "I believe that any form of censorship is absolutely opposed to the proper development of art."

Mr. Persons gave one of the most interesting talks that has ever been delivered in the city of Washington. He held the attention of his audience throughout the full hour that had been accorded to him. He outlined the work of the National Board of Review and talked at some length on co-operation between the parents, the exhibitors and the producers. He endorsed Mrs. Locher's campaign for children's matinees, showing that this would largely help to solve the problem which these people believe they are facing. Mr. McGuire supplemented his remarks and both were afterward congratulated on the way in which they met the issues.

SLADDIN BACK FROM BUSINESS TRIP.

Spencer G. Sladdin, general representative of Consolidated Film Corporation, has just returned from a four weeks' tour of the United States in the interests of "The Crimson Stain Mystery." Mr. Sladdin's itinerary included Chicago, Kansas City, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, Dallas, etc.

"The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial is doing a wonderful business, according to Mr. Sladdin. In the cities he has visited he paid especial attention to the smaller exhibitors and found complete satisfaction with Consolidated's serial. Aside from the picture itself, Mr. Sladdin found that considerable interest was manifested in the automobile contest, in which thirteen Overland 85-6s are being given away in connection with the presentation of the serial.

"I found exhibitors everywhere enthusiastic about 'The Crimson Stain Mystery,'" said Mr. Sladdin, " the consensus of opinion was that 'The Crimson Stain Mystery' is one of the very best and most powerful money-getting pictures ever produced."

VIOLET DE BICCARI IN "THE BATTLE OF LIFE."

Violet de Biccari, whose golden hair would shame a double-eagle, portrays Gladys Coburn at the age of twelve in "The Battle of Life," William Fox's release for December 11. Both Miss Coburn and little de Biccari say that they are flattered by this, so there's no hope of controversy here—either from the standpoint of beauty or of acting.

CAPRICE'S NEW CAST.

Frank Morgan has been engaged by William Fox to play opposite Miss Caprice in her new picture, begun last week. Mr. Morgan comes from the Vitagraph Company. Others in the cast will be Grace Stevens, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Margaret Prendergast and Tom Brooke. Miss Florence Auer, author of many motion picture scenarios, wrote the 'script.

Australian Amusement Tax

By T. S. Imrie

The Vigorously Protested New Measure, Taking One-Sixth of Gross Receipts Strikes Exhibitors Heavily

Sydney, N. S. W., Oct. 25.

Although an amusement tax has been expected for some time, no exhibitor thought it would be as severe as due to take effect from November 1. Briefly, the tax is equal to one-sixth of the gross takings at the theater, whether the business is paying a profit or otherwise.

The bill which has been designed by the Commonwealth Ministry was introduced into the House of Representatives last week by the Treasurer (Mr. Higgs).

The extent of the tax proposed is a half-penny on each three penny ticket; one penny on each six penny ticket, and one penny for each succeeding six pence. An entertainment for the purpose of the Act includes an exhibition, performance, lecture, amusement, game, or sport for which admission is charged. It is proposed in the bill that tickets issued at places of entertainment shall be stamped with the amount of the tax due on them. In special cases, however, persons may be admitted through a barrier, which automatically registers their number and the proportionate tax will be collected from the proprietor of the entertainment on the basis of that registration.

Entertainments held for charitable purposes, where the whole of the expenses do not exceed 20 per cent. of the receipts, will be exempt from taxation. Other exemptions are: Entertainments of a wholly educational character; those intended only for the amusement of children, where the charge is not more than one penny for each person, and entertainments provided for partly educational or partly scientific purposes by a society, institution, or committee not conducted for profit.

If any person is admitted to any place of entertainment without paying a tax he will be liable to a penalty of £5, while the proprietor will be liable to a penalty of £50. Penalties ranging from imprisonment for one year to imprisonment for fourteen years are provided in the case of any person guilty of a fraudulent act in connection with the provisions of this measure, such as the forging of the stamps.

As soon as the above particulars were made public, a deputation to Mr. Higgs, the Commonwealth Treasurer, was formed. The deputation representing all the theatrical interests of Australia, including 800 picture theaters. It was introduced by Mr. H. D. McIntosh, of the Tivoli theaters, there were also present W. Barrington Miller, Henry Gee, W. A. Gibson (Union Picture Theaters); Bert Bailey, H. F. Phillips (Victoria Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association); R. Stephens (Queensland Exhibitors' Association); W. J. Howe (Fed. Showmans' Association); J. C. Langley (Exhibitors' Association); F. W. Thring (J. C. Williamson Films, Ltd).

The object of the deputation was to secure a modification, if possible, or a reduction by half, of the proposed tax. Harold Ashton (J. C. Williamson, Ltd.), emphatically protested against the tax, as being an utterly unfair class tax, in the sense that it penalized one special industry far and away beyond the degree which all other commercial enterprises had to bear. Why, he asked, should the theaters be seized upon for a specially severe burden. It was, in his view, inequitable, uncalled for, and opposed to all the canons of justice. If they were told that not only the theater would be taxed, but also the patrons of the theaters, he could only reply that a levy could not be made on the customers without affecting the profits of the proprietors. This was a national question. The debt was a national debt, and it was from each unit in the entire nation, that whatever was required should be drawn fairly, according to their ability to pay and not with reference to whether they went either to a theater or a church. The situation here was quite different from that in America and England, in which countries huge sums had been distributed as a result of munition making and rendering these countries highly prosperous. Here in Australia they paid the highest rates to their employees, and their donations to charity had been on the most generous scale. He quoted figures to show that if the proposed tax did not produce utter extinction of the picture industry, it would mean that the majority of houses would have to close. The duty on films at the rate of 2d per foot was even now a burden to the industry, and brought in to the revenue £100,000 yearly.

Another member of the deputation asked Mr. Higgs if the proporietors of the theaters were expected to pass the tax on to their patrons. To this the Treasurer replied that he thought the proprietors well able to pay the tax themselves. Mr. Higgs continued that he sympathized with anyone who has to pay taxes, but many millions have to be found to successfully carry on the war. Some people are inclined to forget that the war is on, he continued, but the only excuse for amusements being permitted at all now is that people must produce wealth, and if they were not amused their earning power would be diminished.

Mr. McIntosh remarked that attendances have fallen off £25,000 during the past year.

Mr. Higgs finally said: "The Government expects the tax to be paid, and the experience of other places was that it would be paid willingly. It has been said that in England not a single person grumbles about the war tax on amusements and that the theater attendances have not diminished."

In reply to the question whether the tax was for the period of the war, Mr. Higgs replied: "I can't say. In most countries in peace times there is a tax on entertainments."

Catalogue of Drama Titles

Compilation of the Copyright Office That Should Interest Producers—Comprises 60,000 Titles.

UNDER authority of the law, Thorvald Solberg, Register of Copyrights, has caused to be compiled a copyright of all dramatic entries in the Copyright Office from 1870 to the end of 1915. This is the nearest approach to a complete bibliography of American dramatic literature that probably will ever be compiled, since practically all works of any value were entered for copyright. It lists also such foreign works as have been registered for copyright here and forms a most complete list of titles extant. The entries are arranged alphabetically by title and give the full title, the name of the author, the name of the owner of the copyright, date of copyright and date of deposit. In the case of all entries since the Act of 1909 the address of the owner of the copyright is added. This information is supplemented by an index giving in one alphabet the names of all authors, joint authors, translators, composers and editors with citations to the works entered by them.

It will make a book of about 3,500 pages, comprising upward of 60,000 titles, and the first edition will be limited to one thousand copies. These may be had (when completed), ready bound or may be ordered for delivery by signature as these are printed up. About 1,200 pages are already completed. The cost in either case will be $4 for the two volumes. To be certain of obtaining one of the first edition (and it may be some time before the work is reprinted), orders should be sent at once to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., enclosing the required sum and stating whether the unbound signatures or the bound volumes are desired. To supplement this the Monthly Catalogue of Copyright Entries Part I, groups 1 and 2, should also be ordered. These cost $1 yearly and contain all titles of dramatic compositions and motion picture titles entered for copyright.

Sample pages of the drama catalogue may be had on application to the Register of Copyrights which give in miniature a comprehensive idea of the plan. The work is being done with a thoroughness that marks all of Mr. Solberg's undertakings, and should be a part of the library of every motion picture concern.

NEW PARAMOUNT SALESMAN.

C. C. Wallace has been appointed out of town salesman of the New York office of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, distributors of Paramount Pictures in this section. Mr. Wallace hails from the Famous Players Film Company of Chicago, for which concern he has acted as Indiana representative for over a year. Coming from another Paramount office, he is particularly well acquainted with Paramount pictures and Paramount policies and in him exhibitors will not only find a pleasing personality and a highly cooperative spirit, but a man with a great deal of knowledge of the picture business in all its intricacies.

Tacoma, Washington, and the Pictures

By S. J. Anderson

World Correspondent Takes Trip From Seattle —Finds Cordial Friends and Visits City's Picture Houses

WE TOOK a trip down to Tacoma, Wash, recently to see what was happening in the motion picture business there. The day before going we met H. T. Moore, owner and manager of Tacoma's Colonial theater, on Fourth avenue, and told him we were coming and to be sure to stay at home and to tell the other exhibitors to do likewise. Now we expected Mr. Moore to be nice and cordial, because he's always that, no matter where he is; but we never expected him to meet us at the boat with an automobile and to drive us all around to see the sights just as if we were an actor or some other celebrity. Nevertheless, that's what he did.

From the dock we were driven to the Apollo theater to pick up Grattan Guerin, organist and leader of the Apollo orchestra, who is managing the house for A. C. Anderson, while the latter is recovering at his mother's home in Seattle from a severe operation on his foot. Then we three spent a delightful two hours seeing the sights of Tacoma. At least it was delightful for one of the three; we suppose we shouldn't speak for the other two. After that we had lunch and went to call on the other exhibitors of the city.

The first stop was at the Regent, which is not open just now owing to its recent purchase by Ackerman and Harris. This theater was originally the Empress, being built by Sullivan and Considine to help complete their string of Empress theaters on the Pacific Coast. After running Sullivan and Considine vaudeville for years it was bought last year by Jensen and Von Herberg of Seattle and turned into a motion picture theater. And just a few weeks ago came the news of this last change in ownership. Mr. Donnellan, the new manager, was at the theater, but said that the exact date of opening and the definite policy had not yet been decided on. He promised to let us know very soon. Meanwhile it is certain that the house will show vaudeville and pictures, as do all the other Ackerman and Harris houses on the Coast.

After leaving Mr. Donnellan, Mr. Guerin had to go back to the Apollo to attend to some business, and Mr. Moore alone escorted us to the lair of the other exhibitors. But the lair was all we found in several cases, the lair and the victims thereof. The masters could not be located. Clarence Summerville was on the job at the Hippodrome, which was recently closed as a picture house. It was opened November 12 with musical comedy and variety attractions. Mr. Summerville also manages the Melbourne, a motion picture house just a couple of doors from the Hippodrome. He informed us that he had just reduced the admission to the former house from ten cents to five. Mr. Summerville is just back from his first vacation in seven years, during which he got sick. No more vacations for him, he says.

We next called around at the Shell, the Palace and the Bijou, but those were the lairs where the masters could not be found. We hope to see you, Mr. Berg, Mr. Drinkwine and Mr. MacNish, on our next visit to Tacoma. All three of these theaters are small five-cent houses, but the shows are good and the employes very courteous and obliging, particularly at the Shell.

When we went to say good-bye to Mr. Guerin we took a second look at the Apollo, and we do wish Mr. Guerin had had a good picture of the theater for us to send The World. The Apollo is not a large house, its seating capacity being about 650, but everything about it is high-class, from the entrance to the inside windows with the pretty lighting effects behind them and the beautifully decorated walls and ceiling. Metro bookings are used, a few Fox releases and other special features.

Mr. Moore's theater, the Colonial, has something over a thousand seats. Its architecture is true to its name. The treatment of the interior shows the effectiveness of beautiful simplicity in theater decoration, while the loge seats of old ivory wicker with cretonne upholstering must be a "joy forever" to Colonial patrons. The women's rest room in pale shades of blue is one of the prettiest we have ever seen anywhere. Mr. Moore uses Paramount pictures, with an occasional particularly good feature of some of the other producers.

What we liked about Tacoma exhibitors was their cordiality to each other and their apparent willingness to cooperate.

While we were riding out to Tacoma's big and beautiful Point Defiance Park and while we were at lunch were the only times we had to talk to Mr. Moore and Mr. Guerin. When we were on the streets they were kept busy bowing to acquaintances. Even the newsboy calling papers on the corner yelled, "Here you are, Mr. Moore," as he thrust a paper toward that gentleman.

During the time we had to talk, however, we got a fair idea of the situation of the picture business in Tacoma. Vaudeville and dancing are the only amusement rivals of the pictures in winter, Mr. Moore and Mr. Guerin explained, but in summer outdoor sports and the parks are particularly dangerous to the city's picture business. Tacoma is not overstocked with first class motion picture theaters; so, in spite of the prevailing hard times on the Coast, Tacoma exhibitors manage to make a go of it.

Both picture men were agreed that a great mistake many exhibitors make who live in cities of a hundred thousand or less, where they know everybody worth while, is to have a large free list. These people are invariably the ones who knock your shows the hardest, asserted Mr. Guerin, and Mr. Moore added that they always selected Saturday, Sunday or a holiday to come. Mr. Moore has forestalled these embarrassing situations by having practically no free list, except the immediate families of his employes.

We enjoyed our trip to Tacoma very much, thanks to Mr. Moore and Mr. Guerin, and we can assure them that we shall not be so long in coming again. And we hope that the next time our friend, Mr. Anderson, will also be there, with his foot well past the crutch stage of convalescence.

Ethel Corcoran Becomes Ethel Dayton

PRETTY Ethel Corcoran, who is playing opposite Lionel Barrymore in the forthcoming Metro-Columbia feature, "The End of the Tour," has changed her name. No, she hasn't married, nor is she ashamed of the fine old name of Corcoran, but as she is a motion picture actress, she finds that it takes too long for people to read the name on the screen. So now she is Ethel Dayton.

Ethel Dayton.

She especially likes to be known by the children who are motion picture fans. And she believes Corcoran takes too long for the little ones to spell out.

"Why, before they made out the name," she said, after deciding on the change, "very often something else was flashed on the screen, and they never knew who was playing the leading girl part."

So she wants everyone to know that it is she, Ethel Dayton, erstwhile Ethel Corcoran, who will be seen as Grace Jessup, the village heiress, in "The End of the Tour."

Miss Dayton was formerly with Vitagraph, where she played ingenue leads for four years under the direction of George D. Baker, who is directing "The End of the Tour." She was seen with May Robson in "A Night Out" (Belle Bruce, now a Metro player, also being in the cast), in "A Price for Folly," and was leading woman with Earle Williams in "The Hidden Prince" episode of "The Scarlet Runner." Miss Dayton, who was born in New York, lives in Brooklyn with her parents. Her type is that of the wholesome, natural American girl.

Working for "Better Films"

An Organization Is Planned National in Scope and Thoroughly Co-operative.

The [illegible] for special performances of films suitable for the family group and for young people, as a means of meeting certain problems that have arisen in the motion picture industry, is so widespread that the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review, 70 Fifth avenue, New York City), has decided to take steps toward securing the definite co-operation of those in different parts of the country who are interested. Plans for bringing about this desired co-operation through the affiliation of the various committees which have been formed in different communities were prepared a few days ago.

It was decided to give the loose organization under which the various co-operating committees will work the name "The Affiliated Committees for Better Films." It is to be a branch of the work of the National Committee. Its chief functions will be that of exchanging information as to the causes of success and failure in the promotion of special performances of the kind described, answering questions and distributing lists of films suitable for special performances. It is to exist on the basis of service co-operation and independence. There will be no effort to modify the autonomy and freedom of action of the local committees. It is believed that this step will greatly aid in the promotion of the exhibition of films suitable for everybody, which is the best means of combatting the undemocratic idea of legalized censorship. There are hundreds of committees scattered throughout the country which are anxious to do something to solve the problem raised by the attendance of young people at motion picture performances. Many of them are not in a position to do satisfactory work in this direction because they have no experience or information upon which to found their efforts. It is believed, therefore, that this branch of the work of the National Committee on Films for Young People will be serving a very practical purpose.

"Vesuvius in Eruption"

A Remarkable Picture Appearing on the Paramount Program and Photographed by Burton Holmes.

WHAT could be stranger in the psychology of human events than that something which has lured to the very feet of the great volcano Vesuvius countless numbers of human beings, thousands of whom have perished from its eruptions. Burton Holmes has, in the photographing and arrangement of the scenes in the production recently seen at the Strand theatre, New York City, and which was released in all parts of the country on Oct. 30th by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, succeeded in presenting the dramatic side of one of these terrible eruptions.

In this picture we are first shown a close view of the crater belching forth its first menacing clouds of smoke, ashes and lava, after which our attention is drawn to the frightened inhabitants of nearby villages participating in religious ceremonies in the streets, carrying sacred paintings, images, etc. Later on we are taken through the deserted streets of Naples where the piles of ashes resemble snow drifts in all but color. As the eruption progressed in violence it was necessary by means of a telephoto lens to photograph it from across the bay, the columns of smoke at this time rising, according to scientific calculation, nine miles into the sky. In the midst of a dramatic situation the photographer has managed to inculcate a moment of comedy, when, on the roads leading away from the scene, the fleeing inhabitants hurry along, some afoot, and some in various kinds of conveyances, taking with them what they can of their worldly goods. A flash of a family dog looking anxiously behind him, is prefaced by a sub-title which reads "Yes, they're all coming," which is followed by the remainder of the family plus a group of pigs. The closing scene forms the climax of a dramatic presentation when the camera looking across the ruins to which Vesuvius reduced Pompeii some 1800 years ago, reflects the old mountain still belching forth its fury.

"Snow-White."

Educational Films Corporation has four-part Version of the Fascinating Fairy Tale Enacted Entirely by Children.

CHILDREN especially will be delighted with the filmization of the Grimm fairly tale, "Snow-white," partly because the cast with which the picture has been produced is composed entirely of children, and partly because the story itself is fascinating. The Life Photoplay Co. made the picture, using good judgment in most instances, making their gravest mistake in the placing of a girl in the role of the king. A sturdy boy would have been much more effective.

The children on the whole have done exceptional work in the interpretation of the fairy story. It will no doubt be remembered that the beautiful queen whom the fairies loved was lonely and down-hearted, and that the fairies, while she slept one day by the side of an ivy-rimmed pool, gathered flowers and placed them in her arms, and that upon the awakening of the queen the flowers dissolved into the form of a beautiful baby who was named Snow-White. It will also be remembered that wicked Alice, in love with the king and jealous of his queen plots with the witch to destroy her, that on the death of the queen the witch also helps her by means of a certain powder to gain the love of the king, and that her jealous nature finally leads to her ruin in several unsuccessful attempts to end the life of Snow-White of whose beauty she is envious.

The scenes in the home of the dwarfs, where Snow-White takes refuge when left in the black forest by Queen Alice's orders and reported dead, have been well done, and will be found especially pleasing.

PATHE TO RE-ISSUE "THE LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR."

Readers will no doubt be glad to learn that the beautiful seven-part Pathe production "The Life of Our Saviour" will be again re-issued for the Christmas season. December 3 has been set out as its date of release. It will be remem-

"The Three Christmases"

Thrift Propaganda Film Made by Popular Plays and Players to Be Released Under the Auspices of the Christmas Club of America.

THE Christmas Club of America, which is operated at the present time in connection with 3,500 banks throughout the United States, is an off-shoot of the Bankers' Club of America, and is utilizing the moving picture screen for the first time in the six years of its history, as a means of conveying the idea of thrift, and the benefits which accrue from the habit of saving in small amounts. A deposit of two cents is sufficient to open a bank account through the Christmas Club. After this each weekly deposit must amount to two cents more than the amount deposited the previous week, and at the end of fifty weeks a check for the total amount deposited, which amounts to a little better than $25, following a two-cent initial deposit, is mailed to the depositor. In this way it is possible for anyone to save a small Christmas fund, while the profit made by the banks, so they claim, is little more than the expense of handling the money. $80,000,000 were deposited in this way during the past year. Of this $11,000,000 were deposited in New York State banks, and $7,000,000 in banks in the State of New Jersey.

In order to stimulate the spirit of thrift a film between eleven and twelve hundred feet in length was made for the Christmas Club of America at the Metro Popular Plays and Players studio. This film is entitled "The Three Christmases," and features Violet Hemming and William Courtleigh, and is intended to illustrate clearly the folly of wasteful expenditure. Between December 15 and January 5 it will be shown in numerous theaters, principally in the East. Owing to the difficulties of placing the film in the theaters during this limited space of time, it was decided to take it no further west than Pittsburgh. Access can be had to this film through the Christmas Club, 303 Hudson street, New York City.

"Through the Swiss Alps, by the St. Gothard Tunnel Route."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE "Mutual Tours Around the World" for December 6, contains an unusually interesting illustration of the railroad route through the Swiss Alps, known as the St. Gothard route. This road winds about, rising gradually through the mountain heights, passing through numerous tunnels, and bridging deep and beautiful gorges.

The starting point of this railroad is in the neighborhood of Gramosina Falls. Each scene is prefaced by a diagram showing the manner in which the road circles, crossing the Tessin River, passing Cribiasca Falls, the Faido Falls, the Biaschina gorges, the Polmengo bridge and the Piottino gorges on the Tessin River, the Stalvedro ravine, the Goeschenen gorges, past the town of Airolo, and ending with the beautiful viaduct at Amstey.

"Gathering Cocoa."

"Reel Life, No. 30" opens with an instructive illustration of the harvesting, preparation and shipping of the cocoa bean. After the harvesting of the cocoa the buds are opened and the beans sorted. They are then placed on pack saddles on the backs of oxen, and conveyed to fermentation vats, after which they are placed in long, shallow bins and dried, previous to being hauled to the nearest depot.

"Scallops."

This is another interesting subject dealt with in "Reel Life, No. 30." It shows in close and clearly photographed views how the scallops are gathered from among the sea weed by means of iron drag nets, and how they are then sorted and measured, after which the shells are opened and the adductor muscle, the only part used for food, is cut off and the remainder thrown away. Ten bushels per day is the catch per man.

Pictures in the Schools

Reasons Why New York Schools Do Not Lead in Matters of Visual Instruction.

THOSE who may be looking to the schools of New York for results along the line of visual education will as yet find little information of value by way of a precedent. It is only natural that educators outside the metropolis would look anxiously for some development in the New York public schools in connection with visual instruction in the class room, yet we find on investigation that little progress has been made, especially with regard to the use of the moving picture. Admitting that the market has offered little that could be used in the illustration of class lessons, the clumsiness and near-sightedness with which visual instruction has been handled in the New York public schools is somewhat appalling, viewed from the standpoint of those who are intelligently familiar with possibilities and prevailing conditions.

For instance, no less than 107 of the public schools of New York City are equipped with Pathescopes, while some 47 more are practically under contract to use them. In order that our readers may better understand the significance of this it might be best to explain that the Pathescope is an admirable little projection machine, originally intended for use in the home. The Pathescope requires a film considerably smaller than the ordinary film, thereby making it inadequate for permanent use in the class room.

In order to purchase these machines the schools, aided by parent associations have given entertainments at which a Pathescope and operator were provided free of charge. The consequence being that the schools in possession of these machines are forced to depend on a limited program of films such as any one concern is able to provide, and are practically shut off from use of the many valuable subjects that are elsewhere available.

Another hindrance lies in the lack of adequate appropriations from the school funds for the necessities of visual instruction. At a recent date an appropriation of $20,000 was asked to cover such necessities, a request which was responded to with a grant of $7,500. And this regardless of the fact that at least 107 of the New York public schools have already paid out of a fund raised by their own efforts and by the aid of Parent Associations, for machines which cannot be expected to cover all the demands of the visual instruction of the future, a sum which must have come little short of the $20,000 appropriation which was asked.

Up to this time no actual attempt has been made to use the moving picture in the New York public schools as an aid to class lessons. The use made of moving picture films in the New York schools has been merely a matter of entertainment and general instruction. Within the past few months, however, an investigator of films has been appointed, evidently with a view to their use in the class room. Report has it that at the beginning of the year a committee appointed by the Board of Education will meet to seriously discuss this question. M. I. MacD.

SOME FILMS FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON.

As the holiday season approaches exhibitors and others become anxious to know what is available in the line of Christmas films. In addition to the production of the fairy tale "Snow-White," which fits the situation to a degree, and "The Life of Our Saviour" which is especially fitting as an offering for the anniversary of the birth of Jesus, we are promised another production of "Snow-White" by the Famous Players, featuring Marguerite Clark. This production is scheduled for Dec. 25. The Mutual Film Corporation have "Budy's Christmas" for Dec. 18. This is a two-part story of the Kentucky mountains. A five-part adaptation of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" will be presented by the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., on Dec. 18, under the title of "The Right to be Happy." This film which was made by Rupert Julian, includes in the cast Harry Carter, Claire McDowell, Francelia Billington and Julian Rupert. "Fighting Joe" a two-part western story, to be released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., Dec. 23, under the Bison brand, was written and produced by Wm. B. Mong. Other Universal offerings are "The Prodigal Daughter," a one-real Laemmle to be released Dec. 20, and "Waiting at the Church," a Nestor comedy for Dec. 18. "A Shriveled Soul," reported to be an excellent five-part Christmas story, will not be released until Jan. 8. This production features George Hernandez, and appears on the Bluebird program.

Yet it is quite among the possibilities that he will eventually appear in lively comedies which afford opportunity to other members of a cast, to his own advantage. No comedy relief is offered to the continuous strain of following his activities, no other collateral and intensifying movement for purposes of contrast. People enjoy his "act in one" because he represents something to them. He illustrates clearly that there are tremendous sources of energy in [illegible]

There lies hidden in our stagnant state of easy-going receptivity a secret recognition that few of us are really what we could be, that our capacities could respond to far greater performance than that we are called upon to make. We think we are cramped by our circumstances, that we have not had a show to give off the best there is in us, but the fault lies deeper. We simply lack an early specialized training which would make it possible for the human machine to do more with less fatigue. That we are unable to respond to our own aspirations is not our fault, nor are our parents really to blame for what they do not know. The trouble lies in common ignorance of how the human plant can be best cultivated to advantage. One interpreter represents physical strength, another determination, another courage, and another fortitude in adversity.

Fairbanks represents physical agility and temperamental optimism, and it is really the latter quality that wins. His leaping and climbing feats would soon pall if he did not perpetually demonstrate that life is good and growing better, in spite of all pessimistic claims to the contrary. Therein lies the true charm of Fairbanks. The play simply depicts an adventurous elopement, with the girl at a hotel telephone, the clergyman in jail, and Fairbanks at bay on the top of a telegraph pole when the marriage finally takes place, the fun hinging on the remarkable adventures of Fairbanks and a clergyman whom he drags from his bath to perform the ceremony. The story will go with all audiences, high and low.

"Three of Many."

"Three of Many" is a supposed [illegible] little phase of human existence idealized by Gardner Sullivan and presented with exceptionally fine artistry. The story contrasts the brutal instincts aroused in men by their efforts to show fidelity to the country which gave them birth, with that instinct in woman which causes her to revolt against destruction of human life, in whose creation she so largely and self-denyingly participates. The subject is a difficult one to handle, but Mr. Gardner has chosen delicate methods, almost purely psychological ones, and he has been fortunate enough to have a cast of high intelligence. Clara Williams clearly expresses the sweetness and refinement of a pure woman's heart under trying circumstances, and the honors go to her. She portrays the character of a woman so simple of heart as to believe that two men who love her can be brought to a recognition of their brotherhood in spite of the fact that one is battling for Italy and the other for America.

There is nobility in this theme: behind it lies the Christ ideal of universal brotherhood; but the vigorous male of today is close kin to the fighting male of other days so far as his impelling emotions are concerned, and there is very little to be found in the conduct of present-day civilization to indicate that there will be any such universal brotherhood until the naturally aggressive male has all the fight kicked out of him. It is even an open question whether he would be improved by this emasculation. He easily becomes vitiated by unmanly softness, as the history of fallen nations attests. Whether or not the idea will be effective will depend much upon the point of view of those to whom it is presented. But the story is well told in all of its departments.

Briefly: all the concomitants of the regulation high pressure romance are here to engross the attention of him who cares nothing for facts, so that his fancy be stimulated and his spirit escape from the commonplaces of life! Miss Bergere has told her story with the necessary dispatch and freedom of invention; and it is admirably acted and produced. William Courtenay supplies the proper amount of material out of which handsome and dauntless heroes are made, and acts with an equal degree of merit. Alice Dovey is a most convincing heroine, both in looks and histrionic ability. Macey Harlan is a thoroughly competent as the East Indian hypnotist, and is also an excellent double for a well-known moving picture magnate. Norman Thorp maintains the reputation of the performance for adequate acting, and the same criticism applies to the other members of the cast.

"The Price of Silence"

Five-part Bluebird Production Featuring Dorothy Phillips Based on Story by W. Carey Wonderly.

"THE Price of Silence," from the magazine story by W. Carey Wonderly, while it is a well-made production, is unfortunately based on an unpleasant theme, presenting situations that are tense and undeniably dramatic, but at the same time vesting certain characters with unheroic temperaments, where actions reflecting moral heroism would be more liable to excite sympathy.

The story in which Dorothy Phillips is featured with a supporting cast consisting of Lon Chaney, Jack Mulhall, Frank Whitson, Jay Belasco, Viola Smith and Evelyn Selbie, opens with a thunder storm, which is a very effective opening, by the-way. Out of this storm come a young man and woman, who, drenched to the skin, find lodgings in a country hotel. A peculiar situation arises out of the fact that to avoid unpleasant surmises they register as man and wife, and con-

A skip of possibly eighteen years introduces us to the home and family of the woman, who is now happily married, and it is not long before we learn that the daughter of the house is in love with a young man who is believed by the horrified mother to be her illegitimate son. The situation, with the doctor who knew the mother's former history suing for the daughter's hand and holding over the mother a threat of exposure, assumes an unpleasant aspect, which clears, however, when the old nurse who was with the mother at the birth of her first child reveals the fact that the child died at birth and was substituted for by another, to prevent the shock to the mother.

"Broken Chains"

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell Stars in Five-Reel Story of Southern Life, Produced by Peerless.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE quality of the material used in the making of "Broken Chains," the five-reel Peerless photoplay in which Ethel Clayton and Carlysle Blackwell are starred, is an unsatisfactory mixture of the good and the bad. The start gives promise of a well-told story, a prologue full of action and color being the spectator's first introduction to the characters. The negro's political status in the South and the suppression of a band of Florida moonshiners are employed in enmeshing the hero in the hazardous situation that will win him the necessary amount of sympathy. Harry Ford, a United States army officer, is falsely convicted of killing the brother of the girl he loves, and is sent to prison. He escapes and takes refuge in the home of the young woman in the case. She prevents his being taken back to the chain gang, by obtaining a convict's lease for his services. Later his innocence is established.

There is no lack of dramatic material in the picture, but it is not always in good taste; neither is it always handled with skill. There is a decided falling off in suspense after the girl becomes the lease owner of her convict-lover. It is also extremely doubtful that her father would permit the man convicted of the murder of his son to become an inmate of the Gwynne home. Several sensational incidents connected with the convict system of Florida and the stealing of a ballot box by a negro politician who is the real murderer of young Gwynne are effective melodramatic touches. The colloquial subtitles in the last reel are amusingly stilted.

The production is creditable, the atmosphere of the South being well sustained. Ethel Clayton brings out the best points in the character of Georgia Gwynne, and Carlyle Blackwell's impersonation of Captain Ford makes that sorely persecuted young officer a likable chap, in spite of the fact that he is somewhat lacking in soldierly bearing. Herbert Barrington, Herbert Delmore, Henry West, Louis Grisel, William Sherwood and Jessie Lewis add to the merits of the production, which was directed by Robert Thornby. Young John Tansy and little Madge Evans do excellent work in the prologue.

Three Malays are on the trail of the cat, which has come to the man who gives it to Barbara in a mysterious manner, and after its one-time possessor is killed by a poisoned dart. On the Brent's ranch a Japanese valet is found dead, also killed by a poisoned dart, shot from a blow-gun by one of the Malays. The Sheriff, Barbara and John Wallace (True Boardman) attempt to solve the mystery. Barbara, alone in an isolated shack, is overpowered by one of the mysterious trio. She later pursues him and engages in an exciting fight with him. The other two members of the murdering trio are brought to book by Wallace and the Sheriff.

In the cast are also seen Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, Barney Furey, Edward Clisbee, Jack Rahm and Y. Aonami.

"The Trunk Mystery."

This episode of "Grant, Police Reporter" is fully up to the high standard set by preceding releases. Once again a murder furnishes the idea for the plot. The murder is solved by Grant and a detective, and it is in pursuit of the murderer and in an effort to save his daughter that George Larkin furnishes a thrill. The girl (Ollie Kirkby) is beaten unconscious by her father (the murderer) and is placed on a belt that carries waste lumber to the top of a burning heap of waste. Mr. Larkin jumps to a belt of the machine, is carried on the belt for about a hundred feet, jumps to a suspended rope, and leaps to the spot where the other belt discharges its cargo. He catches the unconscious form of the girl just as she is about to be dashed on to the burning wood pile. The reel is full of action.

Others in the cast than those named are Director Robert Ellis, William McKey, Harry Gordon, Mary Taylor Ross and T. Justin Down.

THE charm of this production is undoubtedly due to the personality of Mary Miles Minter, whose beauty, youth and spontaneity are irresistible. With a less attractive star some of the business of the production such as various attractive methods which the child under a new and evil influence uses in stealing might be questioned. In the early portion of the story the role of the child, who is neglected by a pleasure-loving mother, is cleverly played by Dodo Newton. This part of the picture contains many unusually appealing scenes.

The child, whose memory is affected by the fall, forgets her former surroundings and becomes an accomplished thief. Later she is restored to her own home by a freak of circumstances and is restored to her normal self.

The production was made by James Kirkwood and is a decidedly artistic one.

Others in the cast are William Bailey, Eva Francis, Clifford Gray, Kate Lester and Dora Mills Adams. There is good drama in the latter half of the story, especially in the situations developing from the bringing by the gentleman jockey into the home of his socially aspiring aunt of the girl from the dance hall. The ending is not what may be described as a "happy" one, but is unquestionably the more logical.

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE, the author of "The Secret Kingdom," the new Vitagraph serial in fifteen episodes, is a past-master at the art of creating romantic adventure. His work has but one object in life—to entertain, and he cares not a whit how his characters are put to it to keep up the pace set for them—so long as the interest is kept at fever heat. The first eight episodes are entitled "The Land of Intrigue," "Royalty at Red Wing," "The Sealed Packet," "The Honorable Mr. Oxenham," "Carriage Call No. 101," "Human Flotsam," "The Ghost Ship" and "Rum Cay."

Starting in one of the mythical kingdoms of Europe that are found only on the private maps of the writers of romance, the story discloses the existence of a certain Prime Minister of Alania, who has his ruler and the queen assassinated, and is only prevented from putting the young Crown Prince out of the way by the efforts of a faithful officer of the guard, who takes the boy to the United States. The next episode shifts to Arizona, twenty years later. The rightful ruler of Alania, who does not know his real rank, bears the name of Phillip Barr. The daughter of the usurper, now traveling in this country, is rescued by Phillip and—the race for a bride and a throne is on.

Emissaries of the Prime Minister try to keep the lovers apart and to prevent Phillip from reaching his native land and learning the truth. He is attacked in a den in Chicago, his sweetheart is stolen from him and locked up in a private lunatic asylum in New York, his package of important papers is also stolen, and reaches him again by a series of surprising turns of plot. There is a thrilling rescue of the heroine from a third-story window, and any number of lively and well-fought "goes" between the hero and his enemies. An encounter with river pirates, a leap from a ferry boat into the North River, one exciting incident after another is introduced, of which one need not ask the reason why—even if there were a moment's pause in which to frame the question.

The indispensible elements connected with such a photo-drama are adequate production in every branch of the work. The makers of "The Secret Kingdom" have done this, and the acting, the direction and the purely mechanical side of the production are all commensurate with the requirements of the picture.

Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly head the cast, and Arline Pretty, Joseph Kilgour, William Dunn and De Jalma West have important allotments. Ned Finley figured strongly in the early episodes.

"The Vixen"

Six-Part Fox Production Featuring Theda Bara in Character of Selfish Feminine.

WHILE Theda Bara has portrayed many unpleasant feminine characters, always with the same startling finesse, [illegible] she had not exploited the vileness of. This one will be found in "The Vixen," and it would indeed be difficult to locate a more despicable type of femininity.

The story, which is very obvious, has been written with the express purpose of forming a vehicle for Miss Bara, is attributed to J. Gordon Edwards. It introduces us to people of varied characteristics, among whom are a father who through drink and its consequences has become the care of the family; two daughters, the first the evil one of the title role, presented without a single saving grace, and the second a young woman of admirable and unselfish qualities. The son of the family is presented as a weakling tending toward crime; while two other men of manly type become the unwilling victims of the "vixen."

Six reels are too many for the telling of this story, which shows how the wicked sister in fear that she be left to care for her father alone, manipulates by means of many lies so that her sister's love affairs are always upset, and the man's affection transferred to herself. The first man she jilts because of his financial reverses, which, by the way, are indirectly a product of her brother's evil doing. The second she marries and leads him a miserable life through her extravagances. In the final throw her true character is revealed to her sister, who finally becomes the happy wife of the man who was jilted by the "vixen."

Others in the cast beside Theda Bara are A. H. Van Buren, Herbert Heyes, Mary Martin, George Clarke, Carl Gerard, and Geo. Odell.

Mme. Petrova Dominates Five-Reel Drama Produced by Popular Plays and Players for Metro.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm

DOMINATED by the beauty, personality and dramatic ability of Mme. Petrova, "The Black Butterfly," a five-reel motor picture drama from the studios of the Popular Plays and Players to be released by Metro on December 4, is a powerful offering. Despite a "draggyness" found in the first two reels, the mere presence on the screen of Mme. Petrova is sufficient to hold interest. After the first two reels the story moves more rapidly than before. In the story, by L. Case Russell, scenarioized by Wallace Clifton, Mme. Petrova plays the dual role with a depth of understanding of her art that totally convinces.

The story, as visualized under the direction of Burton L. King, is unusual and is replete with interest. Its many dramatic moments are registered on the screen compellingly. The story is laid in France and tells of a peasant girl who marries a count. She is later given reason to believe that he is already married, and after the birth of a daughter leaves for Paris, where she becomes the toast of the clubs. She is filled with a hatred for men and her mother-love yearns for the daughter who she cannot call her own. Then she falls in love with a youth. He is in love with the "Butterfly's" daughter. The daughter tries suicide and the "Butterfly" learns that it is her daughter that the youth is in love with. She spurns him so that he returns to the daughter. The story ends happily at a field hospital where the "Butterfly" has gone as a nurse. She learns that her husband was not married when he married her.

The leading male player is Mahlon Hamilton, who gives a creditable performance. The entire supporting cast to Mme. Petrova do commendable work. It includes Anthony Merlo, Edward Brennan, Count Lewenhaupt, Violet B. Reed, John Hopkins, Morgan Jones, Norman Kaiser, Roy Pilcher and Evelyn Dumo. Some good double-exposure scenes in which the mother and daughter appear together were photographed by Andre Barlatier.

"Somewhere in Mexico," the Next Tweedledum.

In "Somewhere in Mexico" Tweedledum has humorously caught the military fever which is abroad in the land, and with true patriotism enlists in his country's service with the avowed intention of removing Villa from the face of the earth.

His funny antics shock the dignity of the recruiting officers and furnish no end of amusement to his fellow soldiers. Tweedledum, however, makes a very poor soldier and violates all the rules. The officers are utterly unable to keep him in line if a pretty girl happens to be anywhere near during drill time, but the crowning climax comes when he slips away from his camp to hide and have a quiet smoke. He happens to select a spot which is near the location of a band of Mexicans and the powder magazine. He carelessly tosses away the remains of his cigar—when suddenly a terrible explosion ensues and almost the entire company of Mexican soldiers are blown to pieces. His own company rush to the scene and promptly make Tweedledum a great hero and give him credit for overcoming the enemy single-handed. He is quickly raised to the rank of a Commanding Officer and receives his newly-acquired honors joyfully if not gracefully.

Kalems for Mid-December

Five Reels a Week for Thrills, Drama and Laughs Promised for Release Through General Film.

WORKING well ahead on its release schedule Kalem is ready to announce the issues through General Film well into the latter part of December. Variety is the keynote of the four weekly releases, totalling five reels. Dramatic thrills of all sorts are promised in "The Girl from Frisco," "The Hazards of Helen," and "Grant, Police Reporter," while Ham and Bud are counted on for their usual supply of laughs.

"The Midnight Express," issued on December 16, and "The Vanishing Box-Car," released the following Saturday, are two of the coming "Hazards." Some unusual night photography is a feature of the first-mentioned release, in which the thrill finds Helen Gibson, in pursuit of a train, running her motorcycle onto a flat car and leaping through the air to the rail of the speeding car. "The Vanishing Box-car" is an unusual mystery story, hinging on the disappearance in broad daylight of a box-car shipment of valuable machinery while the train bearing it was passing between two stations. Helen Gibson supplies her usual quota of daring thrills to this one reel of famous railroad series.

New York's annual Police Parade forms the center of the action of "The Menace," the "Grant, Police Reporter" episode scheduled for release on Friday, December 15. The sensational thrills that have caused this one-reel series by Robert Welles Ritchie to become one of the most popular of Kalem releases in so short a space of time are once more present in this offering. One of the feats shows George Larking leaping from the top floor window of an office building to a rope hanging over the cornice and climbing to the roof. A 30-foot leap through the air from a deck house on one roof across an areaway is another exploit calculated to meet the avid demands of picture followers. Ollie Kirkby also appears to advantage in these episodes.

The final week of December will bring the "Girl from 'Frisco" series to its twenty-first episode. "The Stain of Chuckawalla," the nineteenth episode, will be issued on Wednesday, December 13, while the following Wednesday brings "On the Brink of War." Marin Sais in her character of Barbara Brent undertakes a difficult task in cleaning up the politics of a border town in the first-mentioned two-reel release. Others in the cast include True Boardman, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, Ronald Bradbury, Hart Hoxie, Jack Rahmn and Josephine West. Director James W. Horne continues to hold the reins in staking this series of the West.

With the all-star comedy quartette of Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch, the Kalem weekly comedy releases have jumped into increased popularity. "The Icemen and the Artist" is a single reel laugh-maker scheduled for Tuesday, December 12. Ham and Bud, by their work in this comedy, revive the old question of "How would you like to be the ice man?" With Ethel Teare the pretty artist's model, Ham and Bud find it a pleasant vocation. "The Fatal Violin" is followed on the succeeding Tuesday with the fun-makers burlesquing the usual melodramatic anarchist story.

"WITCHING HOUR" BOOKING STRONGLY.

In Greater New York Alone Twelve Prints of Frohman Production Will Be Used.

MORRIS TOBIAS, booking manager of the corporation to be formed for the purpose of exploiting and handling the Frohman Amusement Corporation's extraordinary release, "The Witching Hour," in the State of New York and Northern New Jersey, is being besieged with requests from exhibitors in that territory with bookings on that production. The contract with Mr. Tobias was entered into late on a Friday afternoon, and up to Saturday evening six individual bookings of one week each, ranging from 1,000 to $1,250, were placed and no less than thirty-three bookings at $100 a day each were signed.

It was originally the intention of Mr. Tobias to work upon seven prints in Greater New York immediately upon the release of the production, through his office, but because of the demand for this production, he has increased his order so as to work twelve prints at one time.

Mr. Tobias accounts for this demand largely by reason of the fact, as he views it, that the exhibitor and the public have been surfeited with photodramas dealing with modern society conditions, all in the same vein, or sex problems or photoplays based on exploits and adventures without the realm of realism and that the theme of "The Witching Hour," embracing a subject that has been for years past and today is seriously considered by men and women in all walks of life and possessing an intensity of dramatics not heretofore met with either on the legitimate or photoplay stage, without calling for destruction of property in order to give a so-called punch to the picture, that the exhibitors are grasping at the opportunity to run that attraction.

Letters of unstinted praise and commendation are swelling the mails of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, from men and women in all walks of public and private life, and these are being turned over to Mr. Tobias to make use of in further exploiting and advertising [illegible]

It is expected that "The Witching Hour" will be released for public exhibition in New York [illegible]

MONEY MAID MEN (Vim), Nov. 24. A rather slow-moving comedy reel, with Pokes and Jabbs in the roles of bookkeepers, and rivals for the favor of the stenographer. A few laughs come through antics with a sliding chair. Pokes decides to get money in robbing the safe, and is discovered by Jabbs. The boss, as a reward to Jabbs, makes him choose between money and the girl. He takes the money.

THE SELIG TRIBUNE, NO. 95, 1916 (Selig), Nov. 27.—Ruth Law finishes Chicago-New York flight at Governor's Island; whaling ship loaded with whalebone arrives at San Francisco; Miss Jeanette Rankin, elected to Congress, addresses students of University of Montana, Missoula, Mont.; fashionable women do own marketing, New Orleans; Massachusetts Guardsmen given official welcome on return from border, Boston; scenes on International Grand Prize Auto Race, Santa Monica, Cal.; Congressman Bleakey travels in aeroplane, Washington to Philadelphia; boiler of tug explodes, New York; eight hundred salmon secured for spawning, Raymond, Me.; Mrs. Chas. H. Spinks to sit in electoral college, San Francisco; Yale defeats Princeton at football, Princeton.

TAKING THE HONEY OUT OF HONEYMOON (Vitagraph), Nov. 27.—Real humor is found in this reel, although it finishes rather abruptly. Slapstick is not once resorted to, and the story amuses throughout. It concerns a newly-wed couple whose endeavors to make others believe they are old hands at the marriage game result in laughable situations. Mary Anderson and J. Carlton Weatherby are seen in the leading parts.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE UNKNOWN (Biograph), Nov. 27—Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and Henry Walthall play the leading parts in this reissued reel. The film is typical of pictures made several years ago, and tells a story set in the moonshining district of Kentucky. Mr. Walthall is seen as a reveune officer, Miss Marsh as the daughter of a moonshiner, and Mr. Harron as her sweetheart.

DUDES FOR A DAY (Kalem), Nov. 28.—A little better than usual number of the Ham comedies. Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare, Henry Murdoch and A. Edmondson are in the cast. Although the old idea of the hod carrier who inherits money is used, the result is more or less laughable. Ham and Bud obtain swell suits for advertising purposes from a tailor. They bring the newly rich Irishman and his daughter to a ball, but their happiness is short-lived.

DREAMY DUD JOYRIDING WITH PRINCESS ZLIM (Essanay), Nov. 29.—A cartoon comic by Carlson shares this reel with scenic. The cartoon shows Dreamy Dud taking a ride with the dusky Princess Zlim. Astride an elephant who drinks gasoline, the two have a merry time, what with fights that the elephant indulges in, etc. The scenic was photographed along the Apache Trail and the adjoining locality, and is excellent.

THE PRIZE WINNERS (Vim), Nov. 30.—Babe Hardy and Kate Price are the funmakers in this comedy reel. Quite a bit of fast and amusing action takes place when Babe and his friend horn their way into a mask ball given at Kate's house. They have become a trifle tipsy because of their jobs as beer inspectors and, in stolen plumage, they take the prize at the ball—also the silverware. Babe, however, takes the loot away from his partner and gives it back.

THE WIZARD'S PLOT (Kalem), Dec. 1.—An episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter," series. According to a review printed on page 1508 of the issue of December 9, this episode "is practically all action and makes a good one-reel offering." The big thrill comes when George Larkin, swinging among the tangled ropes high up in a ship's rigging, plunges over the ship's side into the sea, in pursuit of an anarchist. The story is interesting. Ollie Kirkby and Director Robert Ellis are also seen on the screen.

THE TRIAL RUN (Kalem), Dec. 2.—Helen Gibson takes chances on her life at least twice in this number of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series. An especially daring feat is accomplished by her when she throws a lasso over a ventilator of a moving train, lifts herself from her horse, and clambers aboard the top of the train so that she may stop it before it hits an overturned automobile. She also makes a leap from a racing automobile to a flat car. With her in the film there are P. S. Pembroke, G. A. Williams and George Routh. Directed by Walter Morton.

JAILBIRDS (Kalem), Dec. 5.—A quite funny number of the Ham comedies. Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch are seen in the reel. Laughs are numerous in this film, and the comedy ball is kept rolling by this quartette. Ham and Bud have a new way to make the shoe shining business pay. As prison guards they get over several laughs. Henry Murdoch is the gambler who goes to prison and tries to escape. Ethel is his daughter.

THE LINEMAN'S PERIL (Kalem), Dec. 9.—In this number of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series a dog has an important part. A locomotive is wrecked, and Helen Gibson is seen in a flying explosion of powder dropped from a wagon. Helen prevents a collision by her leap. The dog figures conspicuously when he causes Helen to learn that a lineman has been injured and is in danger of the Limited. Besides Miss Gibson those in the cast are P. S. Pembroke and George Routh.

THE ICE AND THE ARTIST (Kalem), Dec. 12.—A comedy reel with Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch. Ham and Bud become icemen so as to get the favors of housewives. Their work leads them to an artist's studio where they see Ethel. She steals much of the furnishings, but is excused because she is a kleptomaniac. Ham and Bud try the same stunt, but it fails, and the reel closes with them still running away from their pursuers.

THE BORDER LINE (Essanay), Nov. 25.—A three-reel drama with a surprise at the finish. A girl, in league with a band of blackmailers, gets a position as maid in a wealthy youth's home. She makes love to the young man and lures him into a compromising situation in the presence of her accomplices. They act as detectives and tell the youth that he must marry the girl or pay the price of silence. Loving the girl, the youth marries her. In the leading roles are seen Nell Craig and Edward Arnold.

FOLLOWING THE FLAG (Selig), Nov. 27.—Three reels of film showing life at the border with the National Guardsmen. All phases of army life are shown. The picture will make an especial appeal to relatives and friends of National Guardsmen who have been and who are doing duty at the border line. We see the guardsmen on hikes, their kitchens, transportation—in fact, everything they were occupied with is shown in the three reels.

A TIN SOLDIER (Essanay), Nov. 28.—A two-reel comedy with some fast knockabout action. A man is dragged to a mask ball by his wife and escaping from the scene, he leaves the uniform he wore home and goes to a dentist. The uniform is worn by his son and many humorous complications follow. The film is quite lively. In the cast are George Beane, Florence Oberle, Bruce Kent and Florence Barr.

BORDER WOLVES (Kalem), Nov. 29.—No. 17 of Robert Welles Ritchie's "The Girl from 'Frisco" series. Fast action marks these two reels, the story of which is on the border line between the United States and Mexico. Bandit raids are seen and the film is an acceptable one. A review, printed on page 1508 of the issue of December 9, states that "there is found an abundance of that power to excite that is so well liked by persons who want melodramatic thrills and plenty of them." Marin Sais and True Boardman are again seen in the leads.

BUTTS CASEY, CROOK (Knickerbocker Star Feature), Dec. 1.—A two-reel drama in which a crook becomes a man and makes a sacrifice for love. The film has enough heart interest to hold attention throughout. The crook, falling in love with a girl, goes to work to reclaim himself. He learns that the girl is engaged to a youth. The youth is in trouble and the crook once more steals so that the youth may marry the girl.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE VIXEN (Fox), Dec. 4.—A six-part production, featuring Theda Bara. The type of woman portrayed by her is one of the most despicable that could be imagined, and the play is built around this character in a most obvious fashion. Some children have been used in the picture to good advantage, excepting that they appear principally in side issues. Considerable padding is evident in the picture.

THE WICKED CITY (Vogue), Dec. 3.—A two-reel production of a fair quality of farce comedy. There is very little that is absolutely new in the business of this comedy, and there is rather too much pajama play. Most audiences would, no doubt, think it very funny, however.

JIMMY DALE—Alias, "The Gray Seal," No. 1 (Monmouth-Unicorn).—The first number of this new serial is entitled "The Gray Seal." It introduces us to the chief character of the story, Jimmy Dale, son of a millionaire, who is induced, by a mysterious influence, to rob the homes of the rich in order to give to the poor, leaving behind him in each instance a diamond-shaped gray seal. The serial, which promises to be entertaining, is strictly melodrama of the deepest dye, and interweaves its plot with circumstances in the life of a young woman whose supposed uncle schemes to murder her in order to gain possession of her fortune. In the next number her path crosses that of Jimmy Dale. The featured members of the cast are E. K. Lincoln, Edna Hunter and Paul Panzer. The serial is based on stories by Frank L. Packard.

JIMMY DALE—Alias, "The Gray Seal," No. 2 (Monmouth-Unicorn).—"The Stolen Rubies," which is the title of the second number of this serial, brings other interesting characters to light. Jimmy Dale meets Marie la Salle, who has taken refuge from her supposed uncle and his crime gang in the home of a wealthy society woman, resolves to give up his double life, and is dissuaded from so doing by the secret influence who sends him to rescue Sammy Mathews, a young man in the power of an evil-doer, who forces him to steal a collection of rubies. A thrilling number.

JIMMY DALE—Alias, "The Gray Seal," No. 3 (Monmouth-Unicorn).—"The Counterfeit Five" is the title of this number of the serial in which a spectacular fight in a den of criminals takes place. Jimmy is again induced to go to the aid of Sammy Mathews, and barely eludes arrest for his pains. He is now deeply in love with Marie, who is still pursued by the bogus uncle.

GREEN EYES (Laemmle), Dec. 13.—The story of a jealous husband, by Grace Helen Bailey, featuring Lois Wilson, George Chesebro, Betty Schade and Edward Brady. The young married woman agrees to help out a pair of lovers. The angry husband, finding his wife with the lover at the country club, creates a scene. Later, still jealous of his wife, he shoots his own brother, who has invaded their apartments with the intention of robbing them. The plot is not exceptional, but is played by a pleasing cast and makes a good appeal to the interest.

I'M YOUR HUSBAND (Nestor), Dec. 15.—A pleasing comedy, written and directed by Capt. L. T. Peacock. Peggy Coudray appears as a neglected wife, who has her maid impersonate her husband in order to teach the latter a well deserved lesson. The comedy works admirably, and makes a successful comedy situation. A breezy subject, well handled.

THEIR DARK SECRET (Joker), Dec. 16.—This comic number, by Harry Wulze features Wm. Franey and Gale Henry. The former plays the part of a musician whose initials are B. V. D. Some well known underwear, bearing the same initials, plays an important part. The plot is entirely too slight and fails to get up much amusement. A fair number.

Universal Film Mfg. Co., Specials.

THE MORALS OF HILDA (Red Feather), Dec. 11.—A five reel number, by H. C. Warnack, featuring Gretchen Lederer, Lois Wilson, Frank Whitson, Emory Johnson, Richard Morris and Adele Farrington. The story concerns a peasant girl and her lover, who leave the old country and come to the new world without being married. The situation seems natural enough in a way, but the girl's troubles might have been remedied at any time by marriage, even though August could not support her. There are some strong situations in this, but some of them are unpleasant and not altogether convincing. The question raised at the close concerning the status of illegitimate children is interesting, but seemed more like special progaganda than a part of the story itself. The number as a whole is one of about average strength.

THE TWO ROADS (Gold Seal), Dec. 12.—A three-reel subject, by Ben Lardeck, featuring Douglas Munro and Edna Flugrath. This is a crook story of good action, though the first part of the plot is rather obvious. The events of the last reel are most interesting; the clergyman's method of saving the girl's life by compromising her honor being unique. The photography is unfortunately too dark in numerous scenes. An average offering.

THE LAWYER'S SECRET (Rex), Dec. 14.—A two-reel number, by Hugh Wier, featuring Molly Malone and Jack Nelson. A Southern gentleman dies, leaving his estate to his scapegrace son, if the latter can be found and has reformed. The attorneys plan to provide a substitute heir and have the property assigned over to themselves for a price. The scheme fails to work, because the substitute falls in love with the dead man's niece. This is not essentially new in plot, but works out well and makes an entertaining subject.

SCRATCHED (Imp), Dec. 15.—A two-reel number, by Douglas Bronston, featuring two young men, one of whom is addicted to gambling. He induces his pal to do likewise. A vast amounut of trouble results from this first step on the downward path. Betting on the races follows. One is thrown into prison on the other's testimony. There is also a love story. This is very interesting, but has a poor finish, in fact is disappointing in this regard.

THE TAINT OF FEAR (Bison), Dec. 16.—A two-reel number, featuring Allen J. Holubar, who also wrote the story. This has the familiar theme of a young man, who, timid as a boy, grows up with the idea that he is a coward. He serves on the border with the National Guard and, after meditating flight under fire, rallies and proves himself a hero. The fighting scenes at first lack strength, but later gain in realism and the story gets over nicely. The theme is one of general appeal. Lydia Yeamans Titus, George Pearce and Joseph Gerard are also in the cast.

World Pictures.

BROKEN CHAINS (World), Dec. 11.—Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell have the leading roles in this five-reel photoplay of Southern life. Most of the material is melodramatic, the hero being unjustly accused of a murder. A chain gang and a sensational escape figure in the plot. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Fine Arts Busy

Era of Unusual Activity Is Inaugurated at the Los Angeles Studios.

WHEN the small army of carpenters, stage hands and other mechanics that is now working at the Triangle-Fine Arts studio complete their labors the big motion picture plan on the coast will have taken on almost an entirely new appearance. The stages are being enlarged, the light studio reconstructed and preparations generally made for a busy and prosperous winter season.

Ideal working weather has inspired the Triangle-Fine Arts directors to such a pitch of enthusiasm that these enlargements in the light studio at the plant have been made necessary. In fact, the entire studio location has been changed and now occupies the stage immediately adjoining the executive offices. The pictures now being filmed include: "The Little Yank," by Director Siegman; "Jim Bludsoe," by Director Browning; "A House Built Upon Sand," by Director Morrissey. Weather was not the only thing, however, that prompted the enlargement of the light studio, as the increased production was the principal factor. Next week will see the beginning of several new pictures and all of the companies will be working overtime.

Wilfred, Lucas, Ted Browning and the "Jim Bludso" company, including Georgie Stone, the juvenile star, are in Sacramento making river scenes for the picture. The location outing promises to be one of many thrills for Georgie, as he is scheduled to be rescued from drowning by Lucas and undergoes several harrowing adventures.

Douglas Fairbanks and his company are in San Diego, hard at work in the San Diego exposition grounds in Fairbanks' new comedy drama, "Blaze Derringer." Fairbanks last week completed "The Matrimaniac" and is said to be outdoing his strenuous self in the initial scenes of the new picture. The story, which was photo-dramatized by Anita Loos from the novel by Eugene P. Lyle, Jr., is said to be ideally adapted to Fairbanks' peculiar talents. Director John Emerson is in charge of the piece.

Lillian Gish will soon be seen on the Triangle program in a new Fine Arts production, "A House Built Upon Sand," written by Mary H. O'Connor, and directed by Edward Morrissey.

Roy Stuart has the role opposite to Miss Gish. The supporting cast includes W. H. Brown, Bessie Buskirk, Jack Brammall, Josephine Crowell and Kate Bruce.

In this production Miss Gish has a part that brings to the fore her ability for enacting intellectual comedy roles.

The part she plays in "A House Built Upon Sand" is that of a social butterfly, whose entire happiness depends upon the excitement she finds in the social whirl. The man who marries her is somewhat of the cave-man type despite his fondness for intellectual pursuits. Much against her will the young woman is outgeneralled in her desire to have a big wedding, and later lands in a small town where her husband is owner and manager of a big industrial plant. Here a gradual transformation in her character takes place, and from a thoughtless, shallow-brained, dance-crazed society girl she changes to a young woman with a love for all humanity. A child, the daughter of a factory woman, worms itself into her heart and is largely responsible for the evolution of the young bride's character. This results in a striking climax in which a big fire is one of the spectacular features.

General Film Subjects

New Essanay Series Announced—Much Good Material in Program for Week of December 11.

GENERAL Film Service announces a second series of stories from the Essanay studios under the general title of "Is Marriage Sacred?" Each drama of this series is a complete story in itself and will be performed by the Essanay Stock Company, composed of Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold and Thomas Commerford.

General Film Company's releases for the week of December 11-16 inclusive are topped by "Twisted Trails," a Selig three-part Western drama featuring Tom Mix, Bessie Eyton and Eugenie Besserer, supported by a strong cast. Mix rides his horse across a narrow foot-log which spans a deep chasm, and does a succession of other thrilling things. This drama is followed by a one-reel comedy from the Vitagraph studios entitled "Accident Is the Best Policy," which precedes the educating Selig-Tribune. Vivian Prescott is seen in "Her Sacrifice," a one-reel drama reissued by Biograph, which closes the program for Monday.

The second of the "Black Cat Series," from the Essanay studios, under the caption of "In a Looking Glass," featuring Nell Craig and Richard Travers, will usher in Tuesday's program, followed by a Kalem single reel comedy, "The Icemen and the Artist," featuring the comedy quartet Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch.

Essanay's Canimated Nooz Pictorial uncovering inside stuff on the election exposed by the Canimated Nooz staff, Max Linder wearing his fourteen trunks of clothes and other interesting laugh-producing topics are shown. Some beautiful scenes about Long Beach, Cal., make up the other half of this offering. Then will come a one-reel Vim comedy and the 19th episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," entitled "The Stain of Chuckawalla," featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman, followed by "The Honor of the Law," a Biograph drama in two acts featuring Irene Howley, which completes the program for Wednesday.

Selig-Tribune, showing pictorially all the big and interesting events of the world, together with the latest fashions and a one-reel Vim comedy, are offered Thursday..

"The Menace," the ninth adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter," featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, will be the first picture screened the following day. Vitagraph offers a one-reel comedy, "Bears and Bullets," and Vim "What's the Use," a comedy of the same length in which Pokes and Jabbs are seen in the chief roles of building laughs.

"The Burning Band," the initial episode of Essanay's series of stories, on "Is Marriage Sacred?" a two-reel drama in which Marguerite Clayton and Sydney Ainsworth are featured, will precede "Pep's Legacy," a Vitagraph drama in three parts featuring "Sunshine" Mary Anderson. Then will come "The Midnight Express," an episode of Kalem's "Hazard's of Helen," in which Helen Gibson, "The Daring Railroad Girl," is starred. "The Road to Fame," a stirring one-reel drama, carrying a call of the heart, in which Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley are featured, will close the program for the day and week.

Essanay Gets "Skinner's Dress Suit."

President George K. Spoor, of Essanay, has purchased the motion picture rights to "Skinner's Dress Suit," Henry Irving Dodge's amusing story which made such a hit when it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of a few numbers back. Bryant Washburn will appear in the leading role in the film version. The rest of the cast has not yet been chosen. The piece is now being arranged for the screen and will be directed by Harry Beaumont, who has just completed "The Truant Soul," Henry B. Walthall's superfeature.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE GARDEN OF ALLAH" (Selig).

The Garden of Allah, the romance of the Sahara desert, is to be released soon by the Selig Polyscope Company. It is a picture of strong emotional scenes enacted by Helen Ware and Tom Santschi. Those who recall the famous novel written by Robert Hichens will remember the passionate protestations of love made by Domini Enfilden and Boris Androvsky, whose fates were written in the sands. Those who have been permitted to see advance presentations of Selig's The Garden of Allah assert that Helen Ware has a part particularly well suited to her wonderful ability and that she arises to emotional heights rarely seen in screen acting.

Scene from "The Garden of Allah" (Selig).

There are a number of passionate love scenes enacted between Boris and Domini that outrival in intensity the world's greatest love story, "Romeo and Juliet."

There is the awakening of love in the heart of Domini Enfilden and the response on the part of Boris, who had not seen a woman for twenty-three years. Then comes the avowal of undying love on the part of Boris in the Garden of Allah, the love scenes of the first night after the marriage far away in the Sahara desert and finally the renunciation, said to be one of the most thrilling, heart-touching scenes ever presented in motion pictures.

Some of the sensational scenes in "The Garden of Allah" include the sand storm, the battle of the desert nomads, scenes in the garden of Allah and on the Sahara desert, and the streets and bazaars of the Oriental city of Beni-Mora. "The Garden of Allah" is colorful, barbaric, with a marvelous atmosphere of vastness.

HART WORKING ON STORY OF THE DESERT.

Following his work in the Triangle-Kay Bee drama of the old west by Monte M. Katterjohn, upon which he was engaged until a week ago, William S. Hart has begun the filming of a new play written for him by J. G. Hawks, author of "The Devil's Double" and numerous other Hart successes. The scenes of the new Hawks vehicle are laid along the Arizona and Mexican border, and are said to provide Hart with a number of unique opportunities for presenting the character of a frontiersman in spectacular settings.

Mary MacIvor, who has been a member of the Kay Bee company for some time, will play opposite Hart in the new feature. This will be Miss MacIvor's first leading part, and her work will be watched with unusual interest on that account.

A large number of the scenes will be taken out on the Mojave Desert, and none of the people who will take part in the drama are looking forward to the trip with enthusiasm, for this is the season of the big sand-storms. Only a few days ago news reached Los Angeles from the desert of a storm that caused the death of three men and the abandonment of twenty-five automobiles in various parts of that arid section. Hart's well known penchant for work will not allow him to hold up work, however, no matter whether it rains sand or carpet-tacks.

GLADYS COBURN MAKES FILM DEBUT IN FOX FILM.

In The Battle of Life, her first picture production, Gladys Coburn shows convincingly how a woman can be the slave of freedom. Miss Coburn plays the part of Mary Boland, the daughter of a crook, who has determined to give up the life led by her father and her associates. She is persecuted by the police. A stool pigeon haunts her wherever she goes. She is thrown into jail on suspicion. Her cell door and the prison gates swing open, but she finds that she had not yet been freed from the law's unrelenting hold. The picture is released on December 11.

Miss Coburn, the newest of William Fox stars, makes her bow to photoplay fans in this production. She was born twenty years ago in Kentucky. At sixteen, in a private boarding school, she won a reputation as a captivating amateur. When a friend in the "Too Many Cooks" company told her of an opportunity to join the play, she accepted it. Julian Eltinge saw her work and promptly engaged her for "The Crinoline Girl." Mr. Fox then captured her.

Miss Coburn is supported in "The Battle of Life" by an excellent cast. Art Acord, world's champion cowboy, plays opposite her in the part of Dave Karns, her sweetheart. Others in the photoplay are: William Sheer, Frank Evans, Richard Neill, Alex Shannon and Violet De Biccari, all of whom are well-known to Fox Film fans.

"THE VAMPIRES" (Gaumont).

The fifth episode of "The Vampires," the three-act story known as "The Eyes That Hold," is one long series of thrills. This duel between Enrique Moreno, the lone bandit, and the arch criminals of Paris has Irma Vep as the reward for the winner. Whether she shall continue a power among the Vampires or aid their implacable foe is the great question not decided until the last few feet of film are shown. The episode is released through Mutual, December 21. And through all three acts Philip Guard and his faithful ally, Normandin, are coming closer and closer to the men whose civil power they have sworn to destroy.

Juliet Musidora does no better work in the entire novel than she does in this episode. How she is trapped by Moreno and a substitute set to work on a Vampire job is only one unexpected turn of the sensational plot. This episode also sees the last of the Grand Vampire, a part convincingly played by Eugene Ayme. Through the play runs the efforts of the American embezzler to protect his ill-gotten gains against the machination of the Vampires.

Scene from "The Vampires" (Gaumont).

The reviews of the first four episodes of "The Vampires" have been consistently enthusiastic. For every chapter, the general verdict is that "the most fascinating and startling melodramatic situations are hurled pell-mell in rapid succession, so rapid that he who thirsts for the mysterious to solve will find plenty to slake his thirst."

Metro December Releases

Many Strong Subjects Listed Featuring Popular Screen Stars.

THE December releases of Metro Pictures Corporation consist of an unusually strong quartet of photoplays and an equal number of one-act comedies. Leading the list of features is "The Black Butterfly," released December 4, with Mme. Petrova as star. This absorbing story of love and the war in Europe has been made at the Popular Plays and Players studios under the direction of Burton L. King, assisted by Edward James. Seldom has Mme. Petrova had so strong a vehicle as this powerful five-act screen play from the pen of L. Case Russell. In it the star plays Sonia, the mother, and Marie, the daughter. Sonia is an opera singer who is a Paris favorite, and Marie a little girl bred in a convent, so there is excellent opportunity for the star's versatility.

Life at the front during the present war is one of the themes of "The Black Butterfly." The necessity of saving the life of a Colonel of France by means of blood transfusion brings Sonia into the presence of the husband of her youth. An unusually dramatic denouement follows. Mme. Petrova in "The Black Butterfly" is supported by such sterling players as Mahlon Hamilton, Edward Brennan, Roy Pilcher, Evelyn Dumo, Anthony Merlo and Violet Reed.

Next on the list is "The Stolen Triumph," the first Metro-Rolfe production to star the celebrated artist, Julius Steger, since "The Blindness of Love." "The Stolen Triumph," which will be released on the Metro program December 11, was written by Maxwell Karger and Mr. Steger. David Thompson, assisted by P. Thad Volkman, directed the production, which was made by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. Prominent in the cast are Clara Whipple, Clara Blandick, Harry Burkhardt, Marie Reichardt, Helen Badgley and Maury Steuart. The two last-named supply delightful touches of child life.

Ethel Barrymore in a picturization of Margaret Deland's famous novel, "The Awakening of Helena Richie," is announced for December 18. The screen version has been made by arrangement with the author and Messrs. Harper & Bros., the publishers of the book. No American novel had had so widespread an appeal as "The Awakening of Helena Richie." Both as story and as stage play, it has captured the hearts of the American public, and now knowledge of this masterpiece will be carried still further through the medium of a great photoplay.

John W. Noble, assisted by Fred Sittenham, directed the production, which was made by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for the Metro program. The distinguished supporting cast includes Robert Cummings, J. A. Furey, little Maury Steuart, a most accomplished child actor; Hattie Delaro, Robert Whittier, Hassan Mussalli, and others of equal note.

"Pidgin Island" will be the final Metro feature offering for the month, and incidentally for the year. This production has been made at the Metro-Yorke studios. Its stars are those favorite players, Harold Lockwood and May Allison. "Pidgin Island" is a screen version of Harold MacGrath's novel of the same name, arranged by Richard V. Spencer and Fred J. Balshofer. Mr. Balshofer directed this feature photodrama, assisted by Jay Hunt. In the parts of John Cranford and Diana Wynne, respectively, Harold Lockwood and May Allison have roles essentially suited to their talents, in the part of the secret service agent who is fighting the contraband opium trade, and Miss Allison is bewitching in the role of the girl of mystery, who is working at cross-purposes with Cranford. Some remarkable sea pictures will be shown in "Pidgin Island," and a great storm fraught with danger to the principal characters, supported by a capable cast including Lester Cuneo, Lillian Hayward, Doc Pomeroy Cannon, Fred Wilson, Elizah Zerr and Yukio Avyema.

Four comedies will be released in December, three of them starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the fourth being a Metro-Rolfe one-act play with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson in the stellar parts. "His Wife's Mother," a Metro-Drew comedy written by John W. Evans, Jr., is the first on the list, being released December 4. In this Mr. Drew is seen as a volunteer life guard at a seaside resort, and the complications are amusing in the extreme. "Duplicity" is the Metro-Drew release of December 11. This is from the pen of that master craftsman, Epes Winthrop Sargent, and is a model of the scenario art. Unfounded jealousy is the basic idea of this comedy, the joke being equally upon the suspecter and the suspected by the time the story is over. The December 18 comedy release is "He Wouldn't Wear Glasses," by Mark Swan. Max Figman is seen as Mr. Diky, of the glasses, and Miss Robertson as Medeline, the best girl, in this Metro-Rolfe comedy. The fourth one-act comedy of the month, completing the year's list, is "Her Perfect Husband," Jessie Saxton's playlet for the use of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

The Popular Plays and Players studios were chosen in which to produce the propaganda play of the Christmas Club. This one-act play, called "Three Christmases," was directed by Burton L. King. It employs the talents of such well-known players as William Courtleigh and Violet Heming. Its idea is to develop the seventh great art of "tough frugality to people of moderate means." "Three Christmases" was written by Wallace C. Clifton.

Mutual Releases

Margarita Fischer in "Miss Jackie of the Navy" Heads the List for the Week of December 11.

MISS MARGARITA FISCHER tops the schedule of feature releases from the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of December 11 in "Miss Jackie of the Navy," a five-part production from the studios of the Pollard Picture Plays Company, San Diego. "Miss Jackie of the Navy" was originally scheduled for release December 4, but in the arrangement of the Mutual's release charts it was found desirable to set the dates of the productions in the Fischer-Pollard series ahead two weeks.

The story of "Miss Jackie of the Navy" tells of a rather wild daughter of the noveau riche, who, in order to win the heart of the man she loves, dons sailor's clothes and ships on board a battleship with him. After many ludicrous and thrilling happenings, she saves her captain's life and when her identity is disclosed she finds that she has won his heart.

William C. Kolb and Max M. Dill, the ever funny comedians, will be released in a five-reel Mutual Star production entitled "Lonesome Town." The production was directed by Thomas N. Heffron, and the scenario written by Al Santell. This production was also used successfully as a stage production. This is a drama of a high order and will cause the theater-goers many a laugh. A splendid cast has been chosen to support the comedy duo in their latest screen success. Harvey Clark, Harry Edmonson, Charles F. Spencer, Eugenie Forde and May Cloy are amongst the well-known screen stars who are appearing in "Lonesome Town."

On Monday, December 11, there is a two-reel Mutual drama scheduled for release. The title of this drama has not been announced as yet.

"Tours Around the World," the one-reel Gaumont scenic, will be released on Tuesday, December 12. Some of the places of interest, which will be shown in this single reeler, are the famous River Nile, Carcassone and Lake Lucerne, in Italy.

On Wednesday, December 13, "See America First," one-reel Gaumont scenic, picturing the most beautiful spots in America, will show scenes of Mt. Baker, Washington. Kartoon Komics by Harry Palmer is also on this reel. The Mutual Weekly No. 102, which films all of the important happenings, both in this country and across the waters, is also scheduled for this date.

A two-reel drama and a one-reel comedy entitled "The Elopers" are scheduled for Thursday, December 14.

On Friday, December 15, the second of the Uncle Sam's Defenders entitled "Our Boys at the Border," will be shown. This reel shows the routine followed by the regular army boys on the Mexican border. It is full of excellent artillery and target practice, and the machine gun squads are shown in action. Bursting shrapnel and some very good views of high explosives breaking are also shown.

On Saturday, December 16, "Peter the Comic Poet," a one-reel comedy, and the third of the one-reel Star Comedies, "One Dollar, Please," featuring George Derr, will be released.

"Treed," a two-reel Vogue comedy featuring Rube Miller and the famous Vogue comedians, together with Reel Life, a one-reel magazine reel, will be shown on Sunday, December 17.

MURPHY IS STRONG FOR SHORT SUBJECTS.

General Manager Fred B. Murphy of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation states that in his opinion the solution of the present disturbed conditions in the motion picture world with its attendant high cost difficulty lies in the supplying and distribution of really good one, two and three-reel pictures.

"There is only one thing I can say, and say that most emphatically," said Mr. Murphy. "The moving picture business is a five and ten cent business first, last and always. In this belief I am thoroughly sincere. The great fortunes of the business were made when it was of the dime and nickel order, and it was then that the great developments were made.

"There is hardly a story that is now being told in the multiple reel feature that cannot be told with greater force and convincing power in one or two reels. Yet the tremendous cost of five, six or more reels is freely indulged in by the producers and foisted upon the public at great rental cost to the exhibitor and higher prices of admission charged to the public all for the boast of bigness. And the cost of features with its attendant search for effects and rapidly diminishing supply of scenario material is getting greater and greater. The tax of that extra cost is having its deleterious effect upon all branches of the business."

AN UNUSUAL COMPLIMENT.

Among many compliments paid Essanay's "The Prince of Graustark," released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, none stands out more prominent than the fact that the Regent Theater, Buffalo, N. Y., subscribed for a return date on this feature, beginning within ten days after the first showing. This, the manager declares, was done wholly at the request of patrons of the Regent Theater, anxious to see the picture a second time or who wanted their friends to view it. There is no record in Buffalo of any theater playing a return date on any picture within ten days of the first showing, so this establishes a new mark.

Paramount Releases

Frank McIntyre Makes His Screen Debut in "The Traveling Salesman" Week of December 18.

FRANK McINTYRE, one of the biggest stars of the past few years, will make his screen debut in the Famous Players production of "The Traveling Salesman" the week of December 18. During this same week, Paramount will also release the Pallas production of "The Right Direction," in which Vivian Martin is starred.

The production chosen for Mr McIntyre in which he makes his bow to the photoplay lovers of the country is "The Traveling Salesman," which was his biggest success on the stage, and which, with him in the title role, ran continuously for many years. It is a story of Christmas Day in a "hick" town, full of comedy, and surrounded by excellent dramatic situations. Mr McIntyre is a screaming success and his production is one of the funniest that has ever been presented by Paramount. In the star cast supporting Mr. McIntyre are Doris Kenyon and Harry Northrop.

"The Right Direction," in which Miss Martin is starred, is an original scenario by Julia Crawford, and tells the story of a beautiful girl, a waif from an orphanage of a big city, who starts out, being the sole arbiter of her own destiny and of her brother Billy Boy, to tramp to California. She has numerous unique adventures, which finally end very happily. Miss Martin is supported in this production by Colin Chase, Herbert Standing, Billy Mason and Baby Jack White.

Surrounding the Paramount Program, the exhibitors are offered four exceptionally clever single-reel features, included in which are the forty-fifth edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, the forty-sixth of the series of "Trips Around the World" personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his Paramount-fellow-travelers to Halifax; a delightfully funny Paramount-Bray cartoon from the pen of J. R. Bray, entitled "Old Heeza Liar at the Vaudeville Show," and the second of the Klever Komedies, in which Victor Moore, former Lasky star, is featured.

COLORED PORTRAITS OF STARS.

The Kline Poster Co., Inc., Philadelphia, Pa., reports that they are having great success with the colored portraits of the leading film stars which they publish on post cards, wall hangers and program covers. Jobbers have been secured in different sections of the country and they are doing big business on their goods.

These portraits are made up in seven colored offset lithography and are used by exhibitors in many different ways. The post cards size has a post card back for mailing purposes, announcing the appearance of the star in such a production on such a date, the wall card portraits are size 4x8, with a plain back and are used by putting the synopsis of the feature or the weekly program thereon and are given out by the theater to their patrons. The program cover is used in a similar manner and theaters throughout the country which have been using these goods report increased patronage and find that these colored portraits of the stars are taken home by their patrons and not thrown away like the ordinary heralds and other cards they have been using.

WERNICK JOINS ROGSON FILM CO.

The Rogson Film Corporation has made a valuable addition to its staff by securing Richard Wernick, who will represent the corporation through New York state. Wernick, who is of English origin, is a pioneer in the film business, though only 28 years of age. He has had many important affiliations. He recently resigned his position with the Fox Film Corporation as manager of its New Haven branch in Connecticut.

Mr. Wernick has left for a trip to visit the exhibitors of New York state to close contracts on Selznick Pictures, "Masque of Life," "Where Are My Children," and other large productions handled by the Rogson Film Company.

"THE PERILS OF OUR GIRL REPORTERS" (Mutual).

"The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" is the title of a new fifteen chapter series to be released on December 28 by the Mutual Film Corporation, each chapter constituting a complete story involving the adventurous and thrilling experiences of the girl reporter on the metropolitan daily.

The author of the stories is Edith Tupper Sessions, one of the best-known writers and authors in the United States, as well as one of the most active newspaper women. Miss Tupper's stories are based on her own experiences and those of her friends, some of them representing actual happenings in the lives of newspaper women whose names are familiar to the public.

The plays will feature Earle Metcalfe, a well-known star of the film; Zena Keefe, and Helen Greene, both famous actresses. The director is George Terwilliger and the producers are the Niagara Falls Film studios.

The chapters will be released one a week for fifteen weeks, beginning on December 28, and the Mutual Film Corporation has arranged a novel advertising campaign which will extend from one end of the country to the other.

One novel feature of the coming series, "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," is that the entire number of chapters has been completed in advance of the first release, and that synopses of all chapters will be available for use in advance of the release of Chapter 1.

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES IN NEW OFFICE.

Exclusive Features, Inc., are now in their new offices at 126 West 46th street. J. M. Goldstein, president, when asked why he moved into larger and more pretentious offices, remarked that owing to the large demand for Sarah Bernhardt film, "La Tosca," and the many bookings coming in for "War's Women" from up-state exhibitors, he was compelled to get closer to Grand Central Station, so as to be ready to make shipments without delay. The new offices are elaborately fixed, and special invitations were sent out to exhibitors to came up and review the Exclusive's new picture, which will be released within two weeks, entitled "Pamelia's Past," featuring Maude Fealy, Irving Cummings, Mignon Anderson, Harold Benham, Marc Andrews and others.

LANDAU TO BOOK LATEST STEGER PICTURE.

Arthur M. Landau is in charge of the booking of Julius Steger's new production, "The Libertine." Mr. Landau has had a number of years' experience, during which time he held responsible positions, first in the various departments of the World Film Corporation, and later with the Universal Film Company, and is well versed in both sides of the industry.

"TWISTED TRAILS" (Selig).

"Twisted Trails" is an unusual drama of the West, released in General Film Company's regular service on Monday, December 11. The Selig Company asserts that "Twisted Trails" is one of the most thrilling and meritorious film dramas that has been released in some time. An exceptional cast, including Tom Mix, Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer, Al W. Filson and Will Machin, is featured in this play. Tom Mix presents one of the most thrilling actions ever seen on the motion picture screen. In order to escape from his pursuers, in the story, astride a galloping horse he dashes across a narrow foot-log which spans a chasm. Should his horse have made one mis-step, both horse and rider would have been plunged on the rocks hundreds of feet below.

Not only is "Twisted Trails" a feature drama in every detail, but there is some unusual photography contained therein, notably a rain-storm, accompanied by vivid flashes of lightning, etc. The story is from the pen of Edwin Ray Coffin, and is replete with exciting situations and dramatic climaxes.

Mutual Star Comedies

New Series of Laughmakers Featuring Leading Broadway Players.

Co-incident with the announcement of the broadening of the scope of the producing activities of the Mutual Film Corporation and the signing of a number of very prominent stars, comes the statement that the Mutual will release a series of seven star comedies, featuring some of Broadway's most popular players, beginning Saturday, December 2.

Among the artists who will appear in these comedy pictures are Tom Wise, the jovial creator of many leading roles in popular American plays; Ruth Shepley, the attractive player in "It Pays to Advertise," and various other Broadway successes; Martha Hedman, Lois Meredith, Alexander Clark and George Dorr. "Grouchy," a character comedy written by Mark Swan, and featuring Tom Wise, will mark the first of the Mutual Star Comedy series, coming December 2.

In support of Mr. Wise will appear Miss Margarette Chaffee, S. K. Walker, who appeared with Robert Hillard in "A Fool There Was," in "The Woman" and "The Governor's Lady," Erville Anderson, and the two children, Jacquline Morahange and Hoyt Roswell Johnson.

Ruth Shepley's contribution to the series, "Admirers Three," will constitute the second Mutual Star Comedy. It will appear December 11.

"One Dollar, Please," featuring George Derr, will follow "Admirers Three," and "Ever Lassie Has a Laddie," starring Alice Dovoy; "Grimsey, the Bell Hop," featuring Alexander Clark; "The Girl Who Can Cook," featuring Lois Meredith, and "The Honeymooners," starring George Derr, will follow

HUFF AND PICKFORD IN "GREAT EXPECTATIONS"

Jack Pickford is very busy learning how to sweep floors, and Louise Huff is rapidly developing into a first-class heart-breaker in preparation for their respective roles in the Famous Players adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations," in which they are to co-star on the Paramount Program on January 8.

Miss Huff is to be Estella, the daughter of the escaped convict who has been reared by an insane woman for the sole purpose of breaking the heart of every man she meets, in revenge for the jilting which Miss Havisham received when a young girl. Jack Pickford is the illustrious Pip whose earliest memory is that of his brother-in-law's blacksmith shop in which he was boy-of-all-work except in those furious moments when his sister seized him by the ear and made him scrub the floor or perform some other menial task in payment for his board and lodging.

"Great Expectations" is being produced under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, who made the phenomenally successful adaptation of Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen," in which Miss Huff and Jack Pickford won new laurels.

DE LUXE LASKY WELL EQUIPPED.

The DeLuxe Film-Lasky Corporation, of San Francisco, has received word from its representative, Hiram Abrams, to prepare for the handling of a number of big special productions that he has lined up for the company. This organization is in a position to supply the exhibitors in its territory absolutely the best productions, and it seems as if the exhibitor is aware of this fact, considering the amount of applications already on hand for service. Mark M. Leichter, general manager of the company, is familiar with every detail of the field that it covers, is known widely for his business reputation, and it is his aim that everybody must receive a square deal.

Selig's General Film Releases

Program Pictures Announced Up to the First of the Year—Subject of Interest.

WILLIAM N. SELIG has announced the Selig productions to be released in General Film service up to the first of the new year. On Monday, December 18, "The Five Franc Piece" will be released in regular service. This production features charming Edith Johnson in a winsome role. There is plenty of excitement for the plot has to do with the attempted theft of an important military secret. Miss Johnson is supported by an exceptional cast of players.

On Saturday, December 23, the Selig Company will release "The Man He Might Have Been," in General Film Service. How a man reached the parting of the ways and learns that the straight and narrow way is the best way of all. Robyn Adair and others carry out a stirring drama.

"The Golden Thought," one of J. A. Lacy's most thrilling dramas, is the Selig feature released in regular service of General Film Company on Monday, December 25. Included in the cast is Tom Mix, Eugenie Besserer and the famous child actress, Baby Lillian Wade.

"The Right Hand Path" is the title of the Selig drama released on Saturday, December 30. It teems with sensational climaxes and with strong heart interest.

The Selig Tribune, the great news film, is released every Monday and Thursday. It gets all the news and shows it first.

INTERNATIONAL DID ARMY AND NAVY GAME.

By a special arrangement with the governing powers, the Hearst International News Pictorial was given exclusive permission to make moving pictures of the Army and Navy football game at the Polo Grounds, Saturday, Nov. 25. Several photographers were assigned to the game and secured in detail each play as it was made. The pictures will be the most complete and comprehensive ever made of a football game.

BARA'S FIRST "VAMPIRE" ROLE IN MONTHS.

Theda Bara's portrayal of Elsie Drummond in "The Vixen," which William Fox announces for December 4, is her first "vampire" role in many months. The last of this type came in "The Eternal Sapho," released in May. During the intervening time the screen artiste has starred in "East Lynne," "Under Two Flags," "Her Double Life," and "Romeo and Juliet."

"THE HONOR OF MARY BLAKE" (Bluebird).

This feature, to be released Dec. 18, has previously been announced under the caption of "The Greatest of These," but the title has now been permanently fixed as "The Honor of Mary Blake." It is the first attraction in which Edwin Stevens directed Violet Mersereau, and the locations for out-of-door scenes, which largely abound, were secured in the Catskill Mountains.

Miss Mersereau will thus make her third Bluebird appearance, having previously been directed by Rex Ingram, in "The Great Problem" and "Broken Fetters," her last stellar feature having been released early in July. John C. Brownell wrote the story and scenario of "The Honor of Mary Blake" and assisted Mr. Stevens in its direction. Details of stage life are always interesting to the public and Mr. Brownell has approached the topic from rather a new angle.

Tina Marshall, Caroline Harris, James O'Neill and Sidney Mason will be principals in Miss Mersereau's support. "The Honor of Mary Blake" will take place, in Bluebird releases, of "A Christmas Carol," the Dickens classic which will be released December 25, one week later than first announced, under the title, "The Right to Be Happy."

GERTRUDE M'COY STAR IN "THE LASH OF DESTINY."

ture, and instilled a number of clever situations into what is, in addition, a remarkably strong story.

In the role of Myra Fielding, a young country school teacher who comes to the city seeking a broader aspect of life, Miss McCoy is given a part that enables her to display to wonderful advantage the remarkable versatility that has made her a favorite with the photoplay public for so many years.

There are a number of unusual situations in the picture, by means of which the author is enabled to sustain the interest in his story to the utmost degree. Some of the scenes were taken in the Hotel Ansonia, in New York City, and the railroad scenes were actually taken on board the "Twentieth Century Limited," the fastest train in the world.

The cast that supports Miss McCoy in "The Lash of Destiny" is one of unusual strength. Duncan McRae, one of the most popular of leading men, plays the principal male part in the production. Mabel Juline Scott, who recently toured the country in support of Fiske O'Hara, in "Kilkenny," and Helen Greene, who has done much good work in productions of other companies, are also in the picture.

"20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA" AT BROADWAY THEATER.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., has completed arrangements for the taking over of the Broadway theater, at Broadway and 41st street, New York, on Dec. 10, in order to present "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Seat," a film version of Jules Verne's wonderfully imaginative story of love and adventure beneath the depths of the sea. Verne's book, first published some fifty years ago, has been one of the most widely read of any piece of fiction ever printed, and his famous character, Captain Nemo, and all others of his fertile imagination employed in his story, has been faithfully reproduced in the Universal photoplay production. Devices invented by the Williamson Brothers, of Norfolk, Va., for undersea exploration and photography were utilized in the making of the picture, which is of eight reels, and some two thousand people were employed in the characters portrayed.

LOEW GETS WILCOX SERIES.

The current week witnesses the [illegible] the Loew circuit of theater of the productions made from the poems of Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Walter Scheuer of the Dispatch Film Exchange, 145 West 45th street, is booking these for New York, and announces that the entire series of six is ready for exhibitors.

The Wilcox pictures consist of six two-reel subjects, the stories of which are taken from and are presented under the following titles of Mrs. Wilcox's poems: "Meg's Curse," "Lais When Young," "A Married Coquette," "Angel or Demon," "Lord, Speak Again" and "[illegible]"

BOOKING CHRISTIE COMEDIES.

A. W. Blankmeyer, a well-known exchange man of Detroit, Mich., operator of the Tri-State Film Exchange, Inc., has signed for Al Christie's comedies for the states of Ohio and Kentucky. The Tri-State exchange which only recently contracted for the product of Art Dramas, takes on the Christie comedies as a distinctive feature and will play them up well.

Mr. Blankmeyer is pleased with the showing that these [illegible] Regent and Washington, and is confident that they will be well received in Ohio and Kentucky. His exchanges are located in the Sincere Building, in Celeveland, and in the Strand Theater Building, in Cincinnati.

Close on the heels of this comes the announcement that Charles Christie, business manager of the company, has sold western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Liberty Film Renting Company of Pittsburgh. This sale completely closes up the exchange territory in the United States, and consequently Christie comedies are within the reach of every exhibitor.

DRISCOLL BUYS "ROBINSON CRUSOE" FOR CANADA.

One of Canada's youngest and foremost stock producers and vaudeville managers, George Driscoll, of Montreal, has taken up moving picture exploitation and signalizes his entry into the field by contracting with Warner Brothers for the sole Canadian rights to Henry W. Savage's production of "Robinson Crusoe." Mr. Driscoll will shortly announce several more productions which he undertakes to either re-sell or exploit personally. He has established 801 Godfrey Building as his New York office, but his headquarters are in Montreal at His Majesty's theater.

"MUSTY SUFFER" IN DEMAND.

George Kleine's comedy series "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," consisting of twenty one-reel subjects featuring Harry Watson, Jr., of "Zeigfeld Follies" fame, have become so popular that a number of the Kleine branch offices have had to order additional prints of the films in order to supply the demand in their territories. Some of the offices are now using three times the number of copies originally allotted to them.

BERNARD SCHWARTZ SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE.

The DeLuxe Film-Lasky Corporation, of San Francisco, has made its first appointment to its organization. Bernard Schwartz has been secured to act as special representative. Immediately after his appointment he was aboard the train and on his way to Los Angeles to make some important arrangements for the company, details of which will be announced shortly.

"THE RINK," CHAPLIN'S NEXT MUTUAL COMEDY.

Charlie Chaplin, the world's greatest comedian, will be seen Dec. 11 in another Mutual-Chaplin laugh provoker. This comedy will be called "The Rink." It will mark his eighth production for Mutual release. The fun with Charlie and his [illegible] comedy feet on skates [illegible] are everywhere at once, and with the famous mustache, the small hat, the cane right after them.

Scene from "The Rink" (Mutual).

In this play Charlie is a waiter in a high-class restaurant and what he doesn't succeed in finding in the way of trouble isn't worth finding. He doesn't like the way the head waiter wears his whiskers, has no idea of the deference due from a newly-graduated bus boy to "the head," makes eyes at the girls, and generally speaking, plays the deuce with precedent.

Various flirtations gay parties at the rink and at the restaurant, all sorts of excitement follow to fill the entire piece, with Charlie, the waiter, trying to pass off to Edna as the scion of a wealthy family. It ends in a chase, with everyone by Edna—including the flirtatious father—the eight-foot Eric Campbell, after Charlie. It will be released Dec. 11.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE EVIL EYE."

Mexican superstition, ignorance, and their attendant dangers form the basis of "The Evil Eye," in which Blanche Sweet is being starred by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. It is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program January 4. Though the major portion of the action of the story takes place in Mexico, the tale, which was written by Hector Turnbull, has nothing to do with the present crisis in international affairs, and should not be classed with the flood of so-called war films.

Scene from "The Evil Eye" (Lasky).

The title of the picture refers to the little electric lamp which is worn by Miss Sweet when she examines the throats of the Mexicans. An epidemic of diphtheria has broken out among the employees of a Mexican mine and a young girl physician has been sent across the border to stop it. As part of her equipment she has an electric flash light which straps to the top of her head and enables her to make a detailed examination of the throats of the patients. Of course, the ignorant peons are terrified by the light, and, as the majority of those on whom she turns the light are suffering from the disease, it is whispered about that the light is really the evil eye. The spreading of the epidemic, which is a severe one, is attributed by the superstitious Mexicans as being due to the mysterious light, and out of that fact there develops a powerful dramatic situation with swift action.

Tom Forman, Parke Jones, Webster Campbell, Henry Martin Best, Walter Long and William Dale are among those who appear in support of Miss Sweet in this production, which was directed by George Melford.

"ISLAND OF DESIRE" (Fox.)

Colorful, gripping, filled with intense interest and exciting adventure and romance in a big way, William Fox's new George Walsh photoplay, "The Island of Desire," is destined to be one of the motion picture sensations of the year. It will be released on December 18.

No expense has been spared by the producer in making this feature a spectacle of unprecedented proportions. The story is one which will engross from its very outset.

"The Island of Desire" will be interpreted by a stellar cast of photoplayers, headed by George Walsh and Margaret Gibson. The result is a film worthy of unstinted praise.

FRANK POWELL STARTS WORK.

Frank Powell has started work on the first of the productions to be made by the new Frank Powell Producing Corporation and released through the Mutual. This is a picturization of "The Greater Woman," a play by Algernon Boyesen, which has been acted extensively on the Continent, and in which Marjorie Rambeau will make her screen debut. Supporting Miss Rambeau in "The Greater Woman" are Aubrey Beattie, long and favorably known as an actor in Broadway successes; Mary Steele, Hassan Mussali, and Josephine Park, who has just completed an engagement covering a year and a half under the direction of David Belasco in "The Boomerang" at the Belasco Theater.

"MISS JACKIE OF THE NAVY" POSTPONED.

"Miss Jackie of the Navy," the Mutual Star Production featuring Miss Margarita Fischer, announced for release Nov. 30, has been postponed to the week of Dec. 11. The release dates of the entire Margarita Fischer series have been set back two weeks from the dates already announced. "Miss Jackie of the Navy" will be followed by "The Butterfly Girl," "The Devil's Assistant," "A Knight at Tarquizzl" and "Birds of Passage."

COL. HEEZA LIAR AT THE VAUDEVILLE SHOW.

J. R. Bray has contributed another screamingly funny animated cartoon with his famous character, Colonel Heeza Liar, in which he takes him to a vaudeville show, and in this picture, which will be released by Paramount Pictures Corporation on December 21, under the title of "Col. Heeza Liar at the Vaudeville Show," he takes the little man through more comedy antics than he has ever been forced to do.

One day while the Colonel was walking down Riverside Drive he unexpectedly finds a ticket to one of the leading vaudeville shows. As he has not seen a show since his wife dragged him to the altar, he runs home and jumps into a soup and fish, grabs a bite to eat, and dashes out for the house of Mirth. He calls a taxicab and has a wild ride to the temple of comedy. Right here is where the fun begins.

As soon as he is seated in his box seat, a pretty young broiler brings a tray full of grape juice to the Colonel. The Colonel inhales some of the liquid fire, and is ready to show his approval or disapproval of the vaudeville acts. The first act proves to be Mdme. Mud, an operatic screecher, tall and thin with a mouth like a subway entrance. She bows and begins to warble.

The Colonel jumps up and pushes out her name card, turns his back to the stage and takes another drink. The young son in the opposite box with his father takes out an over-ripe cataloupe from his basket of fruit, and taking careful aim, throws it down the singer's throat.

There are a few more acts that do not meet with the Colonel's approval, so he pushes their name cards out as fast as they appear. He is very disappointed with the show, and goes to the box office and demands his money back. The ticket seller gives it to him in the neck, and he drops to the floor. The negro attendant takes the Colonel by his feet and drags him from the theater, as the Colonel calls out "Home, James."

WINTERMEIER TO DIRECT BILLY WEST.

Fritz Wintermeier has been engaged by the Unicorn Film Service Corporation to direct the Billy West comedies. These comedies, which are in two reels each, have been declared to be among the greatest novelties of their kind. In connection with the Billy West series Ike Schlank, president of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, announces that an extensive advertising campaign will be carried out. This will include newspaper advertising and several novelty "stunts."

"THE BURNING BAND" (Essanay).

Essanay will release the first of its dramatic series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" on December 16. The title of this production will be "The Burning Band." The burning band is the wedding ring. This subject deals with a wife's hidden past. Others of these productions will be released on each succeeding Saturday. The General Film Service will handle the films. The screen time will be approximately 33 minutes. Problems of matrimony and their menace to the home will be the general theme of this series. It is for that reason all the units have been grouped under the same general title, "Is Marriage Sacred?". But each photoplay will bear an individual title, and be built upon a story complete in itself. President George K. Spoor of Essanay has formed a special stock company to appear in this series. Its personnel includes Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth, Lillian Drew, Edward Arnold and Thomas Commerford. E. H. Calvert will direct them. Mr. Spoor does not want this series confused with a serial. Each of these subjects are complete 33 minute photoplays.

Red Feather Leads Universal's Week

"The Morals of Hilda," Featuring Lois Wilson, Is Scheduled for December 11.

TOPPING the fine program of releases of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the week of December 11 is the Red Feather five act drama, "The Morals of Hilda," released December 11, in which Lois Wilson is the star. This powerful drama of the conflict of human emotions was written by H. C. Warnack, scenarioized by A. W. Coleway and produced by Lloyd B. Carleton.

"The Morals of Hilda" is an exceptionally strong screen play which teaches a vigorous moral without sermonizing, and the story has wide appeal and is particularly suited for women. The settings and photography are up to the high standard demanded in Red Feather productions.

On December 11 also will appear the one-act Nestor comedy, "Two Small Town Romeos," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean in the leading roles. This is a distinctly new type of picture farce comedy from the pen of Virginia Kirtley and produced under the direction of L. W. Chaudet.

A strong offering scheduled for release on Tuesday is the Gold Seal three-act melodrama, "The Two Roads," with Douglas Monroe and Edna Flugrath as the featured players. The story is by Ben Landeck and the production was directed by Harold Shaw. Under the Victor brand the one-act comedy "Billy the Bandit," with Billy Mason as chief funmaker, will appear on the same date.

On Wednesday will appear the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly with its live news topics and pictured version of all the important events of the past week. The Laemmle one-act drama, "Green Eyes," with George Chesboro, and the uproarious L-KO two-act comedy, "Murdered By Mistake," are releases of the same date. "Murdered By Mistake" is one of the funniest screen comedies. In the cast are Dan Russell, Lucille Hotton, Katherine Griffith, William Irving and Bert Roach.

The Victor comedy in one act, "It Didn't Work Out Right," written and produced by Robert F. Hill and played by Stanley Walpole, Helen Slosson, Joseph Granby and Helen Marten, will be released on Thursday. The same day finds the two-reel drama, "The Lawyer's Secret," under the Rex brand, with Jack Nelson and Molly Malone, and the Powers educational reel "In the Land of King Cotton," scheduled for release.

"Scratched," a two-reel melodrama in which Irene Hunt and Earl Page are featured, will be released Friday. "I Am Your Husband," a one-act Nestor comedy, written and produced by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, with Al McKinnon and Peggy Coudray, and the Big U drama, "The Wrong Heart," featuring Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport, are other releases for this date.

"The Taint of Fear," a two-act modern military drama under the Bison brand, will appear on Saturday. This is one of the best short features of the year. It was written and produced by Allen Holubar, who plays the leading role, supported by Lydia Titus, Joseph Girard, Charles Oelze and George Pearce. Other releases of this date are the Joker comedy, "Their Dark Secret," with Gale Henry and William Franey, and the Laemmle one-act drama, "Mother's Guiding Hand," featuring Jane Fearnley.

On Sunday the Powers' split-reel, "Sammie Johnsin and the Wonderful Lamp," a comedy cartoon, and "Majestic Ceylon," as seen by Dr. Dorsey, an educational travel picture, will be released. "Love Or An Empire," a two-act Rex drama, with William Shay and Leah Baird, is another Sunday release.

Sharing honors with the Red Feather feature will appear the eighteenth episode of the Universal Special serial, "Liberty."

"THE PHANTOM BUCCANEER" (Essanay).

Exhibitors whose patrons like a brisk, romantic type of play will be interested in the announcement by Essanay that "The Phantom Buccaneer" is nearly completed and will be offered through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Gold mines, revenge and love affairs form an irresistible combination in this feature, which was adapted from the thrilling novel "Another Man's Shoes," by Victor Bridges.

Richard C. Travers is an excellent hero for this type of play, and Essanay offers it as one of the best plays in which this star has ever appeared. Gertrude Glover appears in the feminine lead. J. Charles Haydon directed the piece.

"MANGER TO CROSS" BOOKED DIRECT.

Announcement has been made that the Kalem five-reel production "From the Manger to the Cross" may be booked by exhibitors direct from the Twenty-third street offices of that company. The constant stream of bookings during the past month has proven that the Biblical production is an "all-year-round" attraction, but with the coming of the holiday season the requests for bookings from all parts of the country has taken a strong jump. "From the Manger to the Cross" takes on added value as a holiday attraction from the fact that it was staged in the exact authentic locations in the Holy Land.

The burden of proof rests on the side withholding evidence so easy to produce. Button, button, who's got the stock?

PATHE HAS FINE LIST OF HOLIDAY ATTRACTIONS.

Now is the time for exhibitors to figure carefully on the extra features which they are going to show during the holiday season. For their convenience, Pathe has drawn up a list of subjects which have proven valuable. On all of them, Pathe Exchanges have an extensive supply of advertising matter, furnished at the regular rate.

Scheduled for release on December 3, "The Life of Our Saviour," in seven reels, Pathe colored, is now ready for exhibitors. This is the great Passion Play in picture, as big as the Passion Plays of old, which has proven so popular among exhibitors that the prints were all worn out and new ones have been made. In addition to the new prints, a new supply of advertising matter is on hand and "The Life of Our Saviour" is Pathe's leader for the holidays.

Other holiday offerings are as follows:

"Esther," 3 reels, Biblical drama.

"Joseph's Trials in Egypt," 3 reels, hand-colored drama.

"A Rose Among the Briars, 3 reels, hand-colored drama, featuring Jackie Saunders.

"Adventures of a Mapcap," 4 reels, hand-colored drama, featuring Jackie Saunders.

"Queen Margaret," 5 reels, hand-colored historical drama.

"Pro Patria," 6 reels, hand-colored historical drama.

"Hazel Kirke," 5 reels, heart interest drama, featuring Pearl White and Bruce McRae.

"Shrine of Happiness," 5 reels, hand-colored drama, featuring Jackie Saunders and Paul Gilmore.

"Beloved Vagabond," 6 reels, hand-colored drama, featuring Edwin Arden and Bliss Milford.

"Little Mary Sunshine," 5 reels, hand-colored drama, featuring Baby Marie Osborne and Henry King.

"The Shadows of Her Past," 5 reels, drama, featuring Lina Cavaliera and Lucien Muratore.

"The Shine Girl," 5 reels, heart interest drama, featuring Gladys Hulette.

"Prudence, the Pirate," 5 reels, comedy drama, featuring Gladys Hulette.

"Shadows and Sunshine," 5 reels, comedy drama, featuring Baby Marie Osborne.

"The Light That Failed," 5 reels, Kipling drama, featuring Robert Edeson.

"ROBINSON CRUSOE" (Savage).

When Henry W. Savage took his moving picture company down to Florida to film Robinson Crusoe he had no intention of disorganizing labor in the vicinity of his outdoor studio, but such was the case. The company had scarcely started to work when the ambition was born in the breast of every colored man for miles around to become a moving picture cannibal.

Director George Marion and his assistants were besieged day and night by screen aspirants, while many a family went dinnerless to bed because the cook had decided that there was more excitement in roasting a man on Robinson Crusoe's lonely island there there was in frying a chicken in an ordinarly civilized stove. Youngsters deserted their school books for the screen and many colored hearts dropped inches when their owners were told they were not the type.

This five-part photoplay, the states rights for which may now be obtained through Warner Brothers, 729 Seventh avenue, bids fair to be the family picture de luxe. Parents may take their children without any fear of the introduction of scenes that could in any way be detrimental to the young mind, while children may take their parents without the least anxiety that they will be bored.

Gaumonts for Week of December 17

Fifth Episode of "The Vampires," "The Eyes That Hold" and Four Single Reels.

THE interest in "The Vampires" is holding up in a manner to delight American reviewers. The general opinion seems to be echoed in the words of one screen expert: "The professional manner in which 'The Vampires' is being produced, the unusual types presented, and the vein of comedy intermingled with the thrilling kind of melodrama which the serial represents, by Normandin, former vampire, and by later vocation an undertaker, places it as one of the best serials on the market." Hence unusual interest attaches to the release of the fifth episode, "The Eyes That Hold," December 21. All the favorites are seen in this chapter.

The first single reel of the week is "Reel Life" No. 33, December 17. Its subjects are "French Sweetmeats," "An Argosy From the North," "The Fleecy Staple," cotton; and "Design Your Own Gown."

"Tours Around the World" No. 7 is released December 19. It takes spectators to the interior of "Morocco," shows "The Castle of Chantilly" and "The Blue Mediterranean" at the Bay of St. Tropez.

"See America First" No. 67, December 20, shows "Picturesque Virginia." The number is a particularly happy one, since it shows the homes of two presidents, the abode of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, Charlotte, Va., and the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson at Staunton. There are also pictures of Afton, Va., and the Blue Ridge Mountains. On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, "Curfew Shall Not Ring," animated by Harry Palmer.

The fourth single-reel of the week is the Mutual Weekly. As it is not made up until the day before it is issued, no statement of its program is possible.

K-E-S-E ADOPTS STRIKING TRADE-MARK.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay make the announcement that they have decided to use a facsimile of a modern key as their trade-mark and the service will be known as the K-E-S-E (Keys) Service. The many valid reasons advanced for utilizing this particular form of trade-mark emphasize the value they place upon it. Already they are proving to exhibitors that the K-E-S-E Service unlocks the doors of opportunity leading to success. They also call attention that it "fits" the ultra-progressive program and they do not forget to state that K-E-S-E Service is bulwarked by the four oldest, best equipped picture makers in the industry.

As a distributing concern K-E-S-E is one of the best. It is made up of twenty-four branches, each supervised by experts, known and recognized as among the best in the field. George Kleine spent many years perfecting this organization and it stands to-day a monument to unflagging industry, unswerving fidelity to its patrons and an index to all that implies quality in motion pictures. Mr. Kleine is credited with some of the huge successes in motion pictures that have attracted world-wide attention.

Success repeated is the best evidence of merit and the K-E-S-E can refer to a long record of victory as a forecast of what it will accomplish in the future. The new trade ensign will take its place amongst the leaders immediately.

COMPLETE CHANGE OF "REEL LIFE" RELEASES.

A complete re-arrangement of "Reel Life" subjects brings an almost entirely different set of subjects to the screen December 10 in "Reel Life" No. 32. First in interest perhaps is "Where Benedictine Is Made." The pictures show the Abbey at Fecamp, France, where the monks have been making this distinctive cordial since 1510. The various processes are pictured, as well as an array of 600 bottles containing imitations that have been confiscated from time to time. The process of manufacture is a secret.

"Radium, the Most Costly Element," is another interesting subject on this reel. The price of radium has not followed the cost of high living, having decreased 50 per cent in recent years. It is now only worth $37,000 an ounce. The American method of manufacture from carnotite is shown.

"Working for Santa Claus" shows how America has prepared to handle the situation caused by the failure of toys owing to the war. There are pictures of toy factories both East and West, giving a good idea of the places which are exporting toys valued at two million dollars this year. There are also appealing pictures of children playing with toys.

"How to Dance the Two Two," a fashionable dance of the winter, is demonstrated by G. Hepburn Wilson. This is the third and last of the popular dances shown on the screen, with the steps slowly illustrated, for the benefit of those who wish to have the latest terpsichorean evolutions from Broadway.

"THE FOOLISH VIRGIN" (Selznick).

With the first of Miss Clara Kimball Young's Selznick-Picture productions, "The Common Law," playingf throughout the United States and Canada to capacity houses, the beautiful and popular screen star's second photo-dramatic achievement under her new management is now ready for early release. This is an adaptation of the powerful novel by Thomas Dixon, "The Foolish Virgin."

In "The Foolish Virgin" Miss Young will be seen in one of the most sympathetic roles of her screen career. The story is replete with action and unusually well adapted to the requirements of the motion camera.

As in "The Common Law," Miss Young's superlative beauty and dramatic gifts have been aided by the work of the director, Albert Capellani, and the splendid cast of players. Conway Tearle, who made so many thousands of new admirers by his work in "The Common Law," also plays the leading male role in the second production, and Paul Capellani, who has been seen in so many of Miss Young's best pictures, gives another strong and vivid impersonation. Others in the cast include Catherine Proctor, Sheridan Tansey, the remarkable boy actor; William Welch, Marie Lines, Agnes Mapes, Edward Elkas and little Jacqueline Morhange.

"THE HAPPINESS OF THREE WOMEN" (Morosco).

Though each has been a star in his and her own right for some time, House Peters and Myrtle Stedman make their first appearance as co-stars in the Morosco photoplay, "The Happiness of Three Women," making this an exceptionally strong release on the Paramount Program. The story, which was written by Albert Payson Terhune, the well-known writer, is an unusually powerful one, involving unwarranted jealousy and the robbery of a bank.

In support of the co-stars there appear L. W. Steers, William Hutchinson, Lucille Ward, Daisy Robinson and Milton Brown. The picture is being directed by William D. Taylor. In the production, practically the entire Morosco studio will have to be given over to one gigantic setting which shows a long sweeping vista through a reception room, drawing room and conservatory of a fashionable mansion.

Especial attention has been given to some of the lighting effects, particularly those which are used in the scenes depicting the robbery of a bank. One of the exceptional incidents is the discovery of the criminal at work by the sweep of a passing motor car's headlights as it turns the corner opposite the bank.

The appearance of House Peters and Myrtle Stedman as co-stars in this picture marks the artistic union of two players who have long been in the front rank among those who might be called motion picture stars, in contrast to the stage celebrities who have more recently deserted the stage for the screen. Both of these popular players have a great personal following, and it is not encroaching on the bounds of possibility to predict for them a sweeping success in their first double debut.

"THE TRUANT SOUL" (Essanay).

Henry B. Walthall's superfeature, "The Truant Soul," will be released by Essanay on Christmas Day. It is a special, the screen time being approximately two hours. The film will be handled by the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Arrangements have been made for exhibtitors' displays of the picture at all of the branch offices of this service throughout the United States and Canada.

The story is from the pen of Victor Rousseau, the noted novelist. It affords an unlimited field for that type of marvelous emotional acting which has made Henry B. Walthall the great screen star that he is.

Mary Charleston appears in support of Mr. Walthall in the leading feminine role. Miss Charleson is a well known star, having made a nation-wide reputation in her past picture-dramas.

STRONG CAST IN "WHOSO FINDETH A WIFE."

An unusually strong cast has been selected to support Jean Sothern, the star of the U. S. Amusement Corporation's contribution to the Art Dramas program, a picturization of "Whoso Findeth a Wife," by J. Wesley Putnam. Leo Delaney will be entrusted with the lead opposite Miss Sothern. This role is said to be one of great intensity, and requires an extraordinary delineation of a character that is at once strong and weak. Frank Crane, who is directing the production, choose Mr. Delaney for the part as the one man who is by physical appearance and temperament the exact prototype of the character he is to portray. Others are George Henry Trader, Ida Brooks and W. J. O'Neil.

"THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN" RIGHTS SOLD.

Through a contract entered into with W. H. Bell, general manager of the Midwest Photoplay Corporation, of Kansas City, Mo., the rights to the Frohman Amusement Corporation's five-part release, "The Conquest of Canaan," for the territory of Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and Missouri, were closed. Mr. Bell also closed a contract whereby they were granted the distributing rights for the same territory of the Clara Kimball Young productions.

"HUMANIZING MR. WINSBY" (Unity).

The second of the special features being produced by the Peerless Motion Picture Company at Redlands, Cal., and released through Unity, will be presented to exhibitors through the Unity exchanges on December 18, under the title of "Humanizing Mr. Winsby."

The [illegible] from which the five reels have been made was written by Pete E. Kane and appeared some months ago in the Saturday Evening Post. It is a modern adaptation of the principals in the cast a wonderful opportunity for attractive delineation of character parts.

George Nash essays the role of Mr. Winsby and is ably supported by Julius Frankenberg as the "Pronto Kid," Arthur Millett as Chesterfield, the fashionable old clerk and bookkeeper for Mr. Winsby, and Alice Neice, who plays delightfully the role of "Patsy," the only person in the old town over whom Mr. Winsby is unable to rule.

"HELL HATH NO FURY" (Anchor).

Work on the first production of the Anchor Film Corporation, "Hell Hath No Fury," is now under way under the direction of Charles Lee Bartlett. Last week Mr. Bartlett left New York for Los Angeles where he is located at the Signal studio. He took with him Grace Davison, who is to star in the picture, and Lawrence Hayes personal representative of James A. Stiles, general manager of the Anchor Films. Other than the star the cast for the picture has not yet been decided upon, although a leading man of considerable reputation will be selected as Miss Davison's opposite. The picture will be offered to the trade through the states right market as a six-reel feature.

LOEW GETS "MASQUE OF LIFE."

Marcus Loew has made his entry into the film sales business by purchasing the state rights of the big production, "The Masque of Life," which recently was shown at the Park theater at one dollar prices. It is called "the picture of a thousand and one thrills," featuring Rita Jolivet and Pete Montabello, the monkey actor.

Loew bought it primarily to be shown in his Greater New York theaters and the other houses controlled by him, and will also dispose of rights of exhibition over the entire state of New York. Details of the management of the picture will be handled by Lewis T. Rogers, who is now receiving orders and requests for use of the picture by exhibitors from all over the state.

"THE SPY AND THE SUBMARINE" (Unity).

Under the title of "The Spy and the Submarine," Unity will release the Thirteenth Episode of "The Yellow Menace" this week. In this part of the picture we see some astonishingly accurate scenes of a submarine in action, which gives the picture a most up-to-date setting. Those who view this episode will be able to see a great deal about the internal operations of a submarine and will have a wonderful opportunity to see for themselves just why these instruments of war are so mysteriously effective..

CHRISTIE'S COMEDIES IN NEW YORK STATE.

Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, producers of one and two-reel comedies, during his stay in the East has interested William H. Kemble and H. Clark Mooney, prominent film men of Brooklyn, in the output of the company with the result that they have formed the K. & M. Film Exchange for the purpose of marketing these pictures in New York State. The present office of the exchange is located at 587 Fulton street, Brooklyn, but Messrs. Kemble and Clark are already planning to open exchanges and offices in the other districts of the state.

BUILDING A JUNGLE FOR WALSH PHOTOPLAY.

Visitors to Balboa Beach, California, who wander down the sandy strand may imagine themselves in the heart of densest Africa. Under the direction of Otis Turner, the place has been transformed into a jungle wilderness for some scenes in "The Island of Desire," starring George Walsh, which William Fox will release on December 18.

With the aid of hundreds of palm trees, two or three carloads of monkeys, scores of parrots and parrakeets, and tons of foliage and underbrush, Balboa Beach has been "made up" to represent a South Sea Island.

EDISON COMPLETES "THE MASTER PASSION."

The final scenes of Edison's new five-part feature, "The Master Passion," have been completed, and the subject will be released soon through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. The exact date of its coming has not yet been announced. It is said to be an exceptionally powerful story of a beautiful woman's rise and fall, her struggle between the lure of ambition and mother-love, ending with her regeneration through the latter. Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness are featured.

Why allow suspicion to exist? Fear of the consequences?

"THE AWAKENING OF HELENA RICHIE" (Metro).

Metro Pictures Corporation announces Dec. 18 as the release date of the screen version of Margaret Deland's great novel, "The Awakening of Helena Richie," with the celebrated star, Ethel Barrymore, in the role of Helena. Metro considers this picture one of its most important releases for the year, since [illegible] one of the best productions with a story that is known and loved all over the English-speaking world. The picturization has been made by arrangement with Messrs. Harper & Bros., publishers of the book.

50,000 FEET OF FILM TAKEN FOR FIVE-REELER.

No greater care in screening a production has ever been exercised than was taken by Director Richard Stanton, who recently completed a subject for William Fox featuring Gretchen Hartman and Alan Hale. Although the drama will be five reels—5,000 feet in length—Director Stanton had almost 50,000 feet of film snapped for the picture, which is now in the cutting room.

Gladys Brockwell's next feature will be in charge of Mr. Stanton.

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

Boston City Club on Censorship

Hears Talk by Cranston Brenton of National Board of Review—800 Club Members and Guests Present—Work of Review Board and What Legal Censorship Means—Boston's Better Censorship.

By J. J. Phillips, Boston Herald and Traveler, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, Mass.—Eight hundred members of the Boston City Club and guests applauded heartily Monday, Nov. 27 when Cranston Brenton of New York, chiarman of the National Board of Review, while addressing them in the City Club forum drew a comparison between Billy Sunday and Chaplin and declared, "I thank God for that kind of Charlie Chaplin preaching. I thank God there is no censorship on the type of religion Billy Sunday is expounding."

The salient point brought forward in his remarks is that there is nothing so harmful to the motion picture industry and productive of so many absurdities as legalized pre-publicity censorship of films. Legalized censorship of the pictures, he asserted, is no more right than censorship of the pulpit or the press and is in nature nothing more or less than a blow against the right of the freedom of speech.

The National Board of Review, he stated, is absolutely opposed to legalized censorship. It is impossible, he said, for politically appointed men to perform such highly important work justly, for, in the first place, they are paid to find fault, and if they don't they cannot keep their positions. Public opinion, he declared, should constitute the only censorship.

Referring to the social side of the motion pictures problem, Mr. Brenton declared the industry is driving the saloons out of business in thousands of localities for instead of spending their nickels and dimes in barrooms, the men go to the "movies" and take their wives and children with them

In three or four states there is legal censorship, and the speaker related more than a dozen incidents tending to show the absurdity of this form of censorship. Nearly every one of them aroused the gathering to laughter, the portion of the films expurgated being of such inconsequential natures so far as the general public is affected.

Boston, he stated, has a desirable form of censorship. Each week letters from the national board are received here. They contain the names of the films that have been accepted as proper, those that have been adjudged improper and those on which no judgment has been formed. These communications guide the city officers in determining what shall and what shall not be exhibited.

The National Board is a volunteer organization and its members receive no salary. Chairman Brenton gives fifty per cent of his time to the work of the board and even pays his own train fares. The board is quite unbiased, he said, and any film passed by its committee of final appeal is fit to be shown anywhere in the country.

The board experiences its most difficulty in passing on comedy films. Women's clubs are continually clamoring for censorship of this type of films, he said, and he admitted that the usual run of comedy is too much of the slapstick variety, but the public demands it.

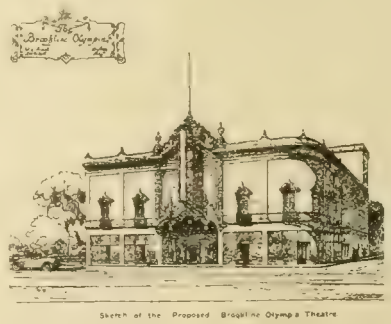
There are many persons, Mr. Brenton said, who demand that the Charlie Chaplin films be censored, but they are most unreasonable. "Chaplin is every inch an artist," said he, "and has no intention of putting across any rough stuff. He told me that he may have done some objectionable things before the camera when he first went into the picture business, but that was when he came over fresh from the London music halls. He is under contract now to pay for every film censored. I thank God for a man who can make the masses laugh as Charlie Chaplin makes them laugh."

In conclusion, Mr. Brenton said that except for legalized censorship there is only one other force that threatens the life of the industry, and that is the possibility of showing unworthy pictures, but public opinion will have weight enough to prevent this, he thought.

George W. Coleman presided. After his address Mr. Brenton answered questions put to him by the club members.

Brookline to Vote on Proposed Theater.

Brookline, Mass.—Plans have been prepared for the theater proposed for Brookline, Mass.; the richest town in the world, which if the selectmen grant a license, will be the first theater in the exclusive district, and will be constructed at Harvard street and Webster Place. The Board of Trade will take a referendum vote on this proposition this week to determine whether it will support the petitioners in their plea for a license.



Sketch of the Proposed Brookline Olympia Theatre

Nathan H. Gordon, of Brookline, is president of the Olympia Theater, Inc., which is planning this project. Max Shoolman is treasurer of the $7,000,000 concern, which is incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts and which has houses in Boston, Lynn, Gloucester, Chelsea, New Haven, New Bedford, Worcester and Rochester. The Boston theaters are known as the Scollay Square, Olympia and Gordon's Olympia. It is proposed to call the house in "the worlds richest town" the Brookline Olympia.

Maritime Provinces Letter

By Frederick F. Sully, 68 Lansdowne Ave., St. John, N. B.

A. B. Farmer Believes in the Jitney.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Amid the high cost of living and the increase in price of almost every commodity, there is one man in the moving picture industry who has held out for five-cent admissions. This is A. B. Farmer, proprietor and manager of the Star theater. While practically every photoplay house in St. John charges fifteen cents for its best seats, Mr. Farmer has paddled along quietly, complacently, catering to a family patronage that spells prosperity at five cents a head. The Star, with its seating capacity of over 500 runs three five-reel shows each evening.

"Battle of Somme" Gets Long Run.

St. John, N. B.—"The Battle of the Somme," which had a four-days' run at the Imperial theater, drew large audiences, especially on the first and last days. Admission prices were raised for the engagement, and the free list was entirely suspended. The picture has been booked for a full week at the Orpheus theater, Halifax, and is one of few features to be given such a long run. Manager Walter H. Golding of the Imperial is inaugurating a method of advertising de luxe that is decidedly artistic, and likewise a factor in drawing a refined class of patronage to the theater.

S. M. Bartling to Open a Show.

Liverpool, N. S.—The municipal opera house, leased for several years by James McGarrigle and run as a moving picture theater, was recently put up for tender, and went to S. M. Bartling on a five-year lease. Mr. Bartling, who is breaking into the photoplay industry for the first time, has for a business associate, E. R. Munhall, formerly mayor of Liverpool for eleven years. They will inaugurate a new arrangement of pictures, and have already made contracts for some of the Pathe service.

At Wolfville Houses.

Wolfville, N. S.—A. A. Ayer, proprietor of the Imperial theater, is now running his house four nights a week catering to the college boys and a large amount of transient trade. W. M. Black, who has one of the best equipped small houses in the province with his own generating plant and motor driven machines is doing a big business with a seating capacity of but 560.

Fine New House for Kentville.

Kentville, N. S.—With a population of but 2,400, Kentville is to be as well supplied with high-class moving picture theaters as any town its size in the dominion. Clark and Hiltz, who are now running the Nickelette are building a new theater, that is to have a seating capacity of 900 people, and R. W. Seliz, proprietor of the Arena, a summer theater, has purchased land and will start work in May on a house of almost equal size.

St. John, N. B.—R. G. March, manager of the local branch of the Specialty Film, has returned from a ten days' trip through the provinces, and reports that business is very good.

St. John, N. B., Manager Carl H. Crawford of Fox has just completed a tour through the provinces and announces that the new Fox [illegible] features are to be used by the Casino theater, Halifax; the [illegible] theater, the Gem, St. John; the Broadway theater, St. George; and the [illegible] Theater.

IN NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

B. L. Shafer Buys Control in Empire Theater.

Newark, N. J.—The Empire moving picture theater on George street, which has been under the joint management of Charles G. Tefft and B. L. Shafer, will hereafter be conducted and owned entirely by Mr. Shafer. The [illegible] Mr. Tefft's interest to his partner were signed.

Mr. Shafer has recently returned from Los Angeles, where he plans to spend considerable money in improvements, including a new organ.

Unions and Fox Newark Theaters

Several Unions Connected With the Theatrical Trade Have Begun a Campaign Against the Carlton and the Terminal Theaters—The Former Is Now a Union House and Unions Want the Latter Made One—Both Owned by Fox.

By Jacob J. Kaufman, Newark [illegible]

NEWARK, N. J. [illegible] against Fox's Carlton and Terminal theaters in this city by the Musical Stage Employees, Firemen's, Bill Posters' and Moving Picture Operators' unions has created much interest and evoked considerable comment here. Naturally as is true in all cases there are two sides to the question. The representatives of labor claim an antagonistic attitude on the part of William Fox, while Mr. Fox's representatives declare that the trouble is due to unfair demands on the part of the unions.

John Zanft, personal representative of Mr. Fox, said that the original intention of the management of the Terminal theater was to employ union labor exclusively. He was informed, however, that the unions would not settle with the house until the Carlton had been unionized. Mr. Zanft even agreed to this, he said, but balked when the unions insisted that he employ a stage hand and a bill poster.

Louis P. DeWolfe, manager of the Carlton theater, also reiterated the statements of Mr. Zanft in regard to the utter needlessness of the stage crew. The Carlton being a picture house, required only the raising of a curtain in the morning, and the lowering of the same at night. For this exceedingly difficult work Mr. De Wolfe declares, the sum of $28 weekly must be expended if the house wishes to become unionized. In regard to hiring a union organist, Mr. DeWolf showed the Newark correspondent of the Moving Picture World a letter from [illegible] torney to the local Musicians' union dated May, '14, which declared that his client, Mr. DeWolfe, was willing to employ a union organist if the union would furnish one. Up to the time of writing Mr. De Wolfe has received no reply, he states.

Pending the settlement of the difficulty, posters are being distributed throughout the city announcing that the two houses under consideration are non-union. It is understood a conference between the Theatrical Alliance, of which James M. Prendergast, business manager of the Musicians' union, is president, and representatives of the theater company will be held at which meeting the difficulties will be cleared away and a settlement of the dispute effected.

A Change at Newark's Strand.

Newark, N. J.—Frank G. Hall, one of the foremost picture exhibitors in the East, has with Arthur M. Werner and Harry T. Hall, purchased the controlling interest in the Strand theater in Market street near Broad street, Newark, N. J. The new owners will take possession immediately and on December 11 will change the policy of the house from one of pictures exclusively to a combination program of films and high class vaudeville.

Frank G. Hall has been identified with the chain of U. S. vaudeville and picture houses operating in Newark, East Orange, Elizabeth, Plainfield, Hoboken, Passaic and Union Hill. Together with Mr. Werner, Mr. Hall also controls the New Jersey State rights for "Civilization," and "War's Women." He is president of the U. S. Vaudeville Managers' Association.

Mr. Hall believes Newark theater-goers desire high class vaudeville and artistic pictures on the same program. There will be an augmented orchestra. Renovations to the house are now under way.

Moss Going Well.

Newark, N. J.—Manager R. S. Clark of the B. S. Moss Photoplay Corporation, with offices in the Proctor's Palace theater building, reports increased business during the past month. Moss pictures are being introduced in the biggest theaters in the city. Mr. Clark is also booking the Mutt and Jeff pictures in this territory.

"Semi" Living On Interest.

Newark, N. J.—Semi Pfirsichbaum, better known as the "Kaiser," has severed all connections with the N. Y. & N. J. Film Delivery Service, of which he was assistant manager. Sammy bought a flivver and may be seen enjoying the pure air of Newark any day. Gee, it's great to be a millionaire! He [illegible]

Regal Films Incorporates in Toronto

World Film Company's Canadian Representative Capitalizes at $375,000—Who the Incorporators Are.

TORONTO, Ont.—The firm of Regal Films, Limited, has been organized and incorporated under the Federal laws of Canada with a capital stock of $375,000, to represent the World Film Corporation in Canada. The new company has been authorized by the Government to do business throughout the Dominion, and it is understood that the Canadian rights to Pearl Made World Pictures are now in the new concern. Headquarters for the company have been opened in the Lindsay building, Richmond street East, Toronto, and branches are to be opened in the principal centers of Canada, when the proper time comes.

The incorporators of the Regel are G. H. Sedgewick, James Aitchison, Duncan McArthur, A. T. Struthers and F. H. Hurlburt, all of the city of Toronto. The company has been empowered to conduct a film exchange business and to undertake the production, purchase or sale of films as well.

No announcement has been made as to the date of release for the first Brady-Made features in Canada, but exhibitors have been asked to write to the Toronto address with reference to bookings.

With the incorporation of Regel Films, Limited, Toronto has fourteen film exchanges, eleven of which are, in reality, the Canadian headquarters for film distributing companies. In addition to the [illegible] exchanges there are a number of subsidiary corporations here which have been established to facilitate the distribution of special productions or makes.

New Universal Films in Canada.

Toronto, Ont.—Chas. Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal, has secured a new print of Annette Kellermann's "Neptune's Daughter," to replace the film which has seen three years' service in all parts of Canada.

As a result of an advertising campaign for "The Purple Mask," the new Universal serial, there are now more than one thousand people in Toronto alone who have been asking exhibitors to book the series. Publicity man Bach's stunt has been to organize a club of moving picture fans, issue buttons or souvenirs to each, and secure a pledge from each person to ask one or more theater managers to book the serial as soon as possible.

Exhibitors who witnessed a trade screening of "The Bugler of Algiers" are enthusiastic over its prospects because of the timely nature of its story. Manager Hague actually has several local exhibitors outbidding each other for the first run.

The Strand theater, Toronto, secured the first release of "Idle Wives," the Universal feature. Two weeks of big newspaper, billboard and lobby advertising preceded the screening of the picture.

Responsibility for Wiring of Booths in Ontario

Toronto, Ont., Operators' Union Gets a Ruling That Hydro-Electric Commission Inspectors Have No Right in Booths.

TORONTO, Ont.—C. A. McMahon, head of Local 173 of the operators' union, has cleared the situation in Ontario circles with regard to the inspection of operating booths by obtaining a ruling from Chief Inspector R. C. Newman, at the Parliament buildings, Toronto, to the effect that the wiring and electrical equipment of a booth does not come under the supervision of inspectors representing the Hydro-Electric Commission. McMahon obtained the information that inspectors of the Hydro-Electric Commission had ordered alterations in booth equipment, and that various operators had complied with these instructions.

It has been found that the interior of the operating cabinet comes under the sole supervision of the Provincial Inspection Department, and over-zealous Hydro-Electric officials have no jurisdiction in the matter. Mr. McMahon has so notified the members of Local 173.

Canadian Producer Calls for Scenarios.

Toronto, Ont.—The organization and establishment of the Canadian National Features, Limited, with headquarters in Toronto, has reached the stage in its development when a call has been issued for scenarios. According to an announcement by the company, five-reel dramatic or historical features and one-reel comedies or topical subjects are wanted. The studio of the company at Trenton, Ontario, will be completed February 1st, it is declared. This concern has an authorized capital of $500,000. The president is Jerry Shea. George Brownridge, formerly a salesman for a Toronto exchange, has been made general manager of the company.

Garden Theater Changes Hands.

Toronto, Ont.—The Garden theater, College street and Spadina avenue, one of the best known moving picture theaters in Toronto, has changed hands. The control of the theater has passed to Theatres and Playhouses, Limited, which has a string of picture houses here. Mr. M. Thaler, manager of the College playhouse, is now in charge of the Garden.

Federation Convention Notes

Baltimore Gathering of the American Federation of Labor Takes Several Important Steps of Interest to the Picture Trade—Against Legal Censorship of Films—Operators and the Electricians—Other Items.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, Md.—While the American Federation of Labor was in convention in Baltimore, recently, a good deal of legislation concerning all the branches of the moving picture industry took place. Particularly with regard to the opposing of censorship was one of the strongest resolutions introduced, reported upon and turned over to several committees.

Form New Theatrical Department.

It was decided at the convention by the A. F. of L., that a new theatrical department should be formed, which would have as its members moving picture operators, stage hands, screen actors, and the White Rats organization, it is understood, will be included in this department. It has been rumored about that many other actors' organizations have simply been waiting to see whether the charter of the White Rats would be revoked, to decide whether they should come in. As it has now been decided that the White Rats will have jurisdiction over all actors it is thought probable that all the other organizations will now become affiliated.

Operators Remain with I. A. T. S. E.

Another important course of action which took place was the endeavoring of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers to gain jurisdiction over the moving picture operators. Their reason for claiming that the operators should be affiliated with them was inspired by the idea that as the operators handled electricity they should belong to that body. It was decided by the convention, however, that their proper affiliation was just as it stands with the I. A. T. S. E.

Against Government Censorship.

In regard to the opposing of moving picture censorship, a resolution was introduced by Delegate Andrew A. Hill, of Little Rock, Ark., representing the Central Trades and Labor Council, which read as follows:

WHEREAS, The motion picture business of this country has grown to such an extent that today it not only serves as an agency for recreation, but has become a public agency for education, for dissemination of current information, comparable in many respects to the daily press and the public forum. They have a determining influence in directing and educating the public thought and opinion; and

WHEREAS, Motion pictures supplement the spoken and written word by a powerful appeal to the mind through the eye, the event or the thought to be conveyed is thereby visualized; and

WHEREAS, Motion pictures must be protected by the same guarantees of freedom that have been bestowed upon oral utterance and upon the press. It is fundamental for the protection of free institutions that freedom of speeach, and discussion should be assured, for only when there exists most complete freedom to express thought or to criticise is there established a guarantee that political and other representative agents shall not violate the rights and authority that they do not rightfully possess; and

WHEREAS, Freedom of speech is inseparable from free institutions and the genius of free people. This freedom must be protected against abuse by holding the individual responsible for his utterances when the same are based on fact. Legal restriction in advance of presentation limits research, investigation and inquiry for broader and deeper truths; and

WHEREAS, Here of late, efforts have been made to establish State and Federal boards of censorship to review motion pictures, it being the purpose of those who propose such censorship to present to the public only such things as they may be permitted legally to see. Thereby putting very dangerous authority in the hands of a few, for it enables the board of review to restrict and determine the very fountain heads of information; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled in the city of Baltimore, register its unrelenting opposition to any scheme or system which denies freedom of speech, press, or the showing of motion pictures, when they are based on facts; and be it further

RESOLVED, That this convention go on record as being in opposition to government censorship of expresion of opinion in the form, and that we endorse again the declaration that freedom of expression of opinion, freedom of speech, and the freedom of the press, and motion pictures are the palladium of free institution; and be it further

RESOLVED, That the executive board investigate and report to the next convention of the American Federation of Labor some practical plan by which we can get labor's side of and all questions before the general public through the motion pictures of th country.

A Favorable Report.

The committee reported favorably upon this resolution to the convention and it was decided that the A. F. of L. and all affiliated bodies will endeavor to have all censorship laws repealed and that the legislative committee work upon the matter. This resolution has been referred to all the bodies of the organization located where censorship is now in force and after these local bodies have come to a decision as to what action they will take, they will report to the executive council.

The following is part of the report of the executive council:

In the recent past efforts have been made to secure both state and federal legislation providing for government censorship of moving pictures. These proposals have had the support of a number of well-meaning persons who really desire to protect the children of the country and to promote a sense of high morality. However, there is involved in the proposal something more than is generally appreciated. The number, the variety and the uses of motion pictures have been so greatly increased that they now constitute an important means of expression. * * * It has been the theory of the few that people can be "made to be good by law." This same theory underlies the efforts of those who propose government censorsihp. By establishing either state or federal boards to review motion pictures, it is proposed to present to the public only such things as they may be permitted legally to see. This is putting very dangerous authority in the hands of a few for it enables the board of review to restrict and determine the very fountainheads of information.

There have been worked out a voluntary system by which objectionable and vicious information can be eliminated from motion pictures. Since this is based upon no legislative enactment and exercises no governmental prerogative their decisions amount only to an expression of opinion, which carries weight in accord with the honesty, the discretion and the wisdom of the members of the board.

This matter is brought to the attention of the delegates to this convention with the recommendation that the convention take official action in opposition to government censorship of expression of opinion in any form, and that we endorse again the declaration that freedom of expression of opinion, freedom of speech, freedom of the press are the palladium of free institutions.

McDermitt Again Plays Host.

Baltimore, Md.—At Loew's Hippodrome Theater, on the afternoon of Friday, November 24, fifty children in care of the director of the Hebrew Benevolent Society were the guests of George A. McDermitt, the manager, for the performance. On Saturday, as a feature for the kiddies who attended the show in the afternoon, all of them were invited back of the stage to shake the paws of Lapinski's dogs.

Private View of "Masque of Life."

Baltimore, Md.—Manager L. A. DeHoff, of the New Theater, was a very busy man on Friday night, November 24, calling up exhibitors all over this city and extending invitations to attend the private screening which he had arranged for Saturday morning at 10.30 A. M. at the Garden Theater. Charles E. Whitehurst is president of both the New and Garden Theater companies and Mr. DeHoff has entire charge of booking the pictures for the latter theater.

Dunbar Theater Opens.

Baltimore, Md.—The Dunbar Theater, which is located at 619 North Central avenue, is a new colored theater which has just been completed. It was thrown open to the public on Wednesday, November 22. This new enterprise is owned by J. Diggs and H. S. Trimble and the booking and managing of the house is done by the former. The seating capacity is 400.

W. O. Baker Pilots Peabody.

Baltimore, Md.—The Peabody Theater, 11 East North avenue, which is owned by S. M. Buckman, is now being carried along under the management of W. O. Baker. Mr. Baker recently ran a theater in Union Bridge, Md., in partnership with J. Buckey and it is understood that he is still interested in that enterprise. He is well thought of by those who have met him.

A. B. Price to Manage Rialto.

Baltimore, Md.—When it was announced that A. B. Price had resigned his position as manager of the Mt. Royal theater at 617 W. North avenue, we were inclined to be skeptical, but after Mr. Price explained that it was because he is to take over the Rialto as manager, we understood the matter perfectly. He assumed the management of the latter theater on December 4. Myer Fox, who has been acting as managing director of the Rialto has been forced, by pressure of other work to give his entire attention to it. He leaves the theater in good hands for Mr. Price has demonstrated by his exceptional handling of the affairs at the Mt. Royal, just what he can accomplish. Besides this, he has had wide experience as other theaters in this city have been prosperously managed by him. He knows the moving picture theater and business from A to Z and is always looking after the comfort and convenience of his patrons. The Week in Philadelphia Exhibitor E. Warren Smith Makes Friends of Students at the University of Pennsylvania—Gives Them Full Swing One Night in the Week on Condition That They Use Restraint at Other Performances—Notes of Interest.

by P. V. [illegible] 141 North Seventh St., Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—E. Warren Smith, the new owner of the A. B. C. theater, 33rd and Chestnut streets, is evidently no believer in George Ade's advice, "Don't never have nothing to do with no students." The house is situated near the University of Pennsylvania. The former owner, Spencer Harvey, was much troubled by the antics of light-hearted undergraduates, who came in numbers and signalized their presence by cat-calls, "funny" remarks, assorted noises and all around "devilishness." The result was that while the student patronage was good other and quieter residents of the neighborhood were deterred from visiting the house.

Mr. Smith has changed all this by inaugurating a high class policy, and raising the price of admission from 10 to 15 cents. For the benefit of visiting students the following slide, which is taken in entire good part by those affected, is occasionally displayed:

"Penn Night every Thursday after 9 P. M. The house is yours. Come, boys, and bring your voices. College songs and others. Kid the pictures and do everything but put your feet on the ceiling. If you don't like the show, don't kick—it's no use.

"This is done in appreciation of the fact that you keep quiet during the other nights."

Apparently Mr. Smith's knowledge of student psychology is accurate, since rowdyism is now almost unknown in the house.

Ridge Avenue Theater Beautified.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Ridge Avenue Theater, under the management of Jay Emanuel, has undergone improvements costing $6,000. New chairs, carpets, draperies, curtains and screen have been installed by W. Kerry, formerly of Lubins and now in charge of N. Snellenberg's contracting department.

Printing and Developing at Lubin Plant.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Lubin Studios at 21st and Indiana avenue have recently been reopened and are now printing and developing film on a small scale under the management of H. Roosevelt.

Candy Turkeys for the Kiddies.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Candy turkeys as souvenirs of a special matinee performance given by H. M. S. Kendrick of the Fairmount Theater, 26th street and Girard avenue, sent the kiddies of the neighborhood home rejoicing on Thanksgiving morning. From 11 A. M. to 1 P. M. the distribution was continued and several hundred children were more than ever convinced that the Fairmount management was their special friend.

Calehuff Supply Co. in New Quarters.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Calehuff Supply Company are now located in their new quarters at 1233 Vine street, where a large assortment of accessories and supplies are on display. A very handsome floral horseshoe of roses was presented to Mr. Calehuff by Local No. 307 and I. A. T. S. E. on the occasion as a token of esteem and good wishes.

New Strand to Seat 1,850.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The new Strand Theater being constructed for Herbert Effinger and Dr. Walter Steumpfig will seat 1,850 persons. The seats will be upholstered in leather of fine quality. There will also be a loge supplied with comfortable wicker lounging chairs. An imposing marble staircase will lead to the balcony. The building is on a lot 140 by 100 feet and will posses 24 exits and one of the largest stages, for a photoplay house, in the country. Two motor driven machines of the largest and most modern type are being installed and will insure flickerless pictures.

Film Men Entertained by F. A. Giannini.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Members of local filmdom assembled last Tuesday (Nov. 28) at La Tosca Hotel, to do honor to a former star of the operatic stage, F. A. Giannini, now proprietor of Verdi Hall, the leading theater of Philadelphia's large Italian colony. Mr. Giannini, since his retirement from the operatic and concert stages, has gone into politics and also has become a boniface as the owner of La Tosca Hotel. He also has the Verdi Hall and other amusement enterprises. The dinner was given by E. Avella, manager of Verdi Hall, and the guests included many men prominent in filmdom.

The affair was thoroughly enjoyable and after an elaborate menu, including the full complement of wines, had been discussed, there was much informal speech-making. Charles Segal officiated as toastmaster and called upon the following gentlemen: J. A. Koerpel, local manager of the World Film; H. M. Osborne, manager for Pathe; Allen May, of the World forces; Oscar Libros, Peter Glenn, W. Schwalbe, Dave Starkman of the Electric Theater Supply Co.; W. Heenan of Vitagraph; F. Sulzbach, C. V. Martin and J. A. Werst of Pathe, Sam Rosen and J. Fishman of Universal, and F. V. Armato.

Fifteen Cents Asked by Imperial.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Imperial Theater at 60th and Walnut streets, under the management of A. Bloomgarden, is the latest house to raise its prices from 10 to 15 cents. The change affects the evening performances only. Two and three-day runs are the rule at the house. Alice Brady in "Bought and Paid For" played the first half of last week to capacity business.

Fine Feely Theater Opens.

Hazleton, Pa.—The Feely Theater opened its doors for the first time on November 23 and was besieged by huge crowds the entire evening. The Feely seats 1,800 people comfortably and contains the latest in modern equipment and appointments. The house is strictly fireproof in construction and a quaint old English motive has inspired the architectural plan of interior and exterior. This theater is under the management of Mose Goodman, a showman of experience, who will show Pathe News Weeklies and Scenics in conjunction with a vaudeville program. George Maillard, representing the Pathe Exchange of Wilkes Barre, had the honor of making the speech of dedication.

Wilkes Barre, Pa. Joel A. Levy, manager of the Bluebird exchange here, reports that 65 theaters in his territory have contracted for Bluebird pictures.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. E. Reddish of the Baltimore, Md., Pathe Exchange, paid H. M. Osborne of the local Pathe forces a flying visit last week. He reports big business in Baltimore.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. M. Osborne, manager of the local Pathe exchange created considerable comment by taking almost a full page in three local newspapers to announce the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Pearl of the Army," starring the ever popular Pearl White.

E. R. Beveridge at Walbrook Helm.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Mr. E. R. Beveridge, formerly connected with the management of the Lubin Theater, 21 West North Avenue, and of whom Mr. Durkin speaks very highly, has recently taken hold of affairs at the Walbrook Theater, at North Avenue and Fremont street. He had been active in a managerial capacity. From what we have seen of Mr. Beveridge, he should prove a hit in this capacity for he is always courteous to the patrons of his theater.

Vitagraph Premiere Brilliant.

Baltimore, Md.—Well attended and well appointed was the private screening which was given by the Greater Vitagraph Company for the Baltimore exhibitors of their latest serial production entitled "The Secret Kingdom." Through the courtesy of Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater, 416 East Baltimore street, over 400 invitations were sent out and they were responded to in force, for about 500 people were present at the gathering. As a special feature for the occasion, Arline Pretty and Charles Richman, who star in the picture came down from New York especially to attend the screening. Mr. Wonders spoke to the audience stating that he had a rare treat in store for them in having the two players present. Mr. Wonders, as he always is, was extremely on the alert for the comfort and convenience of the people present and assisted the affair in every way that he could. A special organ recital was arranged for the affair.

IN PHILADELPHIA.

Last Week's Films in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—First run photoplays at prominent local theaters during the week of Nov. 27 included Dustin Farnum in "His Great Ambition," which played for one day at the Stanley, and Pauline Frederick in "Nanette of the Wilds," which was shown the other five days. Miss Frederick, as usual, scored a hit, and maintained her claim to popularity at every performance. Of the supplementary pictures shown at the house, "Along the Somme," battle scenes which showed first line trenches "somewhere in France," together with close ups of various styles of artillery in action, received much praise. At the Arcadia, E. T. Sothern in "An Enemy to the King," was enthusiastically received all week. At the Regent, Ethel Clayton in "Broken Chains" and Harold Lockwood in "Big Tremaine" had successful presentation. At the Palace Viola Dana in "The Cossack Whip" went over big and at the Belmont Thomas Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation" piled up box office receipts all week in lively fashion.

Sunday Shows at Becker's.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The following card, freely distributed through South Philadelphia, indicates that at least one local exhibitor believes there is a "liberal Sunday" element in the Quaker City.

Sacred Concert
Pauline Frederick in "Sold."
Becker's Moving Picture Theater
Snyder Avenue below 18th Street
Sunday Evening, Nov 26, 1916, 8 P. M.

Throwaways Frowned On.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The practice of certain small theater managers of distributing advertising matter from door to door is hereafter to be frowned on by the highway department, who have served notice on several that the custom must cease. Sam Rosen of the Grays Ferry Palace, one of those affected, complains that the ruling works a hardship on the smaller picture theaters which cannot well afford an expensive mailing list.

Capitol City Children's Shows

January 5 Set for First Free Children's Matinee—Eleven of City's Theaters Will Join in the Movement—Some of the Shows Will Not Be Free—Women's Clubs to Supervise Shows.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The first of the free motion picture matinees by means of which the motion picture committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs is to demonstrate to Washington exhibitors that their contention that there is a real need for children's matinees is founded upon fact, is scheduled to be given at eleven of the city's houses on January 5. This, and a similar performance on the following Friday afternoon are to be given with admission to the house free to the children.

The plans of the committee call for the giving of four of these children's matinees, at the last two of which the regular admission fee is to be charged by the exhibitors. Each of the performances will be given under the supervision of the women of the committee. The city has been divided into eleven districts with one theatre in each and members have been assigned to the work in each district handling such matters as advertising of shows, enlisting the co-operation of other volunteers in the campaign, etc. The ushers are to be boy and girl scouts.

Prior to the giving of these matinees a meeting of the full committee is to be held to complete arrangements. Francis Holley, head of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, has been invited to appear before the committee at an early date to speak on the subject of clean pictures.

C. A. Watson a World Film Man.

Washington, D. C.—A new recruit in the local film industry is C. A. Watson, a former automobile salesman, who has joined the World Film Company's forces, succeeding E. R. Haas, who is now with Sidney B. Lust, marketing the Louis J. Selznick productions. If Mr. Watson is as successful with films as he has been with autos, it is said the company will have little or no cause to complain of the new acquisition. He will assist Manager H. C. Wales in the nearby territory.

Norman Luchs to Manage the Raphael.

Washington, D. C.—Norman Luchs has assumed the management of the Raphael theater at Ninth and O streets, Northwest, for a Mr. Gordon, who recently secured control of the house from Henry Goldman. The Raphael has a seating capacity of 500 and is one of the most attractive theaters in the Midcity section. It is said that Mr. Gordon was formerly interested in a large motion picture theater in Scotland.

Frank H. Brown Joins Fox Sales Forces

Washington, D. C.—Motion picture exhibitors in this territory are welcoming Frank A. Brown back into the fold, for that genial gentleman has joined the sales forces of the Fox Film Co., succeeding to the position made vacant by the resignation of Thomas Hildebrand, who recently assumed the management of the Strand theater in Baltimore. It is the saying here that they do not come any better than Mr. Brown. He has lately been handling a state rights proposition, but prior to engaging in that line he was with the Metro Film Service of Washington, covering the southern section for that concern. He is very well known throughout North Carolina in particular, for the Tar Heel State formed a particular part of his old stamping ground.

Picture Theaters Glad of Coal Contracts

Washington, D. C.—Despite the fact that at least one of the Government departments has been hard hit by the shortage of coal which in this instance necessitated the closing down of the elevators, and small establishments of all kinds have had stove troubles, the motion picture exhibitors of this section have been comparatively free of such worry. It seems that most of the motion picture theater men place contracts early in the season covering the period of one year. This has freed them from the annoyance of not being able to get deliveries, and the increase in price has only been a few cents to the ton. It seems that some of the contracts contain a clause that the exhibitor shall pay an advance when there is an advance to the dealer because of labor increases.

Frank B. Spurrier Goes to Baltimore.

Washington, D. C.—Frank B. Spurrier, who had been manager of the local V-L-S-E exchange since that organization invaded this territory, has recently accepted a position with Pathe, Inc., and has been placed in charge of the Baltimore branch of the Washington office. The exhibitors and exchange managers of Washington are glad that Mr. Spurrier is going to stay in this section for he is one of the best liked of them all. He has always been active in association matters and has been a "good fellow" generally.

At the Vitagraph V-L-S-E office the new manager is George F. Lenehan, who broke into the exchange game with William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, which marketed Paramount pictures. He was assistant manager and in charge of the publicity department. Upon severing his connection with this concern he joined Pathe, Inc., as a traveling representative out of the New York office and later handled Kentucky for this same company, traveling out of the Cincinnati office. When he left Pathe about six weeks ago, it was to go with the Vitagraph, joining the sales force. He was welcomed into the fold at the last meeting of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association.

What the War Tax Brought In.

Washington, D. C.—The proprietors of motion picture theaters, museums and concert halls, during the period from July 1 to September 30, 1916, were assessed with taxes amounting to $278,309.48 under the so-called war emergency revenue law. During the same period in 1915 this tax amounted to $273,828.46 or $4,481.02 less than this year. Aside from the bankers the theater people were the largest contributors under this special taxation.

Miss Eleanor Blevins a Motorist.

Washington, D. C.—Miss Eleanor Blevins, star of "When My Ship Comes In," made a splendid try for the road record between Philadelphia and Washington, driving the famous Eye See Bee, the automobile built by I. C. Barber, the local racer. Miss Blevins was on the program to race in person at the Bennings race track Thanksgiving Day. The auto races each year are of great interest to the auto fans in the District of Columbia. Motion pictures of this race will be taken by the camera man of the International Film service. He will follow in a Lozier racer, which will try to keep within photographic distance of the Eye See Bee car. This film is already booked to be shown at several of the leading houses.

Fugitive Dyes Wanted for Slides.

Washington, D. C.—Makers of lantern slides seem anxious to obtain "fugitive" dyes in red, blue, and yellow, according to letters being received by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce. Manufacturers as a rule strive to make their dyes permanent, consequently it is hard to find such as are of the reverse. Manufacturers interested in this problem, in order to take it up most advantageously, must consider the details concerning the different dyestuffs in modern use. The Department of Commerce explains that most of these are "fugitive" in varying senses. There are nearly a dozen different tests to ascertain the degree of fastness of dyestuffs. They may be "fugitive" to light, but very fast to soap. They may be "fugitive" in the presence of coloring and yet very fast when exposed to the white light.

Theater Changes in Virginia.

Bristol, Va.—Charles Goebel has recently opened the new Isis theater in this place. The house is one of the prettiest in this section and will be devoted to the exhibition of high class photoplays with good music as a feature.

Norfolk, Va.—Jake Wells has recently taken over the American and Granby theaters, formerly operated by the Karanicholas interests. It is reported that George Karanicholas contemplates entering the state rights business at an early date.

Charlottesville, Va.—The Virginia theater, owned by T. J. Yancy, has been reopened after having been extensively remodeled. G. Geras is the manager.

Atlanta News Letter

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Georgia.

J. R. MacEachron, Jr., Heads Colonial Film.

J. R. MacEACHRON, Jr., who for a number of years was connected with the Frohman interest, as also Klaw & Erlanger, as treasurer at the Atlanta theater, has been made manager of the Colonial Film Corporation, with headquarters in the Hirsch building; Mr. MacEachron, Jr., was for a while connected with the World's Film as traveling representative and made a splendid record for fair dealing among Southern exhibitors. Mr. MacEachron's territory covers seven Southern states.

"Nation" Rebooked Breaks Records.

Atlanta, Ga.—"The Birth of a Nation," being shown at Atlanta theater on a return engagement, is breaking all records.

An Important Picture Center Here.

Atlanta, Ga.—Atlanta and Georgia lead in southern moving picture activities, according to figures compiled by Joe Marentette, manager of the southern division of the World Film, who in regard to statistics, etc., is perhaps the best posted exchangeman in the South.

There is a total of 175 picture theaters in Georgia, this being nineteen more than the number possessed by North Carolina, Georgia's nearest competitor, which is 156. Nineteen of Georgia's number are operated in Atlanta. This is the largest number of film theaters in any city in the entire South.

Proof of Atlanta's importances in the southern film world is shown by the fact that it is made the distribution center for Dixie. Mr. Marentette's records show that Atlanta is the hub of activities for Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, Alabama and Tennessee.

"Fall of Nation" at the Criterion.

Atlanta, Ga.—Willard Patterson, manager of the Criterion, did capacity business this week with the big spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation."

Leo G. Garner's Territory.

Atlanta, Ga.—Leo G. Garner, who was recently made manager of the New Film Corp. and Famous Players Feature Co., with headquarters in Hirsh building, has seven states under his supervision. Mr. Garner was formerly manager of the Washington office for the same company, having worked up from shipping clerk.

Under his direction the Atlanta branch is making strides and becoming well known among exhibitors over the South.

Film Men Join Salesmanship Club.

The Atlanta Salesmanship club, a branch of the national organization of that name, was organized Friday night in the Piedmont hotel with a membership of 121 downtown business men. Prominent among the moving picture exchange men and exhibitors in the new organization are C. W. Savin of the Vitagraph, Chas. Keesnick of the Mutual, J. R. MacEachron Jr. manager of Colonial Film, and Alpha Fowler of the Vaudette. Many other exchange men have applied for membership. During the year, it is said, several prominent sales managers of film corporations will speak before the Atlantic club.

IN BUFFALO, NEW YORK.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

All Syracuse Theaters Give a Phoenix Benefit.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—An echo of the recent fire which destroyed two moving picture theaters and the remaining business places in Phoenix, N. Y., has come from Syracuse. Each theater of that city will donate its entire receipts for one night to a fund for the stricken village. The money will be used to buy an auto fire engine for Phoenix. The financial loss on the theaters and other buildings of Phoenix was very heavy. Practically no insurance was carried because, as the village was formerly without a fire-fighting apparatus, the insurance rates were prohibitory. The generosity of the theater managers of Syracuse is regarded as a great boon by the residnts of the fire-swept town.

Buffalo Business Notes.

D. H. Fink, representing the Caille Bros. Co., of Detroit, manufacturers of ticket machines, etc., recently called on the Buffalo trade and also visited his home here. He will make a trip through New York state and Pennsylvania.

James K. Morgan, manager of the Pathe exchange, Buffalo, has an interesting scrap book in which he pastes tributes which the exhibitors in this territory pay to the Pathe service. Mr. Morgan prizes highly such a tribute which came recently from John F. Farren.

George A. Hickey, manager of the Triangle Film, Buffalo, recently visited Papayanakas Bros., Watertown, N. Y., exhibitors. Mr. Hickey's new road man is George A. Stockton, former manager of Keith's moving picture theater, Buffalo. Recent callers at the Triangle Exchange were: A. C. Hayman, Cataract theater, Niagara Falls; Henry F. Thurston, Temple theater, Lockport; Messrs. Scherer and Griswold of the Savoy theater, Syracuse; Petersen & Wood, Winter Garden theater, Syracuse, and W. B. Fox, who has taken over the Palm theater, Salamanca. The new Crescent theater, Ithaca, has opened. The house seats 1,800 and is using the Triangle service.

SMOKY CITY NOTES.

New Theater Will Be Xmas Present.

Mt. Union, Pa.—The management of the Shapiro Theater, now nearing completion at Mt. Union, Pa., has announced that the new house will be ready for opening about Christmas. The structure is modern in every respect and one of the finest in its locality. The auditorium will seat 1,000 persons. A combination policy will be adopted, presenting high-class feature films and road shows.

J. P. Bothwell Takes Over the Keystone.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Keystone Theater, East Ohio street, Northside, Pittsburgh, Pa., was recently taken over by J. P. Bothwell, a well-known exhibitor.

Get Lease on Liberty Theater

Pittsburgh's Beautiful Theater Taken Over by Rowland & Clark—Total Rental Will Be Half Million—House Is About One Year Old and Seats 1,500 Persons —Some Interesting Details

By Pittsburgh News Service, 6061 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—By a transaction that is one of the largest and most important in local exhibiting history, the Rowland & Clark Theaters have leased for a long term of years the handsome Liberty Theater on Penn avenue, opposite Shady avenue, in the East End, Pittsburgh, Pa. The deal was consummated on November 28, when James B. Clark, president and managing director of the Rowland & Clark interests, and H. E. McLane, president of the Liberty Theater Company, drew up the final papers. The total rental is approximately $500,000 for the period of the lease.

Liberty Theater.

The Liberty is an exquisite example of modern moving picture theater construction. It was completed about a year ago and was thrown open to the public by the Liberty Theater Company on December 27, 1915. The location of the house is ideal, being in the heart of one of the busiest sections of the city and adjacent to one of the most exclusive residential districts. Offering the best photoplay attractions obtainable and catering to a large clientele of the highest type of moving picture patrons, the Liberty met with marked success from the beginning.

The building is of steel and concrete construction and represents a total investment of $300,000. Of imposing proportions, the theater occupies a lot measuring 100x114x79x140 feet. The architecture is striking and graceful and both the exterior and interior reveal elegant taste. The front is of light terra cotta, and the design of the large surface is handsomely executed. A great electric sign, bearing the words "Liberty Theater, Photoplays," and a waving American flag, covers half the front, making the theater stand out very conspicuously at night.

The lobby and corridors are finished in brown marble and are furnished sumptuously in keeping with the fittings throughout. The seating arrangement of the spacious and lofty auditorium is such that a perfect view of the screen can be had from every part of the house.

The capacity of the Liberty is over [illegible] and can be [illegible] comfortably. The lighting scheme is entirely indirect, affording a subdued glow that sets off the rich appointments to fine advantage. The proscenium is large and of beautiful design, while the walls and high ceiling are covered with similar decorations, fret-work and hangings. The effect throughout is at the same time charming and highly artistic. The ventilation is of the latest approved type, a washed air system keeping the atmosphere fresh at all times. There are numerous fire exits at either side of the house. Tastefully arranged retiring rooms for men and women are located at the rear of the auditorium.

Adds to a Circuit.

The acquisition of the Liberty Theater gives the Rowland & Clark circuit, with the Regent at Penn and Highland avenues, two of the largest and finest specially built moving picture houses in the city, and, in fact, in the entire country. This brings the total number of theaters under the R. & C. banner up to seven, while the eighth will be added as soon as the new Plaza theater, at Liberty avenue and Mathilda street, is completed. The Rowland & Clark theaters, with their seating capacities, are: Regent, 1,000; Liberty, 1,500; Arsenal, 850; Strand, 800; Belmar, 650; Bellevue, 650; Oakland, 299; Plaza, when finished, 800, or a total of about 7,000.

When interviewed at the Rowland & Clark business headquarters in the Westinghouse building, and asked as to whether or not the policy of the Liberty would be changed, Mr. Clark said: "We cannot tell at this time just what we shall eventually continue as the fixed policy of the Liberty. At present, we shall continue using the Triangle features four days a week, which leaves us two days on which to show the pick of the open market. If it is possible to secure enough of the right kind of productions, we may inaugurate a policy of week runs, as the success of 'Less Than the Dust' at the Regent recently, proved that the East End will support a moving picture for that length of time, if it is an unusual production."

J. F. Young Goes to General Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The General Film Company has added to its road forces J. F. Young, an experienced film salesman, who will look after a portion of the territory adjacent to Pittsburgh, and who will also call upon the city exhibitors.

E. J. Goldstein to Manage Morris Theater.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Louis Lefkowitz, the popular manager of the Morris Theater, Preble avenue, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa., has resigned that position and joined the ranks of the benedicts. After an extended wedding trip in the East, he will engage in the department store business in Ohio. E. J. Goldstein, formerly assistant manager, has become manager of the Morris Theater.

Beautiful Orpheum Opens.

Connellsville, Pa.—The beautiful Orpheum Theater, Connellsville, Pa., was thrown open on November 30 and is already enjoying great popularity among the people of the locality. An excellent standard has been set by the builders in the construction and equipment of the house, which is one of the best in this end of the state. It represents an outlay of $50,000. The owners are Mikaelarias & Morakas, a well-known firm of exhibitors. The seating capacity of the Orpheum is 750.

Springfield's Film Viewers

Local Censorship Agitation Closes for a Time—Mayor to Appoint Three Viewers, Two Women and One Man, With Star Badges and Right to Enter Any Show—Will Report to Mayor on Undesirable Pictures.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Springfield censorship fight has been settled, at least temporarily, without vesting actual control of the theaters in any body other than the city council. Significant in the agitation was the fact that one advertisement from a local newspaper was offered in evidence to show that appeal was made to prurient-minded persons. The objector admitted that he had not seen the show advertised and could not say whether the picture satisfied the anticipation it aroused. The censorship matter was settled by deciding to allow Mayor Charles T. Baumann to appoint a commission of three citizens to enter at will the photoplay houses, and report to the city council all unfit pictures. It is probable that this commission will be composed of two women and one man. They will be given stars by the Department of Public Safety. Exhibitors did not oppose this plan. It is expected that this will be more of a better picture service than a board of censorship. This committee or two or three of its members will go to the manager and ask him to eliminate objectionable films. If they do not secure results in this way, they will take the matter up with the city council. The school clubs council, which brought up the matter, will have a voice in the selection of the members.

Before the fight was ended the local labor unions had got into it. The operators' local opposed it and other union men (as individuals) before its passage. It was expected that if the drastic measure was passed that the citizens would be asked to declare their sentiments at a referendum election.

City Commissioner Willis J. Spaulding favored the Cleveland plan of censorship—the appointment of one member by the Mayor, another by the exhibitors and the two select the third. An unusual plea was made by Dr. B. W. Ganoung, champion of the theater magnates. He declared that there should be no censorship and that every child ought to be taught sex facts early, and that if the facts were properly taught the motion picture would tend to straighten the moral fibre of the child.

Rev. G. C. Dunlop, rector of Christ Episcopal church, denied the prevelant rumor that the movement was one against Sunday theaters.

Illiscope Elects Officers.

Rockford, Ill.—The stock holders of the newly organized Illiscope Moving Picture Corporation have elected officers as follows:

F. D. E. Babcock, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, chairman; A. J. Holmquist of the Winnebage National Bank, treasurer; Edwin J. Burley, secretary; trustees, Fay Lewis, R. S. Chapman, Fred Swan, William S. Fernald, Charles H. Kjellquist, county treasurer, John Bowman, county recorder; Charles Lundberg, president of the Co-Operative Furniture Company, and William E. Clode. William E. Clode was elected director general and Edwin J. Burley general manager.

The company, which has been incorporated under the laws of Illinois with $350,000, has secured an option on the Coliseum for use as a studio. If it is acquired it will be changed for this work and it is planned to begin production of eight-reel features about the first of the year.

Manager W. J. West Honored.

Kewanee, Ill.—The reputation of W. J. West, manager of the Grand, Majestic and Willard theaters in this city, has gone far afield. He recently was visited by delegates of business men from Cambridge asking that he assume the management of the Palace theater in that city. This house was built a year ago by business men of Cambridge and only 30 minutes was required to raise the money. West will operate it as a picture house daily except Sundays.

Rock Island Potato Benefit.

Rock Island, Ill.—The idea of charging potatoes for admission which attracted so much attention when tried by the Waukegan house, was successfully used here on a larger scale. For two days every person was supposed to bring a potato in addition to the regular price of admission to moving picture theaters in this city. The potatoes were given to the Bethany Home.

Illinois Theater Changes.

Lenzburg, Ill.—This town, sticking close to its name, has a picture show. Edward Hardebeck is operating it at the opera house, using the same service as Manager Droh of the opera house at New Athens.

Toluca, Ill.—Sylvester Berry, owner of the White Pearl thaeter in this city, has purchased the Majestic theater from Mike Fahy.

Onarga, Ill.—Ira Furby has sold the Palace theater to O. J. Bushey.

Sullivan, Ill.—The Globe theater is being remodeled to double its present capacity.

Taylorville, Ill.—M. J. Hogan has leased the Elks theater for two years to James Gregg, who formerly operated theaters in Granville and Toluca. Gregg has changed the name to the Grand and has redecorated the house. He will play feature pictures and vaudeville and road shows.

Quincy, Ill.—L. A. Morest has reopened the Colonial theater, which has been remodeled and refurnished since it suffered a disastrous fire.

Rushville, Ill.—Plans have been made for the new Princess theater to replace the structure destroyed by fire. It will be 35x100 with a Gothic front of mat faced brick and red mortar trimmed with white stone. The house will seat 500. A feature will be a cloak room designed to accommodate a large number of baby carriages.

Paris, Ill.—Jesse Stevens, formerly of the Joy theater, has opened a new moving picture house, to be known as "Starland," in the C. E. Shaw building on East Court street. Monday, Wednesday and Friday he will operate it as a 5-cent show. Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday the admission will be 10 cents. Triangle services will be used.

Decatur, Ill.—The new Avon theater has been completed. The pipe organ was not ready for the opening, and a seven-piece orchestra was used until it was installed.

Streator, Ill.—A committee was appointed by the Parent-Teachers' club of the Garfield school to obtain for school children educational matinees. In the absence of the adoption of the entire plan the Majestic theater has agreed to give the Saturday matinee to which educational pictures will be included with some other subjects. The school club has agreed to co-operate with the management and censor the pictures if necessary.

Ottawa, Ill.—Newspaper men of Ottawa were the guests of Manager Bert Jordan when the Orpheum theater showed the Triangle newspaper play "The Rummy."

Abingdon, Ill.—The Abingdon theater had an all-star week showing Billie Burke, Markuerite Clark, Frank Daniels, William Farnum, Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow and Mary Pickford.

Cincinnati News Letter

Fireproof Makes Good at Local General Film.

CINCINNATI, O.—On November 25, when an early morning fire in the buildings occupied by the local branch of the General Film Co. threatened serious consequence for a time. It started in the basement of the building, presumably from the furnace, and the prompt action of an employe in shutting the fireproof door of basement confined the blaze to that part of the building. Considerable old film was stored in the basement, and made quite a blaze, but there was little other damage, and the loss, according to Manager O'Rear, will not run higher than $1,000, and perhaps not more than $500. It will be recalled that the general building was constructed several years ago for the company's use, and is as nearly fireproof as such a building can be made. The wisdom of the extra expenditures which this involves was shown in the ease with which the fire referred to was shut off and brought under control. If it had spread through the building thousands of dollars worth of new films and other property would have been destroyed.

Scenario Writer Sues.

Cincinnati, O.—The not entirely unknown claim by scenario writers that ideas have been filched by producing companies from scenarios submitted and returned has found expression in Cincinnati in a suit which has been filed in a local court by a writer against one of the leading producing companies, claiming damages of $5,000 as the value of two scenarios written by him. He declares that he submitted the scenarios to the company and that both were rejected and returned, but that subsequently the company produced photoplays which are alleged to be based on the rejected scripts. Both were two-reel scenarios, and the reason for the claim of $5,000 damages is not apparent.

At Work on "Whozoo."

Cincinnati, O.—The plan of producing a photoplay, backed by all of the exhibitors of this city and vicinity, at the famous Zoo gardens, for the purpose of raising funds to help purchase the Zoo for the public, promises to meet with success beyond the fondest hopes of its originators. The Zoo play, "Whozoo?" by Luke McLuke, the most widely read newspaper humorist in the country, calls for the use of most of the animals at the institution, and from the scenes already photographed it is declared that the picture will present some thrills like those caused by the Rainey Hunt pictures or some of the Selig animal films. J. Syme Hastings, as Luke McLuke is known in real life, is personally assisting in the production of the film, and H. Serkowick, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has received numerous requests for bookings, in consequence of the author's fame.

"End of the World" Coming.

Cincinnati, O.—McMahan & Jackson's biggest feature, "The End of the World," which has been on the way to Ohio for a long time, has its first presentation in the Buckeye state scheduled for the Knickerbocker, at Columbus, after which it will probably be seen in Cincinnati. Efforts are being made by the firm to secure a large downtown house for the opening engagements of the film, on behalf of which some spectacular advertising is promised.

An Ohio Jim Crow Suit.

Hamilton, O.—Suit for $500 damages has been filed against John H. Broomhall and John A. Schwalm, of the Jefferson, one of Hamilton's leading moving-picture houses, by a negro who claims that he was ejected from the theater after an argument resulting from his refusal to go to a part of the house reserved for his race. He bases his suit on the allegation that he had purchased a general admission ticket. It is well known that in practically all parts of the country where there are any numbers of negroes they are not permitted to sit with the white people in the body of the house, and in the south, of course, statutory and ordinance provisions require separate accommodations. Lawyers state that theater proprietors have the right to make rules and regulations of a similar nature for their houses, and to enforce them, even in Ohio, where "The Birth of a Nation" was barred out of consideration for the feelings of the colored brother. The question has not been taken into court, however, as far as a moving-picture house is concerned, and if the case is pushed it will be watched with some interest.

Booth Held-in Its Fire.

Dayton, O.—A number of films in the operating booth at C. J. Dolin's moving-picture house on South Brown street caught fire on a recent evening, and the blaze came near resulting in a panic. The steel construction of the booth prevented the fire from getting to any other part of the house, however, and the only loss was to the films which were burnt.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

More Minneapolis Notes.

By J. L. Johnston.

L. S. Braun, former part owner of the Braun theater, Wahpeton, N. D., is now touring North Dakota for the Wescott Film Corp.

Harry Graham, manager of the K-E-S-E exchange, plans a business tour of his entire territory.

Harry McKliget has joined the Friedman Film Corp. forces and is now covering Eastern Iowa with "The Spoilers."

Charles Wells, the robust, rosey-cheeked K. E. S. E. traveling representative, is now covering North Dakota, having returned from an extensive trip through Iowa last Tuesday.

P. H. Carey, manager of the Zenith Feature Film Co., Inc., exchange, is in Virginia, Minn., arranging for the burial of his father, who died suddenly Nov. 21. Miss Solheim, Carey's "right hand man," is in charge of the exchange during his absence.

Harry Parker, manager of the "No Man's Woman" road show, put out by the Zenith exchange, is now in Duluth, Minn., for a brief vacation.

"Somewhere in Northern Minnesota" is all that is known about A. A. Hixon, who is covering that territory for the Metro exchange. However, the Metro shipping department is somewhat busier now than before Hixon went out.

Milwaukee Censors Won't Judge Posters

Local Board Will Now Limit Itself to Films and Leave Paper to the Police by Order of Judge Page—Manager Fined.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—The local board of censors is going to stick to censoring films and leave the matter of what posters are proper to the police. This decision was reached after the conflict in authority had become apparent. Leo L. Landau, manager of the Butterfly theater, was arrested by two detectives after displaying in front of the theater posters advertising the film "Purity" showing the form of a nude woman. In court Landau said that the posters had been sanctioned by the board of censors. This was admitted by President Radley of the board, which had reviewed the film and passed it after certain eliminations. Landau was fined $15 by Judge Page, who issued the edict that the board should stick to the films and leave the posters to the police. "There is no doubt the law was violated, but I have my doubts as to whether the board has the authority to approve or disapprove of posters."

Will Investigate Theater Ads.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Advertising methods such as generally are used in connection with moving picture films whose titles are likely to lead patrons to believe that they are going to see something they should not see are due for an investigation in this city. Among the topics which are likely to be considered at a meeting in December of Mayor Hoan, exhibitors and censors, is the plan of advertising the films as for certain sexes or ages only. There has been no complaint of the character of films shown, but there is a feeling among the exhibitors that this plan of "bunking" the public is not conducive to the best interests of the industry.

Ministers to Help Sunday Observing Shows.

Monroe, Wis.—In an effort to stop moving picture shows the Monroe Ministerial Association has suggested the "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours" plan. It has informed a local exhibitor that if he will comply with the request for no Sunday shows they will advertise from the pulpit, whenever educational and up-lifting pictures are shown.

Walks Into Hole, Sues Theater.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The question of responsibility for the premises surrounding the theater was involved in a suit filed here. Lena Bertagna asks $5,000 damages against the Crystal theater and the Commonwealth Power Companies. She declared that on Sept. 11 she stepped into an unbarricaded catch basin in the alley in the rear of the theater, fracturing three of her ribs.

To Try Saturday Children's Shows.

Ashland, Wis.—The exhibitors and parents of this city have co-operated. As a result special Saturday shows for children will be tried here.

Wisconsin Theaters Changes.

Osceola, Wis.—T. T. Tromley has sold the Lyric theater to Mr. and Mrs. Burnett of Huron, S. D.

Mazomanie, Wis.—R. J. Slack has taken over the Majestic theater. The Ideal theater will be closed.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The closing of the Vaudette theater, the pioneer moving picture house on Third street, O. L. Meister gave a dinner to a number of theater men and other friends. The dinner was in a way the pre-celebration of the opening of Meister's new theater, the White House, a few doors north of the present one.

Maiden Rock, Wis.—A moving picture theater has been opened in the Kaye building by Mr. Hawkins.

Apple Show Week Programs.

MOVING picture exhibitors of Spokane made capital of the ninth national apple show in Spokane this week by presenting good bills with the results that all played to capacity houses most of the week according to their statements.

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff were featured in "Seventeen" at the Clemmer; "The Unborn" attracted large audiences of women early in the week at the Casino, and when the fair sex voted to admit the men, the mixed audiences filled the house the remainder of the week.

Bessie Barriscale appeared in "A Corner in Colleens," at the Liberty; "A Daughter of the U. S. A." was the attraction at the Best Show; Clara Byers appeared in "His Picture," at the Lyric; Harold Lockwood and May Allison in "The River of Romance," at the Rex and "Sporting Blood" was shown at the Class A.

Mayor Closes "Purity" on Petition.

Moscow, Idaho.—Mayor J. G. Gibson, of Moscow, closed the presentation of "Purity," at Moscow, after it had run Monday afternoon and night of this week. The action was taken following the presentation of a petition signed by ministers and prominent women of the town.

Will E. Hudson, Pathe News man from Seattle, spent a couple of days in Spokane this week getting pictures of the ninth National Apple show, the baby pageants and parades.

Union City Has Fine New Theater

W. C. Morris, a Pioneer Exhibitor of Union City, Tenn., Is Building a Handsome New Picture House—Will Be One of the Finest in This Section—Name Will Be New Frances—Interesting Details.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

UNION CITY, TENN.—A handsome new moving picture theater is being erected in this city, and will be ready for occupancy shortly after the first of the year. The contract has been given to J. W. Spradlin, of Fulton, Ky., and a special clause provides for the completion of the building by February 1st. Ground was broken some days ago, and active construction is well under way. The theater will be one of the finest in this section, representing an expenditure of $15,000 and will be known as the New Frances. The building will be three stories in height, the upper section being devoted to office space. Small store rooms will be provided on either side of the lobby, having a depth of about 40 feet, which is also the length of the corridor from the street to the ticket office.

The lobby will be laid in tile, and the stores arcaded, with plate glass along the sides from the pavement to the auditorium. The front of the building will be finished in red pressed brick, with artistic decorative effects. The main auditorium will be 100 x 50 feet, and will embrace every scientific feature known in modern theatrical architecture. The drawings call for a stage 25 feet deep, with an 18 foot opening. A complete steam heating system will be installed, and ventilation to the highest possible degree of efficiency will be observed throughout.

W. C. Morris, owner and manager of the Frances theater and airdome, is building the New Frances, and is giving the construction and detail work his personal supervision. Mr. Morris has been an exhibitor at Union City for the past ten years, having also owned the Gem theater prior to its destruction by fire. Since that time he has been located in the Bell building, pending completion of his new house. Only the best features will be shown, including such well known programs as Paramount, Metro and Triangle.

New General Manager at Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn. — Effective November 20th, W. P. Haslett assumed management of the local office of the General Film Company, succeeding Bert King, who has been in active charge of Memphis business for some months. Speaking generally, the outlook at the Memphis office is exceedingly bright for the holiday season.

K. W. Coulter Visits.

Nashville, Tenn.—K. W. Coulter, from the Atlanta office of William Fox, was in the city last week, paying a visit to the Strand, local first run distributors of the Fox productions, and incidentally lining up a few features for Christmas.

Artcraft's "Dust" Triumphs.

Birmingham, Ala.—Mary Pickford's latest picture, "Less Than the Dust," ran for a solid week at the Alcazar, at which time 25 cents admission was charged. A special orchestra was engaged for the occasion by Manager Griffin, and rendered the musical score issued by Artcraft in connection with the picture. The management reported unusually heavy business during the run of this feature.

Queen Feature Gets New Christies.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Queen Feature Service of this city has contracted to handle the new series of Christie Comedies for Alabama and adjoining territory, and bookings to date include many of the most important houses in the South. This is an independent exchange, and handles Ivan Features for the Southern trade, as well as numerous state right features. In harmony with expressions from other exchange managers in this part of the country, Manager Doc Graham states that "business is good and getting better." Messrs. O. R. Kaiser and W. O. Harding are on the road for Queen, handling Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana, Florida and the Carolinas. This company is also agent for the King Gold Fibre Screen.

Business Notes.

Memphis, Tenn.—"According to our barometer," began Manager Kaufman of United recently, "things are picking up all the time in this territory. Our business is larger today than when we released 21 reels of exclusive United service." Mr. Kaufman leaves at this writing on a trip to New Orleans, where he goes to look after his interests in the Crescent City.

Nashville, Tenn.—In addition to putting on some of the best features of the day, the Crescent theater is being utilized by the Crescent Amusement Company to show return engagements of the most popular pictures appearing at local houses, including the Triangle service, which has for some time been limited to the Knickerbocker. The Crescent is one of the handsomest of the uptown houses, and can at all times be counted upon to draw its share of the patronage.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—"The Birth of a Nation" returned to the Lyric for a three days' engagement on its farewell tour of this territory, beginning November 21st.

New Orleans News Letter

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

G. R. Meeker Spends Ten Days Here.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—George R. Meeker, of the World Film offices in New York, was a visitor to New Orleans for a few days and appeared to be more than ordinarily interested in the film industry in this section. Mr. Meeker frankly admitted that some angles in the game were apt to be overlooked in the press of business in the New York offices, and he was open to suggestions. He paid especial attention to the matter of publicity in connection with motion pictures down here, and seemed to be particularly impressed with a campaign for newspaper publicity, which has just been inaugurated by Mrs. Sessions, local manager of the World Film Exchange, and which appears to bring immediate and very satisfactory results. Mr. Meeker left here for Dallas, Tex., from whence he returned to New York after a few days of inspection in the Texas film center.

Lals Bros. Buy the Elysium.

New Orleans, La.—The Elysium theater, one of the largest show houses in the down-town, or old quarters of the city, has been purchased by Lals Brothers, large general grocers in Algiers, the section of New Orleans which lies across the river. The house has been closed for a short time that it may undergo extensive repairs and remodeling to bring it up to the requirements of a modern motion picture house in every particular. The entire interior is to be redecorated; new offices and rest rooms are to be built in, and every appliance for the comfort and convenience of the patrons is to be installed. Messrs. Lals Brothers are men of means and they announce that everything connected with the theater shall be of the best. It is the intention to put on a first-run program of features and probably to introduce an occasional vaudeville sketch; but, primarily, the theater is to be devoted to the showing of the best pictures obtainable. The name of the theater is to be changed to the Theods. It has a seating capacity of 1,500.

Opelousas Theater Changes Hands.

Opelousas, La.—The Princess theater here has been taken over by F. J. Deetlein, who will make some improvements and run a feature house. W. F. Nolan, the former owner, will engage in the mercantile business. The Princess theater is the only one now in operation here, and it is regarded as an exceptionally profitable property.

Manager Steinson Goes Up Some.

New Orleans, La.—Manager John A. Steinson, of the Greater Vitagraph exchange, has just been informed that his office has been made a purchasing office, which means that it is no longer to be dependent upon the Dallas, Texas, office for its supply of films for distribution in this territory. The Greater Vitagraph, or what was the old V-L-S-E exchange, was established in New Orleans a little less than a year ago under the management of K. A. Evans, and since that time the business has grown to very considerable proportions. Manager Evans was recently succeeded by Manager Steinson, who has been going over the field adjusting himself to the harness. There has been an entire increase in the number of accounts, and the Greater Vitagraph service seems to be popular. Recently the New Orleans territory was greatly augmented by the transfer of Mississippi, parts of Alabama and Florida from the Atlanta to the New Orleans exchange, and this hastened the making of the exchange here an independent one. Manager Steinson has remodeled his office and made it very attractive. The force has been increased and made more efficient and the business outlook is reported to be bright.

John A. Steinson.

Bijou Dream Becomes Jitney House.

New Orleans, La.—Pearce's Bijou Dream theater on November 27 changed from a first-run feature house to a mixed program "jitney" theater. This theater is just off of Canal street, and naturally attracts a large patronage among persons who merely want to see a short picture or perhaps to spend a short season resting. It formerly was a five-cent house, and it made more money then than it has at any time since it was turned into a feature theater.

MORE KANSAS CITY NOTES.

By Kansas City News Service.

Among Kansas City Managers.

Kansas City, Mo.—Charles Werner, manager of the Metro branch at St. Louis, was in Kansas City recently, making his report to Mr. Harding, the manager of the Kansas City branch and also district manager of the company. Mr. Werner has been with the St. Louis branch for the past three years, but previous to that time he was manager of the Mutual Picture Film Company of Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—F. C. Weary, manager of the Aircraft Film service at Kansas City, reports that Mary Pickford in "Less Than the Dust" will be shown at the Aircraft Theater of Kansas City four days beginning December 18. The picture was secured for a downtown theater and was booked for a run of thirty days at a reduced admission price and for a first run it is expected that Mr. Weary will be satisfied that the experiment will be a success. The admission price will be fifteen cents.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. H. Hasel recently sold the Highland of Kansas City to Mr. Hewins.

Augusta, Kan.—Charles Brown, proprietor of the Isis theater at Augusta, Kansas, has remodeled and built a balcony to the theater. Extra admission will be charged for seats in the balcony.

Syracuse, Kan.—L. C. Steeve, publisher of a newspaper at Syracuse, recently remodeled his building and purchased a motion picture machine. He will call the theater the Grand.

Joplin, Kan.—Pete Evans, formerly in business in St. Louis, recently purchased the Princess theater at Iola, from Henry Shields and Mr. Taylor.

Greensburg, Kan.—Harry Miller of Kansas City, is building a new $25,000 theater at Greensburg. Mr. Miller is a new man in the business.

Hutchinson, Kan.—Karl Bornschein, proprietor of the Popular theater at Larned, Kansas, recently purchased the Rex theater of Fred Savage at Hutchinson.

Recent Visitors at Exchanges.

Recent visitors to the Kansas City exchanges were: Lee Gunnison, Royal and Crystal theaters, Atchison, Kansas; Messrs. Foote & Lindsay, Majestic theater, Chillicothe, Mo.; Mr. Regalman, Colonial theater, St. Joe, Mo.; Bert Byler, Bowman theater, Clinton, Mo.; F. C. Weary, Farris theater, Richmond, Mo.; L. L. Ware, Varsity theater, Lawrence, Kansas; T. J. Warren, Hippodrome theater, Leavenworth, Kansas; J. R. Davis and wife, Rex theater, Hannibal, Mo.; O. C. Wingler, Eagles theater, Herrington and Kansas.

Sunday Agitation in Kentucky

At Frankfort, Ky., the Men's Federation Appoints a Committee to Meet Local Exhibitors and Ask for Closing on Sundays—Otherwise Legal Measures Will Be Taken—City Officials Approve—Film Men's Argument.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1401 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

FRANKFORT, KY.—The old blue law agitation has again developed at Frankfort, Ky., where the general committee of the Men's Federation is opposing Sunday moving pictures. On the motion of City Prosecutor Dulin Moss, a member of the body, the committee on Sabbath observance was instructed to confer with the proprietors of the different motion picture houses of the Capital City, with a view to stopping the Sunday shows, and, if unsuccessful in stopping the shows through arbitration, to secure evidence and present it to the proper authorities so that the question could be settled in the courts.

A motion to appoint a committee was discussed at some length, different members refusing to act, it finally being decided to allow the regular committee on Sabbath observance to handle the matter. It was stated at this meeting that one Frankfort exhibitor had announced he was willing to close on Sunday if the rest of the shows would close, but his name was not given, nor can he be found. For this reason it was decided to arbitrate the issue and apply to the courts, if necessary, Prosecutor Moss claiming that the houses could be closed by the courts.

The resolution to have the campaign started at once was unanimously adopted by the members attending the meeting after the "evils" of the Sunday moving picture show were painted in gaudy colors by L. B. Marshall, Mr. Moss and others. The latter argued for a time limit of three weeks in which to get the matter adjusted, advising that if the committee did not secure the consent of the exhibitors inside of three weeks to closing on Sunday, the committee at once start securing evidence for a prosecution. He said that if the warrants were issued on the Monday following the three-week period, on evidence presented, the order would be carried out by the officials. Others contended that the issue should be considered at greater length so that every angle could be decided upon.

The Picture Men's Argument.

Following the notice in the press of the movement started at this meeting, R. L. McLean, manager of the Capital theater, controlled by Fred Dolle and the Dolle-way Amusement Enterprises, of Louisville, addressed the following letter to the State Journal, giving the views of the company upon the subject. Mr. McLean's letter reads:

"In connection with an article in today's issue of your paper, regarding activities of the "Men's Federation" against Sunday picture shows, which was brought to the attention of Mr. Fred Dolle, president of this company, I am instructed to give you some facts that should have a bearing on the situation and be considered in any discussion of the subject.

"Last evening we presented an excellent company of players in "Martha." Our gross receipts amounted to $359.50. This is the support that is given us after a popular and insistant demand had been made to this company for road attractions.

"Our daily attendance at picture shows amounts to about fifty per cent. of our capacity except on Saturdays and Sundays, when the attendance is much heavier. This means that for five days out of each week we are losing money and that we depend on Saturdays and Sundays to make up for these loses. Saturday's receipts alone will not do this. I have learned from officials of other theaters in the city that this condition of affairs is general, and not confined to the Capital alone. The situation, summed up, means that unless the picture houses are permitted to open on Sunday they will not be able to remain open on other days.

"Our Sunday attendance is composed largely of people who attend on no other day of the week, and who are unable to attend on any other day; for that reason the argument that 'if they can't go on Sunday they will go on some other day' cannot be applied, and the mid-week attendance is not sufficient to pay the expenses of operating the theater.

"With respect to your spirit of fairness to all, I request that you publish this letter so that the people of the city can realize the lack of support we are having and that if this movement is carried out it will mean the end of amusements in Frankfort."

Kentucky News Notes.

Louisville.—Percy L. Smith, manager of the local Mutual office, has purchased a Maxwell car, and figures that he can cover a great deal more territory out in the state through the use of the car, rather than the railroads.

Louisville.—The Alamo theater is now showing Triangle Films during the latter part of the week.

Paris.—Claude Raymond, of Cynthiana has succeeded James Nelson as operator at the Grand.

Elizabethtown.—The Masonic Temple theater did a land office business while showing the film "Marvelous Macaste," booked by the Big Features Rights Corporation of Louisville.

Madisonville.—Manager Dozier, of the Garrick recently arranged a special evening for the benefit of the Knights and Ladies of Security, when moving pictures of the order's work during the year were shown in addition to the usual show, and the proceeds turned over to the organization.

Shelbyville Council Has New Theater Bill

Ordinance Introduced to Regulate and License Shows—What the New Bill Demands—License Fee of $25 a Year.

SHELBYVILLE, KY.—A new ordinance for regulating and licensing picture shows was introduced at the regular meeting of the Board of Council on November 23 by Councilmen McGrath and Tipton. The new ordinance provides that licenses of this character shall be granted only on application, in writing, to the board, and that the application must set out the location, etc. The ordinance provides that all picture houses must be on the ground floor, fronting on a public way or street, and without means or connection to any other building or room; that walls must be of fireproof construction, and floors either of fireproof material, or if of joist construction, the space between must be filled with non-combustible material; two exits at the front and at least one at the rear, all five feet wide, and the doors opening outward. If the machine booth, which must also be fireproof, is located at the front of the building, then two rear exits or side exits must be provided. A license fee of $25 per year is to be charged, and a penalty of from $5 to $20 is to be imposed for all violations, each day to constitute a separate offense.

If this ordinance goes into effect it will close the old Brown opera house, which has been operating on the second floor of a building for several years.

Lyric at Irvine, Ky., Destroyed.

Louisville, Ky.—Reports were received here on Saturday, November 25, of an early morning fire at Irvine, Ky., which swept through several buildings, causing a loss of approximately $250,000. The Lyric theater, practically a new building, was burned at an estimated loss of $10,000. A man sleeping over the theater was forced to jump from a second-story window, but was not injured. Irvine is in the heart of the new Kentucky petroleum fields and is one of the fastest growing towns in the state. While the loss was heavy the city is growing so fast that the buildings will probably be rebuilt at once.

Mary Gray Peck in Louisville.

Louisville, Ky.—Miss Mary Gray Peck, of New York, member of the Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and working with the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with National Board of Review of Motion Pictures) appeared before the Louisville Board of Censorship for Children's Motion Pictures, at the Public Library last week. At the speaking was a large number of people who had accepted the invitation of the board to be present at the address.

One thing that was noticeable in Miss Peck's talk was the broad view which she has acquired of the industry. Instead of being like a great many lecturers, feeling that certain classes of films should be abolished, Miss Peck apparently believes in using every effort to improve films and the public mind, but takes no decided stand against any classification.

Kansas City Has Censor Fever

Irritated by a Few Lurid Posters and "No Children" Signs and One or Two Sensational Films, Local Censors Get Out Hatchets and Go Further than There Was Any Need—May Test the Lawfulness of the Censor's Methods.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Kansas City went last week through the throes of what some of the newspapers called a "clean-up" of moving pictures. Judge Coon of the North Side police court fined two exhibitors and the two owners of the films which had been shown without censorship after being "called in," by F. F. McClure, head of the recreation department that censors films; and the judge announced that he would co-operate with the censor in causing a modification of some of the classes of pictures being exhibited in the lobbies to advertise certain films. Judge Coon also asked the censors to see that signs announcing that "children under 16 years of age not admitted" were taken down, declaring that pictures not fit for children to see, were not fit to be shown in the city.

"No Children" Sign.

The attorneys declared that the signs were intended to keep out children whose presence was often a matter of discomfort to adults.

"You put those signs up merely as a bait," said Julge Coon. "They must come down."

Consequently, the signs have been removed, the lobby photographs and paper no longer show naked women, and the advertising of the pictures is being modified. The two pictures, "Purity" and "Protect Your Daughters," were shown before the censors, and before the appeal board, and condemned.

The exhibitors and the owners of state's rights, were fined $25 each by Judge Coon, but the fines were stayed.

It is possible that steps may be taken to force a test of the ordinance under which Mr. McClure acts in censoring pictures. Possible a request will be made to have a review of the pictures after eliminations are made, and by injunctions and appeals, get the case into higher courts. Such steps have not been taken, however.

Lurid Advertising Started It.

The whole matter of censorship got into this turmoil in the past few months, following the opening of the New Rialto several months ago with pictures palpably playing to sensationalism. One or two other houses used the same kind of advertising, and suddenly several houses were bidding for the same kind of business. There was a flurry several weeks ago, when the Kansas City Advertising Club received a suggestion to attack the lurid lobby and newspaper advertising under the honest advertising law, the point made being that the films were not as bad as the advertising indicated, and the public was being fooled. At that time there was no charge that the pictures being run were of bad character—only that the advertising put suggestive thoughts into the minds of the public, and gave a false impression as to what pictures were being offered in Kansas City.

During the past week, the lobby displays have taken on a cleaner look, and the newspaper advertising is more modest—and the theaters seem to be doing just as good business.

The Kansas City Star, which has compelled a modification of the advertising in its columns of moving picture shows that previously appealed to sensationalism, recently had the following editorial on its first page:

The censor for the board of public welfare, Mr. F. F. McClure, is trying to prevent the production of indecent motion picture plays in Kansas City. The situation is such that drastic action is necessary. Certain producers are turning to salacious films as the best way to make quick profits. All their talk about high moral purpose is bunk. Their aim is to cash in on an appeal to the baser instincts. In justice to its young people the city cannot afford to tolerate such plays. Mr. McClure deserves hearty support in his effort to clean up the motion picture situation. He ought to have the support particularly of the far-sighted men who are financially interested in the motion picture business. There is no surer way to kill it than to keep putting on nasty plays.

W. C. Gookin Assumes Managership.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. C. Gookin, the new manager of the Vitagraph branch at Kansas City, who came from the Toronto, Canada, office has assumed his new duties in Kansas City. Mr. Gookin opened the Canadian offices January of this year, and was general manager of the Canadian territory. Mr. Gookin, previous to his opening of the Canadian offices, was traveling out of the New York office, studying conditions on the west coast. He has been with the company about two years. Mr. Gookin has already moved his family to Kansas City, and will settle here permanently. He is mighty glad to get back into the United States, and believes he will like Kansas City fine. L. H. Watrous will manage the Toronto office.

H. C. Lloyd Guides Alhambra.

Springfield, Mo.—H. C. Lloyd, formerly manger of the Aladdin, is now managing the Alhambra.

Dan Meyers Building New Theatre.

Muskogee, Okla.—Dan Meyers, proprietor of the Broadway theater at Muskogee, Oklahoma, is building another big new theater in that town, and he has booked Fox service.

Frank Gehring Marries.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank Gehring, a salesman of the World Film Corporation at Kansas City, recently went over with his bride-to-be to Olathe, Kansas, to be married. Olathe has the reputation of being quite a Cupid's Parlor for Kansas Cityans, as a number of local couples have gone there to be married.

New Center Theater's Orchestra.

Kansas City, Mo.—Samuel Zucker, who will soon open his New Center theater at Fifteenth and Troost, has engaged Joseph Black, leader of the orchestra at the Baltimore hotel, to organize an orchestra for the new theater. Mr. Zucker will make a specialty of good music, adding to the orchestra as conditions warrant. He will start something entirely new among the suburban theaters, a daily matinee, and expects to get much business through this feature. Only the downtown houses in Kansas City now give matinees in the afternoon, and they of course are running all day.

Vitagraph Opens Omaha Branch.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. C. Gookin, manager of the Vitagraph Film Service at Kansas City, reports that a branch house has been established at Omaha, Nebraska, at 111 Farnun. street. Mr. Denham Palmer, formerly at the Denver office, will assume the management of the new office.

L. E. Fraker Goes to International.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. E. Fraker, formerly traveler for the Triangle at Kansas City, has recently accepted a position as road man for the International branch at Kansas City.

Tom McKean with International.

Tom McKean, who for the past five years was a traveler for the Paramount at Kansas City, has recently joined the forces of the International Film Service at Kansas City.

Exchange Business Notes.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe exchange at Kansas City, recently made a flying business trip to Springfield, Mo.

C. W. Hardin, manager of the Kansas City Metro office, has just returned from a short business trip to Wichita, Kansas.

G. E. Akers, special representative of the Kansas City Feature Film Co., has recently finished an eight weeks' thorough tour of Kansas, studying the conditions in that section. He reports that exhibitors are doing well, and the motion picture business is steadily increasing.

Joe Levy, manager of the United Film branch at Kansas City, has only been in Kansas City a short time, but is already generally well liked and is proving his ability as a successful film man.

Frank Gehring, a salesman for the World Film exchange at Kansas City, is temporarily in charge of the office during the absence of Manager Richard Robertson, who has gone to New York on business.

G. W. Tinsley, salesman for the Artcraft Film service at Kansas City, recently left for a short tour of western Iowa.

New Theaters and Changes.

Mason City, Ia.—Captain Heffner, proprietor of the Bijou theater at Mason City, Iowa, is now on the border with company D of the Iowa National Guard. Mrs. Heffner is now managing the theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. S. Bailey recently purchased the Bonaventure theater of Kansas City from Mrs. Minnie Aberill, who is now looking for a new location.

Cameron, Mo.—A. E. Jarboe, formerly the owner of the New theater at Carrolton, Mo., is building a new theater at Cameron.

Joplin Theater Succeeds in Spite of Alley

Wineland's Hippodrome Has Difficulties, But Is Attracting Patrons—Prospects Good Despite Noise and Inconvenience.

Joplin, Mo.—Wineland's Hippodrome theater at Joplin, Mo., is doing a nice business, against many disadvantages and obstacles—and the present prospects are that Mr. Wineland will win out on the strength of his showmanship. He built his theater on the street next east of the main street of the city; and to secure entrance on this thoroughfare, leased a store room and made it a big long lobby. But visitors had to cross the alley to enter the theater by the rear door.

The city refused a permit for a canopy to cover the alley, so that patrons would not be incommoded in wet weather. The alley is paved—and there is apparently a tremendous lot of business in the way of wagon traffic through that alley at night. The wagons not only interfere with patrons entering the theater, but also make a racket that disturbs the people in the house, the acoustics being peculiarly advantageous for the transmission of noises from the rear. Mr. Wineland has of course the advantage of the 25-foot store space on the main street for advertising—but it is rather expensive.

A ticket seller is stationed at the main street entrance, and a ticket taker at the rear door across the alley; there are also sellers and takers at the main entrance on the street, on which the theater faces.

Sioux City, Ia., Club Women Want to Investigate.

Sioux City, Ia.—Members of the Women's Club have proposed to investigate the moving picture theaters of this city, making a report on the moral, social and educational qualities of the pictures, the sanitary and the safety condition of the house. The exhibitors would welcome any findings upon the sanitary and safety condition, but have announced that they do not believe the censorship matter is one to be solved by club women.

Two Theater Men Indicted.

Sioux City, Ia.—Indictments have been returned by the grand jury of the District court against John Waters and George Ammerman, owners of the Lyric theater, at 613 Fourth street. They were charged with setting fire to their theater on October 2. Witnesses testified that they found films stretched from one end of the theater to the other on the morning that the theater was found on fire. Both men were released on bond.

Manager Stolte's Thanksgiving Benefit.

Clinton, Ia.—Manager Arthur G. Stolte, of the Palace theater, aided the poor of the city by giving two Saturday matinees at which children under fifteen were admitted by bringing two potatoes, two apples, or two of any kind of fruit or vegetable. The products went to the Thanksgiving dinner of the needy.

Big License Fee Brings Higher Prices.

Centerville, S. D.—To the high cost of living troubles of Centerville residents has been added an increase of admission fees to the local moving picture houses. It now costs 15 cents for an adult to see a show. But the managers can warble the refrain: "We didn't want to do it, but you made us do it." The reason is, the voters of [illegible] recently [illegible] approved ordinances which placed a license of $150 a year upon a photoplay house and also upon a dance hall.

New Theaters and Interesting Notes.

Fargo, N. D.—Fairy films will play an important part in the program of the Garrick theater on Saturday mornings. In addition to this, there will be a series of educational pictures for children. These shows are in co-operation with club women of the city, the Fortnightly club playing an important part.

Dickinson, N. D.—Ground has been broken for the new Ray theater, and it is expected to open the house about December 20. It will be of brick, 20x100, with [illegible] of white enamel and mahogany and the auditorium, in old rose and ivory. Mrs. W. G. Ray will manage the house and Wilfred Leonberger will be the operator and electrician.

Rhame, N. D.—The Town Hall association has installed a larger plant to supply power for the moving picture show.

Higher Prices in Twin Cities

Minneapolis and St. Paul Exhibitors Feel the Pinch of the High Cost of Running and Are Expected to Boost Admission Prices—Fifteen Cents May Be the Bottom Charge After the First of the Year.

By J. [illegible] Jacobson, 811 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Twin City exhibitors are expected to get together some time this week and confer with an attorney regarding plans for raising their admission prices 50 per cent. on or about January 1, 1917. A very poor summer business and a none too startling early fall patronage have added quite a few gray hairs to the craniums of the Twin City film displayers and with aeroplane food prices, coal prices, clothing prices, keeping their patrons at home and no chance of film rentals being reduced or theater overheads being cut down the S. R. O. sign is giving way to the S. O. S. placard hereabouts.

This does not mean that on the whole the Twin City's theater business is on the downward slope, but there are a good number of exhibitors who touched bottom during the summer and are slow in coming to the surface, even now, and the 15-cent moving picture entertainment will be gladly welcomed by the exhibitor. There are a few theaters, but a drop in the bucket, however, who do not look with favor upon the increased admission.

Whether the increased price will make a hit with the public is not known, but as the boss barbers say, "anybody that can spend a quarter for a haircut can afford 35 cents," so perhaps there will be enough film fans at 15 cents a head.

B. S. Cohen Is Selznick Representative.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ben S. Cohen has succeeded Phillip Lewis as northwest representative for the Selznick enterprises and his temporary headquarters are at the Hotel Radisson. Mr. Cohen states he is the only authorized Selznick representative within Minnesota, the Dakotas and northern Wisconsin, and warns exhibitors against doing business with anyone else using the Selznick name.

H. R. Brandt Opens Exchange.

H. R. Brandt has opened an exchange at 814 Produce Exchange and has among other features "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

New Palace Theater Premier.

St. Paul, Minn.—The New Palace theater, Ruben & Finkelstein's new $500,000 vaudeville and picture theater was opened to the public on Monday evening, November 27, and capacity houses were recorded at each performance. The house is located at Seventh and Wabash streets and seats 3,000 persons. "The Scarlet Runner" and other short features form the picture portion of the theater's program. B. Wagner, Sr., is manager of the new theater.

Princess Closes Temporarily.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Princess theater on Seventh street, closed Sunday evening, November 26, when its vaudeville was transferred to the New Palace and work of redecorating, remodeling and installing a large pipe organ in the theater has been started. The Princess will reopen in about two weeks. Bert Goldman is manager of the house.

In and About the Twin Cities.

B. Wagner, Jr., former director of Universal-L-KO comedies and more recently assistant to Herbert Brenon is in St. Paul for a visit with his father.

Roy Fernandez, Universal star visited Manager W. A. Mustarde, manager of the Blue Mouse theater, St. Paul, two days last week, while enroute to the Universal City studios from New York. Packed houses greeted Mr. Fernandez at the Blue Mouse.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Rose Tapley, the ever-smiling film actress, who held forth at the Vitagraph booth at the Chicago convention, is expected to arrive in Minneapolis, shortly, for a visit to the exchange managed by W. K. Howard. When she arrives Miss Tapley may also speak before several women's clubs and appear at theaters running "The Chattel," in which she appeared last.

Charles G. Branham, publicity man, and A. L. Kimball, cameraman, went to Chicago last Friday, to secure moving pictures of the Minnesota-Chicago football game for exclusive showing at the Minneapolis Strand. The pictures were showing Monday.

Elliott-Sherman's "Ramona" opened a week's run at the Strand, St. Paul, November 26, at 25 cents admission, and played to a good business..

J. B. Smoot, manager of the Victor and Milo theaters at Little Falls, Minn., was a visitor to the Minneapolis exchange.

Manager Bert Beyerstadt, of the New Garden theater at Rochester, Minn., has put in an orchestra in his show house and reports an increased business.

Bowlers May Dance.

Members of the Minneapolis Film Men's Bowling League will get together shortly to arrange for their first annual ball, which will probably be given in December. Receipts from this ball will be added to the league's prize money to be distributed at the end of the year.

Osmond, Neb.—F. H. Dickes has moved his moving picture show into the recently erected Buchanan building.

Carroll, Neb.—Mrs. Maude Samuelson sold the Royal theater to B. R. Atkinson.

Aurora, Neb.—Labor Commissioner F. M. Coffey ordered the "Birth of a Nation Company" to place a fireproof top and bottom in its portable projection booth before the show could proceed at the Opera House here.

Bergen, N. D.—A new moving picture theater and dance hall is being erected here.

Milton, N. D.—C. W. Plain is having the opera house wired and will operate a private electric light plant.

On St. Louis' South Broadway

World Man's Visits Show Business' Local Homestead—Tears Come to His Eyes on Passing Two Dark Theaters, but He Chirks Up Once More When He Finds So Many Houses Doing Good Business.

By A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Pl., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Broadway, south of Chouteau avenue and north of Shenandoah, in addition to being one of the most interesting streets in St. Louis, has more theaters to the square inch than any other highway in the city.

Beginning with Alex Papendricos' Whiteway theater, which, while not exactly on Broadway, being just up the hill on Hickory street, but near enough to be considered on that thoroughfare—and counting on down to "Doc" Demko's place, at Shenandoah, a distance of eight blocks, there are just eight theaters, an average of one to a block.

Time was when this district had more shows than it has now; in fact, South Broadway was the father, mother and elderly aunt of the show business for this end of the town, but that was in the early days.

Times Have Changed.

The number of shows on South Broadway has decreased more than fifteen per cent since the days when an empty store, a handful of chairs and a bed sheet was all that was needed to start in the show business. But the substantial and up-to-date houses that have replaced the old-time shows, although fewer in number, have a greater seating capacity than all of the others combined.

South Broadway has other interests besides its picture shows. It is in the old French Quarter, and the daily and Saturday nightly scenes of the French Market are particularly rich in local color and all-around picturesqueness. All this, and the fact that a correspondent can walk from show to show and save care fare, makes it an ideal place to gather news and impressions; therefore we visited South Broadway one night this week.

We found two of the eight houses closed. One, the Carroll, because its former manager is busy with a fine, big new place built a few months ago; and the other, the Russell, has been closed for some time because of too much competition.

Thrives With 185 Seats.

The first stop was made at the smallest theater in the city, the Coliseum, in the 1200 block. Mrs. Sucher owns and operates the Coliseum, and in spite of the fact that its total seating capacity is only 185, the place seemed to be in a thriving condition.

A Neat and Cosy Little House.

A little further south, and diagonally across the street, we found the Family theater, and its manager, Chris Zotos, standing out in the lobby with a smile on his face in spite of the fact that a big street fair and carnival was booming away just around the corner. The Family had a good crowd, and Manager Zotos says he doesn't let a little thing like a carnival with a wild man and a snake eater and an Oriental dancer bother him any, but all the same, it takes a pretty good-natured man to smile when he sees so much of the small pocket change of the neighborhood being carried off by a band of fly-by-night showmen. The Family is a neat and cosy little theater, that has been built up from a very small beginning.

Why Giebler Wept.

We trie to stop at the Carroll next, but as that is one of the closed houses on the street, and as a closed theater is the saddest thing in the world to a World correspondent, we passed on, and while the tear drops were still glistening on our long lashes, we ran right into another closed show, the Russell, and had to weep all over again.

A Regular Bee Hive.

The Eagle, managed by that fine team, Frank Root and his wife, was the next stop. This couple are pioneers among South Side exhibitors, and have played the picture game all up and down the line. They started in business in a very small building just one door north of their present theater, and after two or three years built the New Eagle, which is a regular bee hive of activity. Mr. and Mrs. Root are great believers in the short subject program, and they offer a splendid proof in support of the short subjects on the pages of their cash book, where it is set down in black and white for a period of several weeks, that the Eagle box office took in more money with a program of five reels of short plays than it did when six and seven reels, including one long feature, were shown. Mr. and Mrs. Root each give their personal attention to the Eagle, and are regarded as very successful exhibitors.

H. Martin Who Knows Pictures.

After the Eagle we stopped at the Peerless, one of the finest houses on the street. The Peerless is under the management of H. Martin, former manager of the defunct Carroll. This house is almost brand new, and is modern and up to date in every respect, and has a big airdome alongside for the hot weather business. The Peerless is at 1913-15 South Broadway, seats 670 people, and is equipped with every little thing and every big thing that a modern picture theater should have. Five and ten cents admission is charged, and features form the principal part of the program.

After talking with Mr. Martin, who is "some" picture critic, and seems to know the game from water to toothpicks, we ambled down to the Shenandoah, owned and operated and managed and personally looked after by Dr. Fred Demko.

"Doc." Demko's Shanandoah.

This is the first time we had seen "Doc" since that sad day in Chicago when we met him in the Kaiserhof hotel with wrath in his eye and a Western Union communication in his hand, telling him that some light-fingered and heavy-handed parties with intent to commit larceny had entered his airdome and taken possession of his projection machines. Doctor Demko says he has never seen hide nor hair nor sprocket wheel of the two machines, and the police were unable to get any clues that would lead to the arrest of the thieves.

The Shanandoah has been going in for heavy features of late, and "The Spoilers" was booked for two days ahead of our visit. This fellow Demko has always got a good card of some kind up his sleeve, and we think the manner in which he was arranging for "The Spoilers" is worthy of passing along. The Shanandoah is a small house, and to handle a nine-reel feature in the ordinary manner would result in the house being packed for the first performance, and a great many people being disappointed. In order to overcome this, reserved seats were sold for each of the two performances. People holding tickets for the first show were told to come at ten minutes to seven, and those for the second show at twenty minutes after nine. This prevented crowding, confusion and disappointment of the patrons, and gave every one a chance of seeing the feature through from the first to the last reel, and incidently made money for the house, as the first show was entirely sold out, and the bigger per cent. of tickets for the second performance were gone three days before the date of projection. We stayed and talked to "Doc" till his show closed, and then as we rode home on the eleven o'clock car we said to ourselves: "If we ever go into the show business we are going down on South Broadway, where there are so many friendly people, and so many live-wire exhibitors."

Portland News Letter

Casino Manager Arrested.

PORTLAND, Oregon.—H. C. Stevens, manager of the Casino and American theaters, was arrested recently for showing a film that had not been censored. The picture was "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the seventh episode of which was in controversy at the Pantages theater a few weeks ago.

It seems that Mr. Stevens booked the picture from the Metro office in Seattle believing it had all been passed by the Portland board when, as a matter of fact, only seven episodes had been submitted for official inspection. Several Portland exhibitors cited Mr. Stevens' arrest as an instance where the consolidation of exchanges and moving to Seattle worked a hardship on Portland showmen. Had Metro been located here, the exhibitors said, the exchange would have taken care of the censoring, removing the burden from the exhibitor's shoulders.

Mrs. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, requested the police to ascertain if the serial was being run in the city and an officer reported it to be showing at the American. The censor secretary viewed the picture at the theater, discovered that it was chapter eight and that it had not been censored. She called an officer and Mr. Stevens was arrested.

At the municipal court, Mr. Stevens pleaded guilty to the technical charge of showing a picture without official sanction and received a lecture in lieu of a fine. Mrs. Colwell stated to the court that she thought Mr. Stevens had not violated the ordinance knowingly or wilfully and suggested to the city attorney that the case should not be vigorously prosecuted.

Screeners to Dance.

Portland, Ore.—Thanksgiving eve is scheduled as the date for the "Movie Ball," the initial dance of the Portland Screen Club. This organization is an offshoot of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association. F. M. Simonton, of the Standard Feature Film Company, is the chairman in charge of the festivities and he plans to introduce many terpsichorean novelties heretofore unknown to Portland.

Items from Bend, Oregon.

Bend, Oregon.—F. A. Perin has taken over the Bend theater from Catlow and Donner. Mr. Perin formerly conducted the Savoy theater at Eugene, Oregon.

L. C. Rudow, Dream theater, recently made a trip to Portland to purchase the balance of his equipment for the new Dream theater here which is about completed. Pete Sabo supplied him with a new Power's 6 B.

Two Record Breaking Shows.

Portland, Ore.—It is befitting that the two most popular shows in Portland in months should be given a send-off to demonstrate that the photoplay fans in the Rose City are not dead but merely waiting for good programs to bring them out.

One of the shows was Mary Pickford in "Less Than the Dust." The bill was a knock-out. It stood 'em up from noon until closing and out in the rain part of the time. The Columbia's girl ushers were dressed in Hindu costumes and the men attaches of the house were regaled as British soldiers with white helmets. Manager E. J. Myrick personally worked on the floor and had his hands full with the crowds.

At the Star, formerly the Pickford, Beatrice Michelena held the boards in "The Unwritten Law." The Star management had arranged an elaborate lobby for the occasion and standing room was at a premium at each of the seven days of the picture's run.

Universal Exchange Is Thriving.

Portland, Oregon.—The Film Supply Company of Oregon, handling the Universal product and Bluebird Blue Bird films, is a decidedly active exchange these days. In the absence of General Manager Gus Metzger to Seattle, Sol Baum, who directs the destiny of Bluebirds in the Pacific Northwest, is making things hum. He reports that a big campaign is being arranged to exploit "The Eagle's Wings," which will be distributed through Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana from the Portland office.

Newcomer Is Well Received.

Portland, Oregon.—P. N. Mendelsohn, a new man in the film game was a recent visitor in Portland, bringing with him "The Unwritten Law," which he is handling in this territory. He was formerly in the wholesale jewelry business. This is Mr. Mendelsohn's first picture and Portland is the second city in which he has played it. He was highly gratified with the business it did at the Star. He had previously played the picture in Seattle.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

Walla Walla, Wash.—H. C. Tilley has sold the Dime theater to J. H. McDonald.

Portland, Oregon.—E. A. Fleck, who conducts the Peninsula theater, has taken over the Mutual from Harry Hiatt. Mr. Fleck recently purchased the building housing the Mutual.

Portland, Ore.—The Standard Feature Film Company has become the representative for the American Standard M. P. Corp. and will handle that concern's split reel educational and scenics in this territory.

Portland, Ore.—Among the visitors in Film Row were: Fred Mercy, who controls the picture situation in North Yakima, Wash.; Doc, S' C. Crews, Liberty theater, Walla Walla; O. Phelps, Liberty, Hillsboro, Ore.; Dr. H. H. Owens, Wigwam, Oakland, Ore.; H. G. Rosebaum, Artcraft, Seattle, Jack Lannon, Greater Feature Film Co., Seattle.

San Francisco Newslets.

The Edwin H. Flagg Scenic Company, of Los Angeles, has opened a branch in the Pantages Building, 55 Market street.

Irving C. Ackerman, of Ackerman & Harris, owners of the Hippodrome circuit, left recently for the Northwest, and while away will attend the opening of the new house at Tacoma, Wash.

G. A. Metcalfe is furnishing the equipment for the operating room of the Sequoia theater at Sacramento, which is being remodeled, and is also placing a projection machine in the Belmont Military Academy at Belmont, Cal.

California Briefs.

Paso Robles, Cal.—The Bell theater is being improved by the addition of a new front and an additional projection machine will be installed by manager Wilbur Walker.

Templeton, Cal.—F. Clausen is remodeling his theater and has removed the stage to the other end of the building.

Angels Camp, Cal.—J. G. French, of Sonora, has taken over the moving picture house formerly conducted by J. L. Davis.

Santa Barbara, Cal.—The Argus theater has been purchased by C. G. Stinson.

Woodland, Cal.—The Rex theater is being remodeled by R. F. Dubon.

Napa, Cal.—A moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 1200 is to be erected by Fisher & Arens, formerly of San Francisco.

"Intolerance" Breaks Record at the Columbia

Engagement for Four Weeks for Picture in San Francisco Has Been Extended and Road Shows Rerouted—Full Houses All Along.

[illegible] Church, 1307 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—All former records for attendance at moving picture entertainments at the Columbia theater have been broken at the present engagement of the D. W. Griffith masterpiece, "Intolerance," and since practically all of the large productions have had their local premier in this house a record has been set for Northern California. It was intended originally to show this film here for but four weeks, but the interest in it proved to be so great that arrangements were made to re-route several road attractions and to extend the engagement until December 3. The last performance on this date will mark the one hundred and eleventh one and from present indications it would seem that the film could be profitably shown much longer.

When asked a question in regard to the figures for attendance manager Daly stated that the capacity of the house was about fifteen hundred, and that it had been filled at practically every performance. An orchestra of thirty pieces, and a chorus of [illegible] voices form a feature of the attraction, and in all sixty-three persons are connected with the presentation of the film. As soon as the local engagement comes to an end the production is to be taken to the cities of the Northwest.

Empress Theater to Be Picture House.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Empress theater on Market street, which has been featuring moving pictures very strongly of late as a part of the vaudeville bill offered, is to be remodeled at an expense of $30,000, an organ costing a similar sum to be installed, and the house transformed into a home for high-class photoplay attractions, according to manager Sidney Grauman. This matter has been under consideration for some time, following the great success met with in presenting "Purity" and other attractions, and the decision was reached when "The Libertine" packed the house for a week. D. J. Grauman, father of Sidney Grauman, is now in New York and has sent word that he is making arrangements for securing a number of fine films for this house. One of the interesting bookings recently made is that of the "Lure of Venus," a local production about which there was a legal tangle in the courts a short time ago.

All Star Feature News.

San Francisco, Cal.—When Sol L. Lesser, of the All Star Feature Distributors, returned recently from New York, he not only brought with him the rights to "War Brides," but those for "Civilization" as well, and is now looking over the field preparatory to offering these as 25, 50 and 75 cent attractions.

E. M. Asher, one of the most popular young men in the film business, is again with this concern as special representative, and will assist in handling the big attractions now on hand. Leon D. Netter, formerly manager of the local office of the All Star, but who is now in business in the East, is to visit San Francisco during the Christmas holidays, and his many friends are waiting eagerly to welcome him to his former home.

M. Rosenberg was a recent visitor here from Seattle, and made arrangements with Mr. Lesser to take over the Oregon and Washington rights to "The Libertine."

Many Exhibitors Visit the City.

San Francisco, Cal.—An unusually large number of exhibitors have been here of late from outside points and all report that business in the country districts is showing a great improvement. Among those noted during the past few days have been S. J. Greenwood, of the Theater Tulare, Tulare, Cal., who came up in his auto and remained for a week; Mrs. M. [illegible] Pettengill, of Pettengill & Pettengill, Eureka; W. S. Webster, of the Strand theaters of Woodland and Dunsmuir; A. C. Chamberlin, of Madera; Walter Evans, of Dinuba, who bought a new piano and new projection equipment for the Mission theater, and Mrs. Rachael M. Black, manager of the Strand theater, Los Gatos.

Tivoli Offers Music Festival.

San Francisco, Cal.—The management of the T. & D. Tivoli theater has invited the general public to its beautiful photoplay house on Thanksgiving morning to enjoy a sacred concert. This will last for one hour and will be free to all. The big pipe organ will be played by organists of renown and in addition there will be vocal selections.

New Manager for United.

San Francisco, Cal.—A. E. Beck, formerly booker for the United Film Service, was recently appointed manager of the local branch. President M. A. Levy, who has been at the Seattle branch for the past three weeks is expected back at an early date.

Much Developing and Printing Work Done.

San Francisco, Cal.—The developing and printing plant of Edw. H. Kemp, in the Commercial building, has been extremely busy of late, some regular studio work is being handled in addition to industrial films. The machine department has also been active, projection equipment having been shipped recently to the Auburn theater, Auburn, Cal., the Grand theater, Santa Cruz, as well as to other houses.

"Paramount Girl" Assists at House Opening.

Oakland, Cal.—Miss Anita King, the "Paramount Girl," came up from Los Angeles this week and assisted at the opening of the magnificent 3,500 seat theater of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, which will be described in full in the Moving Picture World. The event was of more than ordinary interest to her as she operated the steam shovel which broke ground for this house last year. Miss King is becoming known here as the official theater opener.

Film Stars in Person at Imperial.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Imperial theater rarely ever departs from its policy of a weekly change, but the recent engagement of "The Soul of Kura-San" proved to be so successful that this production was retained for a second week. In addition the services of Miss Myrtle Stedman, Sessue Hayakawa and Tsuru Aoki were secured, and these stars have been appearing in person both afternoons and evenings. To further accommodate those desiring to see this production, performances were started by manager Partington at 11 o'clock in the morning, instead of after twelve o'clock.

Organ Recital Delights Crowd.

Sacramento, Cal.—The recital which marked the formal opening of the new $12,000 organ at the T & D theater called out a large attendance, prominent musicians and music lovers of the city being among the number. It was an important musical event.

The organ is claimed to be the largest in Northern California and consists of 2,800 pipes, ranging from the most minute to the largest, with 32 stops.

George Walsh, a prominent organist of San Francisco, rendered the program.

A Big Change in Five Years

Pioneer of Local Residence Theater Business Tells Seattle World Correspondent of the Difference that He Finds— Neighborhood Janitors as Press Agents— Some Original Methods.

By S. J. Anderson, Benvenuto, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—It is interesting to hear George W. Ring, of the Society theater on Broadway, talk about the difference in running a residence theater five years ago, when he opened the first one in Seattle, and in running one today.

"The problem then," said Mr. Ring, "was not how to get the people there, but what to do with them when they came. Why, I have stood here night after night when I first opened this house, and, looking out over the standing crowd, said desperately. 'I wish they'd stop coming. I don't know what I'm going to do with them.' There's nothing like that now, though. You have to go out into the highways and byways after them these days."

And Mr. Ring does that, literally. His theater is situated in a high-class, close-in residential district, and the proximity of two or three other good theaters limits the territory of his patronage; yet the fact that two people have not missed one of the four changes a week, since he opened the Society theater five years ago, and that many others seldom ever miss a change, while new ones are constantly forming the habit, shows that Mr. Ring has not only treated them properly when they came, but that he has got them when he went out after them. He has introduced several innovations in residential theater advertising to Seattle exhibitors, some of these being ideas he took from exhibitors in other parts of the country, while some of them were entirely original. He was the first manager of a theater of this class to use twenty-four sheet stands. The ones he uses are posters with the announcement of the play, the date and the theater below. They are placed along all the main car lines of the city. Mr. Ring says that he has tried newspaper advertising, but finds that it does not pay. The larger ads of the downtown theaters so overshadow the suburban manager's little inch or two that the people simply do not see it. What he considers his most effectual means of steady advertising is his little house organ, called "Society Weekly News." In this, besides articles about the pictures and announcements of the programs for about three weeks ahead, there are little personal items about patrons of the theater, which Mr. Ring has found pleases them.

Finds Janitors Are Good Press Agents.

There are a number of apartment houses in the immediate vicinity of The Society, and the manager has discovered that the janitors are excellent advertising agents. He takes around a complimentary ticket to the new janitor, also some heralds and a few copies of "Society Weekly News." The janitor or janitress, whichever it happens to be, distributes the papers, comes to the theater, and, ten to one, becomes a regular patron and usually brings several others each time.

But Mr. Ring's absolutely original plan, by which he literally, as we said, brings them in from the highways and byways, was announced in the current issue of his house organ. It is an offer to bring to the theater on rainy nights in his new five-passenger auto anyone who will call him up and ask him: "If you don't live at Georgetown or Ballard or some place equally as far away," those being very far out suburbs. He has not had a chance to try out his plan, because Seattle has had such an unusual spell of good weather, but he thinks he can work it all right on account of the crowds coming so much earlier than they did before the dry law went into effect. This is a change which nearly all the theater managers have noticed, and they account for it by the lack of life and stir on the downtown streets.

Mr. Ring started in the motion picture business in 1909 with two theaters in Portland. The next year he went to San Pedro, Los Angeles' harbor suburb, and, with a partner, bought three of the four motion picture houses in the town. They closed one of the three and ran the other two very successfully, until Mr. Ring sold out and came to Seattle in 1911. He first built the Broadway theater just a block from where he is now doing business, then a few months later he built the Society and ran both of them for a time. Finally he closed the Broadway, which was the first residence theater opened in Seattle, and has given his entire attention for about five years to the Society, except for one season when he toured the Northwest with a picture of his own. When he opened the Society he introduced several innovations learned in the South. This was the first theater in Seattle to have two motion picture machines, and the first to have loge seats for which more than ten cents was charged. The Society is a very pretty house, well lighted and very well ventilated. It seats 450 and has a pipe organ of very rich tone and volume. It undoubtedly deserves its reputation as the leading residential theater in the city.

Changes in Branch of G. A. Metcalfe Co.

Seattle, Wash.—W. L. Stern, sales manager for G. A. Metcalfe Company, is in Seattle for a stay of several weeks. He expresses himself as highly pleased with the business that is coming in from the Northwest territory in response to the service given to exhibitors here. Mr. Stern is extremely optimistic at the outlook. He says that the Seattle theaters are the finest on the Pacific Coast, but that he expects many of the smaller cities to install more modern equipment in the next few months. He brings with him several new agencies, including special electric novelty signs, photographic studio lamps, and new box office devices. Several additions have been made to the staff in the Seattle store. E. L. Shwetzer has been appointed branch manager to succeed G. L. Waring, who has gone into business for himself. Dr. P. Metcalfe will join the sales force, and additions have been made to the office force. Mr. Shwetzer is a pioneer motion picture man, having been engaged in every branch of the business, including his own supply house in California, also film exchange, traveling road shows, and operating.

Alaska Exhibitor's Machines on Last Boat.

Seattle, Wash.—There was quite a lot of excitement down at the waterfront last week, when the G. A. Metcalfe people, in response to repeated wires from Robert J. Peratovich of Klawock, Alaska, were making every effort to get a Powers Cameragraph off to him on the last boat to sail for the far North this winter. At last the machine was safely placed in the well-loaded ship, and Mr. Peratovich will be able to run his show this season.

Chinese Chamber of Commerce Uses Pictures.

Seattle, Wash.—To entertain one of their prominent visiting committees recently the Chinese Chamber of Commerce of this city resorted to pictures. The operator informs us that the lecture which accompanied the pictures would have been very interesting if he could have understood it.

International's Temporary Quarters.

Seattle, Wash.—International Film Service, Inc., has opened an office in Seattle with temporary quarters at 1214½ Fourth avenue. As soon as the new exchange building is finished International will move into it.

Hugh Rennie Resigns.

Seattle, Wash.—Hugh Rennie, Northwest manager for World Film Corp., handed in his resignation this week to John W. Drum, World's coast division manager, who is in the city. Mr. Rennie will probably go to New York and the World forces there. Mr. Drum will remain in Seattle until he gets the office going smoothly with a new manager. Film men and exhibitors alike will be sorry to see Mr. Rennie leave the city, for he has made many friends during his six months in Seattle. Previous to coming here in May he was manager at Salt Lake City for a year.

Tacoma Exhibitor's Thanksgiving Fund Week

Colonial Theater to Devote Its Entire Net Profits for One Whole Week to Local Charity—Patrons Help in the Programs.

TACOMA, Wash.—H. T. Moore, manager of the Colonial, Tacoma's leading motion picture theater, struck upon a big idea when he conceived the notion of devoting all of one week's profits to the poor of the city. The idea was big both in a human and in a business way. Then he set to work to get results in proportion to the inspiration. In the first place he selected for this week's feature not one of his less important, less expensive films, but one of his best, and certainly the most expensive drawing card on his season program, i. e. Mary Pickford's "Less Than the Dust." Then he went to the leading charitable organizations of the city, viz., the Anti-Tuberculosis League, The Y. W. C. A., and an organization from the Catholic churches and one from the Protestant churches, and put the matter up to them of helping to make his Thanksgiving Fund Week a success. All of them were very glad to co-operate with Mr. Moore, with the result that several unusual attractions were added to the daily programs, and the event was advertised more effectually than any amount of business publicity would have accomplished. The Orpheus Club, a musical organization of the best voices in the city, donated their services for the opening Sunday; the Reid French Piano Company sent a boy soprano to sing at one day's performances; a society girl with a fine contralto voice furnished special music for another day; and another society woman, a soprano, for still another day. Mr. Moore also arranged that a good speaker, in the person of a one time actor, should address each audience, explaining to the people that the management wished them to feel that this was their own plan for making the poor families of the town happy on Thanksgiving Day, and that if it was a success they were to feel that they had done it.

That it is a success is already assured, though the week is little more than half gone, so well assured that Mr. Moore and the committees working with him have decided that to each of the 53 destitute families that have been reported to them they can give not only the Thanksgiving basket, the only gift they first planned to send, but shoes and clothes for the children as well.

Personals.

Seattle, Wash.—A. C. Anderson, of the Apollo, Tacoma, was downtown this week for the first time since an operation on his knee. He has been convalescing at the home of his mother in this city, and will not be able to return to his regular work for some weeks, but film men in Seattle were glad to see once more his smiling face and hear his good-natured laugh.

L. H. Sutton, of Seattle, is leaving shortly for Hamilton, Mont., to open the Opera House with pictures. This is the first time the house has been used as a picture theater.

Ralph R. Ruffner, manager of Spokane's Liberty theater, was in Seattle this week making new bookings and investing in new motion picture machines. He bought two of the latest model Baird projectors from the G. A. Metcalfe store.

L. L. Hyer, manager of the Liberty theater, Monroe, Wash., and J. G. Ferguson, of the Wenatchee theater, Wenatchee, Wash., were also in town purchasing new equipment in the way of screens, and also visiting the exchanges.

E. A. Lupert, manager of the Dream theater, Aberdeen, and George Hayes, of the Hayes theater, Everett, were also visitors at the exchanges.

BRITISH COLUMBIA NOTES.

Starting a Serial Right.

Winnipeg, Man.—E. F. Seammans, manager of the Strand theater, has just gone a step farther than any other local house in getting a large number of people interested in the first episodes of a serial. He is running "The Yellow Menace" at the Strand, and during the week in which the third episode was being shown, free exhibitions of the first two episodes were given on three successive days, from 11.30 A. M. to 12.45, and from 5.00 to 6.15 P. M. Thus many additional people got the start of the story, and it is expected that a large portion of them will continue to follow it.

New Theater Companies.

Victoria, B. C.—The Western Theater Company, with its principal place of business at Vancouver, has been incorporated for $20,000.

The Alldra Theater Company, Limited, will open a new play house at Fernie, B. C. The company has just been incorporated.

Frank McQueen Opens the Garland.

Edmonton, Alberta.—The Garland Theater, on Jasper avenue, which has been closed for some time, has just been reopened by Frank McQueen, a well known local man. The house has been entirely renovated and redecorated, and a new projection machine has been installed. Mr. Garland is using Bluebird and Red Feather productions, with music furnished by a five-piece orchestra.

Disagreement Among Censors

Manitoba-Saskatchewan Joint Board Now Disjointed—Two Provinces Can No Longer Agree on Censoring Film—Will Now Be Guided by Simultaneous But Independent Judgments by Two Boards.

By E. C. Thomas, 321 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—The Manitoba-Saskatchewan "joint censoring board," making a specialty of deleting anything resembling a point in a moving picture film, has become disjointed.

Under the arrangements previously in force, there have been two appointees to the censor board from Manitoba, and only one from Saskatchewan, and all censoring for the two provinces has been done in this city. Recently, however, there have been complaints from officials at Regina that the censorship standards established by the board were not satisfactory to the Saskatchewan government, which thought that the lines should be more tightly drawn. It was at length decided that definite action must be taken, and Hon. J. A. Calder came to Winnipeg to confer with Provincial Treasurer Edward Brown.

At the result of their discussion, it is announced that the joint financial arrangement between the two provinces, providing for an equal division of any profits or deficits resulting from censoring, has been severed, and each province will hereafter do its own censoring. A plan to establish a separate board for Saskatchewan at Regina was considered, but it was decided that in this way needless expense would be incurred. Thus the work will continue to be done at Winnipeg, both boards sitting together at the government's new projection rooms in the Parliament Buildings. Under this plan the films will have to be run over only once for the two provinces. A new representative for Saskatchewan will be appointed, giving each board two members.

Alberta, which for some time has accepted the decisions of the joint board, although it was not actually a party to the inter-provincial arrangements, must now prepare to do its own censoring on a more extensive scale, or decide which of the other boards it will follow.

National Theater Improved.

Winnipeg, Man.—Without closing the house except during the usual hours, M. J. Williamson has completed extensive improvements and a complete renovation of the National theater. The foyer has been completely changed in appearance, having been entirely redecorated by Edward Du Bois, a well known artist in this line. The walls have been finished in cream and gold, and the woodwork in white. Draperies of old rose silk and velour add a touch of softness to the general color scheme. Dainty mirrors in gold frames are placed conveniently in the panels, and at one end of the foyer a rest room for ladies has been provided. The floors have been covered with carpet of a soft red tone. Additional work is now in progress on the installation of a new ventilating plant.

Interesting Situation in Alberta.

Vancouver, B. C.—H. J. Allen, manager of the western head office of the Famous Players, located in Calgary, Alberta, was a recent visitor to this city, spending a few days with Manager Ben Sosken of the local branch.

Mr. Allen reports a peculiar condition in Calgary and the prairie provinces generally. While there is general prosperity in that section, he states, the country is so sparsely settled that there are not enough people to insure full houses at all the theaters, even were the entire theater-going population to attend regularly. The population of practically all points in western Canada has diminished very appreciably within the past two years, both on account of the war and from other causes. The only solution seems to rest in some plan by which the proportion of theater-goers may be increased or else to raise the admission price, which is now fifteen cents in the better houses. Mr. Allen informed the World representative that Calgary exhibitors are now seriously considering a concerted raise to twenty-five cents.

Manager Milligan's Street Car Ads.

Calgary, Alberta.—Manager Milligan of the Pantages theatre here recently evolved an advertising idea that set the whole town wondering and talking, and finally gave tremendous publicity to the Pathe serial, "The Shielding Shadow," which was about to start at the house. As shown in the photograph, the advertising was painted on the glass of street car vestibules, the design and lettering showing up white against a black background in the daytime, while at night, with the interior of the cars illuminated, the white portions were transparent. When the advertising first appeared, only the staring eyes and the hand holding the dagger were used, and after the curiosity of the people had been worked up, the name was sprung. As the Pantages is the only house in town using this serial, the name of the theater is not mentioned, as it was decided that the very fact of its being omitted would cause more questions and general conversation in regard to the picture.

Winnipeg Laborites Want Better Operators

Trades and Labor Council Asks for Stricter Examinations Into the Qualifications of Would-Be Machine Operators.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—A delegation from the Trades and Labor Council, headed by R. A. Rigg, M. P. P., recently appealed to Hon. Edward Brown to take steps to see that the qualifications for moving picture operators are raised to a higher standard. They declared that it was highly dangerous for unskilled men to do this work, and announced themselves in favor of the institution of rigid examination of applicants for licenses.

Mr. Brown announced himself as in favor of anything tending toward safety, and took the matter under advisement.

It is suggested that this move may have some connection with the government's proposal to teach the art of operating to returned soldiers, with the idea of preventing the granting of licenses to them until they are thoroughly efficient.

For Individual Towels and Cups.

Winnipeg, Man.—A change of considerable importance to Manitoba exhibitors is involved in a set of new regulations just put in force by the provincial board of health. These provide that hereafter no public drinking cups or common towels shall be maintained in any public place, or in any place where a number of people congregate. Individual towels and cups (which may be of paper) must be supplied, or there must be none at all.

Understanding as I did, the tremendous success Exhibitors in every part of the world had with "ABSINTHE" and realizing the even greater possibilities of this big winner now during the war, when all eyes are centered abroad; showing the City of Paris, surrounding territory, fighting trenches, artillery action, etc., I made the UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO. an offer for negative and complete territorial rights. It was accepted and now "ABSINTHE" belongs to Yours Truly, KING BAGGOT.

Those who have still to book it can rest their faith in the facts that HERBERT BRENON directed "ABSINTHE" while Leah Baird and myself played the leads. Herbert Brenon produced "Neptune's Daughter," "War Brides," "A Daughter of the Gods," and other huge successes.

I have spent a young fortune working it up to the minute, inserting new titles, new scenes, etc., so that it now outclasses the original picture completely. "ABSINTHE" as I have prepared it is a tremendous production.

You don't have to gamble on "ABSINTHE." It has drawn hundreds of thousands of dollars into the box offices of thousands of theatres all over the world, and is now ready to draw more money than it ever did. I own the picture, complete State Rights, and will make interesting terms for State Rights buyers for quick action.

EXTRA SPECIAL: I have had prepared the classiest advertising ever put out. Stuff for State Rights Buyers with such a kick in the copy as you have never seen. Write, wire, phone or call for terms, territory, information, etc. Address me personally—4th floor—1600 Broadway, New York.

King Baggot

P.S. For a limited time I will arrange to appear in person in the large theatres for State Rights Buyers who buy "ABSINTHE." More information on this "APPEARANCE IN PERSON" proposition on application.

"ABSINTHE" in its new dress will be without question the Biggest State Rights proposition of the Season—King Baggot.

ESSANAY.

IN A LOOKING GLASS (Two Parts—Dec. 12).—The cast: Roger Pitney (Richard C. Travers); Eunice (Neal Craig); "Double-Entry Dan" (Ernest Maupain).

Roger Pitney, the stove works king, never employed a man when he could hire a girl in his office. But when the story opens, old Roger is dead and young Roger an efficiency expert is "raising cain" because the girls use too much time primping. He discharges the head bookkeeper and employs a man, who develops to be a notorious crook.

Eunice Roger's stenographer, while primping on the sly, sees the crook through her looking glass opening the safe's combination, then letting a telegram he has hastily scribbled. Using her glass, Eunice reads the message, which reveals a plot to rob the safe. She secretly notifies the police and the new head bookkeeper is arrested as he opens the safe. The efficiency expert appreciates the efficiency of his employe's looking glass so much that he returns to his father's plan and then weds Eunice.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 20 (Dec. 13).—Inside stuff on the election is exposed by Canimated Nooz. Staff correspondents interview William Jynx Bryan and Blub Gumdrop, Alaskan merchant. A ukelele orchard in Hawaii, showing the natives picking the new crop of young guitars is one of the lovely travel pictures. Also Max Dinder, noted European comedian at Essanay, is shown wearing his forty-six trunks of clothes. An obliging volcano erupts for the Canimated camera, and an educational—not to be missed—feature on the proper manner to devour grapefruit is included. The beautiful scene about Long Beach, Cal., make up the other half of this offering.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

MASTER OF HER SOUL (Three Parts—Dec. 8).—Robert Maxwell, an ambitious real estate broker, and Wilson Howard, a young physician, are friends. Both are in love with Alice Duncan, who chooses Robert. Wilson, dejected, decides to accept an offer to assist an old physician on a lepers' island. Robert and Alice are married. Robert, in the meantime, has accumulated great wealth and is so eager to increase it that he has no time for his wife and son. The son is taken ill and dies, and Alice is heartbroken over the loss and also the seeming indifference of her husband.

Charlotte, an adventuress, and her lover-accomplice, Duval, plan to "get" Robert, who is an easy victim. He neglects his wife and his home. His wife receives a box of flowers which were intended for the adventuress, and she decides to leave him. She boards a steamer bound for the Orient, and leaves no trace of her whereabouts. During the voyage the vessel on which she is comes into the path of a typhoon and is wrecked. Alice and three men escape on a raft which brings them to the shore of the lepers' island. Wilson is amazed when he comes to look after his charges to find that the unconscious woman is Alice, the one he loves.

A few days later Robert reads an account of the wreck in the paper, and believes his wife dead. He then realizes his love for her and their son. Wilson nurses Alice back to health in Dr. Myers' home, where they discover their love for each other, but fate brings Robert, who is now a physical wreck, to the same island, where he is discovered by Wilson. Wilson realizes that Robert stands in the way of the happiness which he and Alice has dreamed and talked of, but does his best to bring him back to health. Despite the care of Wilson and Dr. Myers, Robert dies. Wilson tells Alice of the death of her husband. They both realize that nothing now stands between them, and they plan to get married.

THE GUILTY ONES (Dec. 7).—Babe and Kate, two ex-convicts and former underworld pals, have drifted apart since their prison days. Kate has reformed and is now a reporter in a distant city. Babe, overflowing with ideas of how to separate the unsuspected citizens of their hard earned cash, comes to the city. Creating some comment by his free way of dispensing coin, the newspaper sends Kate to interview the illustrious stranger. When Kate recognizes Babe, she almost faints, but Babe, by his suave speech, shows Kate that if she will join him in his scheme they will reap a fortune. The two insert a notice in the paper to the effect that the man who is so anxious to conceal a certain questionable deal had better pay hush money at once to Babe or his arrest will soon follow the exposure.

The result of the notice is extraordinary, as it appears that every man in town has pulled off a questionable deal. Just as the two crooks are about to leave the city with their ill-earned gain, their Nemesis appears in the form of an amateur detective, who has overheard their plans. Babe and Kate are arrested.

A RARE BOARDER (Dec. 8).—Pokes, a traveling salesman for cheap diamond rings, visits the city where his pal Jabbs, the well-known actor, is playing a week's engagement at the local theater. Jabbs' specialty is female impersonation, while Pokes' speed is to woo and inflame the hearts of all damsels that cross his path. In the boarding house where he is staying, he finds several of the fair sex, and thinking that he will help push the sale of his bum jewelry, he begins to lay siege to the affections of all of them, but at different intervals. To each and all of them he presents a sparkler and a photo of himself with the inscription "To my future wife" on the back of them. Each girl considers herself the fiancee of the charming Pokes, and secretly laughs at her less fortunate fellow roomers.

However, when May discovers in Nellie's room the photo of Pokes adorning her dresser and on the back of the photo the same inscription as Pokes had written on the one he had presented to her, there is an awful scrimmage. The fight attracts the attention of the other roomers, and after truce has been declared, all discover that Pokes has been trifling with them. The girls all join against the unlucky Pokes and the only thing that saves his life is his promise to marry the girl his mother chooses. In desperation he implores Jabbs to impersonate his mother, and this the actor consents to do. So clad in full regalia he accompanies Pokes to the boarding house where the two deceivers are getting away with the bluffing until Jabbs is unmasked by the lawyer who is acting in the interests of the girls. This double deception at the hands of Pokes makes the fury of the women break all bounds; but in the end the two conspirators manage to escape from destruction with the solemn assurance to each other of "NEVER AGAIN."

TWISTED TRAILS (Three Parts—Dec. 11).—The cast: Tom Snow (Tom Mix); Sunshine (Bessie Eyton); Martha (Eugenie Besserer); Old Doc Snow (Al W. Filson); Craig Keyes (Will Machin); Luke Fisher (Pat Chrisman); Brad Foster (Sid Jordan). Written by Edwin Ray Coffin. Directed by Tom Mix.

Luke Fisher, a rascally sheriff, and Brad Foster, his deputy, are in reality cattle rustlers. To protect themselves they endeavor to fasten the guilt on Tom Snow, foreman of the Three "A" ranch. When they come to arrest Tom, he drives them off at the muzzle of a gun and makes his escape. After a daring ride horse and rider dash across a narrow footing which bridges a chasm. Should the horse make a misstep, the rider would have been plunged to a horrible death on the rocks hundreds of feet below.

Wade, proprietor of the "Haven Delight" saloon, has adopted a pretty girl whom he calls Sunshine. Craig Keyes, a gambler at the Haven Delight saloon, resolves to marry the girl but when she refuses him he endeavors to overpower her. Finally, after a sensational struggle, she escapes into a driving storm. As Sunshine wanders in the rain she encounters Tom Snow. He cares for her and then it is that the two come to love each other.

The sheriff and his deputy, fearful of detection, leave the country and Tom is again free. That it is not to be a marriage of convenience, but one of love, is proved at the wedding, by means of old tin-types, the two are led to believe that they are brothers and sister. As they sit horror-stricken, Martha, the housekeeper who owns the tin-types, tells them that their belief is a wrong one.

Meanwhile, Craig Keyes, who has also been [illegible] by the tin-types, [illegible] Sunshine [illegible] Martha [illegible] Tom [illegible] Sunshine [illegible] Martha [illegible] Keyes and that she, Martha, is Tom's mother. In the meantime, Craig Keyes, the gambler, has followed Sunshine to her home, and outside he overhears Martha's story. Conscience-stricken, he resolves to renounce all relationship, and to leave the country.

THE ROAD TO FAME (Dec. 16).—The cast: Joe Daniels (Robyn Adair); Mary Scott (Virginia Kirtley); Marsh Strong (E. J. Bradley); Nelson Scott (Leo Pierson). Written by F. M. Willis. Produced by Burton L. King.

Joe Daniels leaves the old home for the city, where he hopes to become an accomplished violinist. Mary Scott, his sweetheart, writes him encouraging letters. After months in the city, Joe's music is forgotten in the pursuit of pleasure. He falls into evil ways and consorts with evil companions. He finds deception the earliest way, and he writes Mary occasionally, telling her of his success in music.

Finally Mary and her father come to the city, where the father is paid a large sum of money for his farm. Friends of Joe plan to rob the aged farmer, and Joe is deputized to obtain the money. He does not know the man he is to rob is the father of his sweetheart of long ago. He meets Mary face to face, and after a struggle obtains the money. Strong, Joe's pal, asks the latter to divide the rich haul, but when Joe refuses, Strong shoots him. When the police arrive, the girl, in order to shield the man she loved, tells them that Joe died trying to save the money.

THE GOOD WOMAN (Two parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: "Kansas" Reeves (Wm. V. Mong); Joseph Allen (Harry M. Holden); Bessie (Nellie Allen); Pratt (George Pearce); Tim (Frank Whitson); Molly (Annabelle Maurese). Written and produced by Wm. V. Mong.

"Kansas" Reeves, a born gambler, is informed that a certain gambler named Pratt has been winning from all the miners, and he decides to return to the mining town. On the way back he hears the scream of a woman. Upon investigating he finds that a woman by the name of Bessie is being attacked by wolves. He rescues her and she tells him that she has been deserted by her husband and that she is a good woman. As a matter of fact she had been living with the man, Tim, who in a drunken fight had left her to shift for herself.

Kansas takes her with him to the city and his announcement that she is a pure woman is scoffed at by all until Kansas' gun enforces acceptance of his word—if not belief. Especially is it scorned by Molly, who formerly has been a sweetheart of Kansas. For some time Bessie remains at the mining town and soon has the respect of all the men—but the enmity of the women. Pratt the gambler, who has been winning all the money, is bested by Kansas. Then one day Joseph Allen, a miner, comes and Bessie is introduced to him. He falls in love with her and she promises to marry him. Kansas has by this time discovered that he is in love with Bessie, but does not give her the note when he finds that she is to marry Allen, but he asks her when she will get her divorce. Then she has to confess the truth to him.

Some time later Tim arrives in town and, seeing Bessie, starts making love to her. This is seen by Mollie and she so informs the men in the saloon. Kansas is angered and goes to Bessie's cabin, where he finds her in a struggle with Tim, whom he finally compels to leave. She tells Kansas that this is the man with whom she lived. While they are struggling, Allen comes in. Kansas tells him that he has just driven away a man who insulted Bessie and then he leaves the two together.

THE TAINT OF FEAR (Two parts—Dec. 16). The cast: Mother (Lydia Titus); Father (Joseph Girard); Their Son (Allan Holubar); Tom (Charles Oelze); Captain Harding (George Pearce. Written and produced by Allan J. Holubar.

dren. He laughs at him before the men and asks him where his knitting is. Bob's best friend in the regiment is his horse. Orders come for the Seventh to locate Lopez and his guerilla band. Tom, the sergeant, is ordered to take a squad and reconnoitre. While they are encamped that night, they are fired upon from a distance. The company is turned out, and they take up their position on a hill.

Bob is seized with fear. He cowers behind his horse. Finally he mounts and rides off desperately, away from the fighting. The Mexicans and the Americans keep up a running fight. At last the Americans enter a town. The inhabitants flee before them, and hide in their huts. The Americans follow them and are soon surrounded by a superior force of guerillas.

Bob at last dismounts and hides in some bushes. Some Mexicans steal up on him as he stands with his face buried in the saddle, and strike him down from behind. When he recovers he finds that his manhood has returned to him. He rides for help at top speed. Then he leads the American soldiers to the town where their comrades are besieged. Bob is mortally wounded and falls from his horse. It is Tom who supports him. He dies. Then we see a vision of his father and mother, watching for their boy. His ghostly shade appears before them, and they hide their grief in each other's arms.

RED FEATHER.

THE MORALS OF HILDA (Five Parts—Dec. 11).—The cast: August (Frank Whitson); Hilda (Gretchen Lederer); Harris Grail (Richard Morris); Mrs. Grace (Adele Farrington); Marion (Lois Wilson). Scenario by A. W. Coleway. Produced by Lloyd B. Carleton.

August and Hilda loved each other. To them it was sufficient that they live in each other's company until they had enough money for the wedding. They decide to come to America to make money. August cannot find any work, but at last Hilda secures a position in the home of Harris Grail. Harris Grail and his wife, Esther, are happy in their love, but the one desire of their hearts—a child—is denied them. Esther discovers that to Hilda is to be given this wonderful gift. She questions the girl and learns that Hilda is not married. She turns her from the house, and innocent, ignorant, Hilda cannot see wherein she and August have done wrong. Frightened at what might happen to her through the laws of the new country, Hilda flees from August, and he, not understanding, but accepting her decision, sets sail and is lost at sea.

Hilda's baby is born in a hospital, where she comes in contact with the strange law. The nurses try to force her to tell the name of the father, but Hilda will not disclose it. In the night she steals away with her precious baby. August is not at the cottage and Hilda decides that she will end it all in the sea. It happens that Harris is killed and Esther, longing to join her beloved one, goes to the sea with that in mind. The Gods decide that she shall choose the spot where Hilda has placed her baby in the basket, as a gift to the seas. Esther discovers the baby and takes it to her home. She engages Hilda as the nurse, not knowing the latter is the mother of the child, but Hilda soon leaves her.

A few years later the heart hunger for her child becomes so strong that she returns and discloses the fact of her motherhood to Esther, who, by this time has learned to love the little Steven. By depicting the advantages the child will have by remaining with her, Esther persuades the mother to leave Steven with her.

Years elapse. Steven, now a young man, is running for governor. He is in love with a beautiful girl named Marion. As if by instinct. Steven encourages the idea of legitimatizing all children born without benefit of clergy, using this as one of the planks in his platform. Hilda happens to read this in a newspaper. The old heart-hunger for a glimpse of her boy returns. Esther recognizes her and is overcome. Steven searches the garden and finds Hilda. He then learns from Esther the truth about his parentage. He now feels that he cannot ask Marion's hand in marriage. Hilda disappears, and, search as he will, Steven cannot locate her.

The election comes and Steven is victorious. At the inauguration, the proud Hilda tries once again to catch a glimpse of her son, but she is pushed roughly aside. A crank in the crowd is about to shoot Steven, but the mother, noticing and realizing the intention, intervenes, and receives the shot herself. When Steven learns who she is, and that she has sacrificed her life that he may live, he is strangely touched. She has the happiness of dying in his arms. Marion learns all and tells Steven that she loves him enough to share her life with his.

THE TWO ROADS (Three parts—Dec. 12).—Toby Murdock has used his talents for a career of crime, and has trained his daughter, Linda, to be his assistant. Taplow, a waster, has thrown in his lot with the Murdocks. Together they go out on a job, Linda in boy's clothes. They are discovered. Linda is captured, and the officer sees that she is a girl. She is taken to prison. Toby, at a loss without her, takes up the study of counterfeiting.

Linda meets the prison chaplain, Basil Edgerton, and through his influence she chooses to and a straight life. She returns home, on her release, but only to find her father that she has bonded with the old life. They then found the secret of making gold coins, but he is arrested soon after. Is detectives who have traced him through Linda. Linda flees in all her efforts to lead honest work and kindly goes to the Captain to ask him to release her from her promise of going straight.

The Captain remembers that his aunt in the country has complained that she cannot keep a maid. He has confidence in Linda and offers to offer her the situation. His uncle is Sir Cuthbert Maclaurin who holds office under the government. Sir Cuthbert receives a letter from the prison where Murdock is awaiting trial which informs him that the man has the secret of making gold coins which cannot be detected. He sends for the man, and offers, on behalf of the government to buy the secret of the alloy. He converts the formula into cipher and puts it into his safe. Murdock tells Taplow of the transaction and Taplow determines to steal the formula.

The Chaplain comes to spend his vacation with the MacLaurin. Taplow threatens Linda that he will expose her if she does not bring him the formula. At the same time, the tinker friend of the butler persuades the servant to try to get him a glimpse of the formula. Through a false key, the butler removes it from the safe. Linda steals out to meet Taplow and refuse his request. Taplow enters the house and the butler shoots him fatally. Basil sees Linda stealing out of the house and thinks she is going back to her old life. The butler and the tinker accuse Linda of the crime, and arrange that she shall be thought guilty. They lock her up, but she escapes and tells the Chaplain her story. He believes her, and when she is accused of the murder, he lies to save her and says that she has spent the night in his room. The tinker has forced the butler to write a confession of the crime. This is found and Linda says: "Then there is no longer any need of your sacrificing yourself to marry me." But the Chaplain assures her that he wishes to carry out his bargain.

BUBBLES (Special Release—Dec. 10).—The story of a girl who was turned out of her home because of a marriage beneath her station. In later years her father became a miser and was reformed by the love of his little grandchild who came to pay him attentions.

SCRATCHED (Two parts—Dec. 15).—The cast: Jimmy Austin (Earl Page); Claire (Irene Hunt); Paul Brant (Jean Hershoff). Written by Douglas Bronston. Produced by Fred A. Kelsey.

Jimmy Austin, a race tipster, is devoted to his sister, but despite her efforts to reform him, he persists in gaining a livelihood by questionable methods. One day he meets Paul Brant, a bank messenger to whom he gives some tips on the races. Paul makes his first bet and lands a winner. Thus encouraged he feels that Jimmy is in a position to put him in the way of making a fortune.

Later Jimmy gives him another tip on a certain horse and Paul decides to use some of the money which he is carrying from the bank. Not understanding the language of the turf, he thinks that the horse has lost when it is reported scratched. He obtains a gun and is on the point of killing himself, when Jimmy enters the room with the money. The bullet is deflected but causes a slight wound. With the smoking gun in his hand Jimmy rushes out to get aid and bumps into a policeman, who promptly takes him into custody. Jimmie is searched, the money found, and he is dragged off to jail. The next day Paul tells the officers that he does not remember what happened and so Jimmy is sent up for a number of years.

During the years that follow, Paul wishing to make some restitution for his craven act, befriends Claire. Later they marry and are very happy. Jimmy, who does not know of the marriage, is forgotten. Released from prison, Jimmy plans revenge. He seeks out Paul, but realizing that his sister is happy and that he, himself, is in a way responsible for all that has happened, he leaves without revealing himself.

MURDERED BY MISTAKE (Two parts—Dec. 13).—The cast: Mr. Bigbee (Dan Russell); The Girl (Lucille Hutton); Her Mother (Katherine Grinley); Her Admirer (William Invine); Dr. Arnold (Bert Roach); Detective (Jay Belasco). Produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Mr. Bigbee was a drone in the Hive of society but he was just as busy buzzing around the girls as the workers. In fact he buzzed so much that the girls grew annoyed, so Mr. Bigbee was given by the latest Hero to know that he was no longer welcome on any of the well known Hive flowers. Unfortunately, it was in the excitement and not where bullets commonly go when a gent is making an attempt to destroy his life, he fired Blood Hound Pete to kill her. How a tramp who looked like him almost married the girl is straightened out after a riot.

THE LAWYER'S SECRET (Two parts—Dec. 14). The cast: Walter Slocum (Benny Sudlow), Andrew Slocum (Geo. Berrell), Beulah Dawson as a child (Elizabeth James), Beulah Dawson 10 years later (Molly Malone), Bob Murdock (Jack Nelson), Matthew Burke (Fred Montague), Max Fenton (Burton Law), Dinah (Lydia Yeamans Titus). Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by George Cochrane.

Walter seems to be always in mischief and Andrew Slocum, his father, is stern with him. Even after Walter has grown to be almost a young man he still punishes him as if he were a child. Walter resents this and, taking a few of his trinkets and his mother's picture, runs away. After several years, Andrew Slocum dies, leaving a will which decrees that the entire fortune is left to Walter providing he is found within a year of the death of his father, and then for a period of six months proves himself worthy. Otherwise the fortune is to be given to his ward, Beulah Dawson.

The two attorneys handling the case scheme to get the property themselves. Burke makes a trip to the city, discovers Bob Murdock, who had been Walter's chum in the west, and upon Walter's death, had received the mother's picture and trinkets. Bob is in poor circumstances and accepts the offer of Burke to impersonate Walter and then turn the property over to them.

Burke takes Bob home with him, where he is received as Walter Slocum. Beulah falls in love with him and confides to him that even if he had not shown up in the stipulated time she had intended saving the inheritance for him. Bob determines that she shall not be cheated out of the estate.

The six months' period is up, and the whole estate is turned over to Bob. Burke and Fenton want him to sign it over to them as originally agreed, but Bob, being sure that he has the estate in his own name, turns them down. The three men fight, but Bob is victorious. He returns home and tells Beulah the true story of Walter's death, and his assumption of his name. The girl, realizing she loves him, asks him to remain.

LOVE OR AN EMPIRE (Two parts—Dec. 17). The prince of a foreign land is in love with a woman who has no royal blood in her veins. Still he refuses to give up the girl. At last the prime minister urges the girl to make the prince believe that she is untrue to him so that he will be cured of his love. This she does, and the prince is heartbroken.

But in the meanwhile there has been a plot to kill the prince. This is discovered by the girl and she rushes to warn him. She arrives just in time to save his life. He realizes that she really loves him and decides that he will give up the throne rather than sacrifice her love on the altar of the state.

NESTOR.

TWO SMALL TOWN ROMEOS (Dec. 11). The cast: Jed (Eddie Lyons); Lem (Lee Moran); Marie (Priscilla Dean); Jennie (Miss Zogbaum); Ma (Adele Farrington); Pa (Fred Gamble). Written by Virginia Kirtley. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Jed and Lem are in love with Jennie who lives in Woodville. She is fond of the way Jed plays the mouth harp and the sweet music of Lem's accordion. They patiently wait for her to decide. Jennie's mother receives word that their city cousin, Marie is coming to pay them a visit. When she arrives, Jennie introduces the boys to Marie, and they both think her a wonder.

That night a big party is given for Marie. She makes up her mind to "play" all the boys along. She starts with Jed and Lem who think she is wild about them. They become jealous of each other, and both decide to propose. Lem arrives first when Jed comes. Ma informs them that the girls have gone to the depot, so the two boys sit and glare at each other.

When Mary arrives they both make a rush for her with their tokens of love, but she introduces her sweetheart, Jack. They stop on the steps to think it over and are doused with cold water by Jennie, who is not so stupid after all.

I'M YOUR HUSBAND (Dec. 15). The cast: Dick Snell (Al McKinnon), Tessie (Alma Hayman); Clara (Peggy Custray), Maid (Mina Cunard). Written and produced by Leslie T. Peacocke.

Dick Snell has a pretty wife, but he persists in carrying on flirtations with chorus girls. One day Clara discovers Dick reading a love missive from a pretty soubrette, Tessie Applesauce. He tells her that the letter was meant for a man about town who closely resembles him and has the same name.

Clara does not believe this and decides she will teach him a lesson. When he returns home after calling upon Tessie, Clara asks him for the candy and flowers which he has promised her. He cannot recall making such a promise and discovers that a man has been making love to her and has left a short time previously promising to return with the favors. He starts out with a gun to look for the chap, who so closely resembles him.

Then Clara, with the aid of the parlor-maid whom she dresses in Dick's pajamas, closes the house and retires to her room. When Dick returns home, he endeavors to awaken Clara by throwing pebbles at her window.

Clara tells Dick that he must go away, that her husband is in bed asleep and that she knows him to be an impostor. Dick is nearly insane when the maid, whom Dick thinks is a man, appears and fires upon him. Dick leaves and upon returning home the following day, determines to remain ever at his own fireside.

JOKER.

THEIR DARK SECRET (Dec. 16). The cast: Bill (William Franey); Gale (Gale Henry); Nigger ("Heinie" Conklin); Hotel Clerk (Milburn Moranti). Scenario by Harry Wulze. Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Gale finds the initials "B. V. D." in her tea-cup and the maid informs her that these will be the intials of her future husband. Bill arrives at the hotel, registers as "Bill V. Dunderblitzen" and is given a room directly opposite Gale's. He is a violinist and Gale is so charmed with his music that she finally nerves herself to go to his room.

The clerk hears the playing and thinks that some cats are having a song fest. Finally he traces the music to Bill's room, where the two quarrel violently. Gale becomes angry and breaks the violin over the clerk's head and he flees for his life. Bill is heartbroken over the loss of his violin and orders Gale from the room.

The laundry arrives and Gale receives a bundle marked with the initials "B. V. D." She finally persuades the clerk to advertise for the owner and a nigger claims the laundry as his. The clerk gives the nigger the note she had left inviting him to have tea with her.

The nigger in his Sunday best calls on the horrified Gale. Bill overhears the argument and starts out to investigate. The nigger pulls a razor on him and Bills gets a gun from the clerk and starts after him, the nigger taking refuge in a molasses barrel. When Gale shows Bill that she has sufficient money to keep them in luxury for some time, he decides that he will let the prophecy of the tea cup be fulfilled.

BILLY THE BANDIT (Dec. 12). The cast: I. Work-Little (Fred Gamble); Mrs. Work-Little (Countess Du Cello); Smiling Billy Mason); Better Work-Little (Peggy Custer); Mrs. Uno I Love ("Mother" Ashton). Written by L. V. Waters. Produced by John Steppling.

Smiling Billy, ward of I. Work-Little, is a spendthrift. He calls on Work-Little for money and is refused. A rich, eccentric widow overhears the conversation and decides to buy some property from Smiling Billy. He completes the deal, and she forces a loan of $10,000 on him.

His success with the widow convinces Work-Little that Smiling Billy has the right stuff in him, and he offers him a partnership. Smiling Billy refuses. Work-Little asks Billy to his house to meet his daughter, just returned from school.

On their arrival at the house they find the sheriff, who warns them to lock up as there is a thief in the neighborhood. Betty declares if she were a man she would land Mr. Bandit, and says "Give me a hero."

The idea comes to Billy to do a little bandit stuff. He holds up the entire family, finds Betty under the bed, carries her to the Justice of the Peace and is married. Work-Little demands of the villain that he give him back his child, and Smiling Billy strips off his disguise, whereupon the father gves them his blessing.

IT DIDN'T WORK OUT RIGHT (Dec. 14). The cast: Billy Hopkins (Stanley Walpole); Blanche Whiting (Helen Slosson); Harry De Peyster (Jos. Granby); Johnnie (Helen Marten); Sonia Kerbs (Margaret McRae). Written and produced by Robert F. Hill.

Billy Hopkins, on account of the fickleness of Blanche, his fiancee, develops a full-grown grouch, flirts openly with Blanche. Johnnie advises Billy to do a little flirting on his own account and remarks that Sonia Kerbs can make any girl "green-eyed." Sonia willingly agrees to carry out the proposed plan. Blanche sees Sonia engaged in a conspicuous flirtation with Billy.

When Blanche finally sees Billy embrace Sonia, she is no longer able to control her jealous anger. Later, when all the young people are assembled in the parlor, Blanche denounces Billy for insulting her. Blanche hands the engagement ring back to her fiance with the sarcastic suggestion that it might fit "Miss Kerbs." Thereupon Billy turns upon his sister and Sonia and calls them "a fine pair of fixers."

Johnnie recalls that she once read that if you get a girl's lover in trouble, the girl will take his part. Shortly afterwards the butler sees the two "fixers" put their jewelry in Billy's pocket and he promptly removes the jewelry for his own personal use. When Johnnie brings in a real policeman to search Billy, the jewelry is not found on his person.

Blanche immediately declares that her Billy never stole anything in his life. The lovers forget their quarrel and fall into each other's arms. Johnnie and Sonia sadly examine their ringless fingers.

LAEMMLE.

GREEN EYES (Dec. 13).—The cast: Julia (Lois Wilson); John (George N. Chesebro); Dolly (Betty Schade); Harry (Ed. Brady). Scenario by Maie Harvey.

Julia is a faithful wife, but her husband, John, is of a suspicious, jealous nature. A former sweetheart of Julia's, Harry, is in love with a friend of hers, Dolly, but the latter's father is not in favor of their marriage. Harry and Dolly solicit the aid of Julia.

John finds much fuel for his jealousy, and the climax is reached when he discovers his wife and Harry at a roadside inn where they have gone to meet Dolly. Dolly and Harry, being perfectly innocent, cannot understand John's actions, and Julia is heartbroken when John announces his intention of going away.

While he is absent, Julia is startled by the presence of someone in her room and upon switching on the lights discovers a burglar, whom she seems to recognize. John returns to his home and sees her in the embrace of a strange man. Putting a mask over his face, he enters to find that the burglar is his own brother. Later, the husband apologizes when he finds what Julia had been doing for her friends, Dolly and Harry.

GAUMONT.

REEL LIFE, NO. 29 (Nov. 16).—The first section shows "Catching Fish for Market" on the Massachusetts coast. The pictures of working, canning and packing the fish have added interest because they also show the duty fish, which the United States Government has recently threatened to bring about an embargo. Then the process of the curing fisher every day spectacle to will have an opportunity to see how this now almost priceless article is produced. The pictures were taken of the great Fraser Refining Co. at Montreal-du-Nord before the war. How zinc is obtained by distillation was come as a revelation to people who are unfamiliar with the process.

Tea has been called the "cup that cheers but does not inebriate," and few who have been cheered by it know that it is now being grown here in the United States. Tea was grown in South Carolina even before the Civil War and now the industry is showing an interesting commercial development which is pictured in this issue. The tea bushes are shown, and picturesque pickers picking the leaves at the time of maturity. The only machine operation possible, rolling the leaves is shown. A new province is invaded by Reel Life" in this issue, that of gown designing. The pictures are practical demonstrations of how to drape a gown in the latest fashion.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 63 (Nov. 22).—The wonderful locks that permit vessels to pass from Lake Superior to Lake Huron at Sault Ste. Marie are shown in this number. The stream connecting the two lakes is called St. Mary's River. Through a series of rapids, shown in the picture, it falls twenty feet in three-quarters of a mile. Through the locks at the "Soo" more commerce passes than through any other canal in the world.

Among the pictures are entertaining views of the United States park, shooting the rapids, fishing in the lock the spillway, a passenger steamer "locking through," closing the lock, and a U. S. diver who makes frequent inspections of the locks below water.

"What's a Home Without a Dog?" an entertaining animated cartoon, drawn by Harry Palmer, is next shown. The artist gives pictorially his views of the playful proclivities of a pup which insists on chewing the rugs, turning over chairs, and generally making himself a nuisance. Of course many antics never possible for a canine to accomplish are laughably executed by this four-footed pest of the animated screen.

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 3 (Nov. 21).—First come pictures of Cairo, Egypt. This city lends itself admirably to representation on the screen since the architecture, the varied street life, the costumes of the various tribes and races, and the markets are full of pictorial color. The views include Opera Square, the Citadel, erected in 1166, Mosque of Saida Zenab, Arab types, and typical streets and street scenes.

Antwerp, Belgium's chief seaport and a center of commerce before the war, provides entertaining scenes of city life before the present conflict. Since the city has been spared the horrors of a siege the pictures portray it architecturally just as it is today. One of the best pictures is of the Cathedral, a building begun in the fourteenth century. The Furniture Market and the Dog Market are places of interest for all visitors. There are pictures of the Corporation Houses and of the celebrated Harbor.

The pictures of the beautiful French mountain torrent that flows into the Var near Nice are also shown in this number.

THE VAMPIRES (Episode No. 3—"The Ghost"—Two parts—Dec. 7).—The cast: Philip Guard, cub reporter (Edmond Mathe); Normandin (Marcel Levesque); Mr. Trep (Eugene Ayme); Enrique Moreno (Jacques Hermann); Irma Vep (Juliet Musidora).

As it was often convenient for the Grand Vampire to know various districts of the city as well as the real estate men of Paris, one of his disguises was as Mr. Trep, a real estate dealer. To his office one day came a man from Argentina desiring a bachelor apartment. He said that his mission was secret and that he wished an apartment with a safe in which he could leave important documents. Mr. Trep had no such an apartment. It was next to that of Irma Vep. He did not tell his visitor, Enrique Moreno, that the safe in the apartment he was renting was a secret door from the other apartment. Whatever Moreno put in his strong box would be safe—for the Vampires to loot.

The Vampires needed a position for Irma Vep in the Russian Embassy. They had learned that Metadier was to be recalled either by request or by the Czar and they knew that the dear girl would soon be in a position to give them valuable information. At once she gained the confidence of the lady. A message was sent by the president that Mr. Metadier did not return to take a new post from Paris to Rouen that the money should be entrusted to Irma Vep—shown at the bank a Miss Juliet.

The Vampires waylaid Metadier on a train and threw him out a window to his death. The way was now clear for Irma to get possession of the money to be sent to Rouen. The order from the banker was that she should go if Metadier did not appear at ten o'clock. The girl having received word that the bank's confidential man had been put out of the way, was preparing for a trip a minute or two before ten when she was startled by seeing Metadier appear. He walked into the room just as was his custom and asked for the package for Rouen. Irma Vep had to stand there helpless while he went out with the money which the Vampires had already counted as their own. She could not understand.

News of the disappearance of Metadier reached Philip Guard, the reporter of the Mondial, who was the implacable foe of the Vampires. Disguised as a telephone inspector he went to the bank to look over the employes. There he recognized Irma Vep. He traced her to the apartment next to that rented to Moreno. He saw her go in accompanied by the Grand Vampire, disguised as Mr. Trep. To the Grand Vampire Irma told the remarkable story of the appearance of Metadier after he had received assurances that he had been killed. They could not understand. Mr. Trep judged the time opportune to look into the safe of the new neighbor, and opened the secret door. Out fell the body of Metadier!

How had he come there? The answer was easy. Moreno, himself a criminal preying upon the rich, had come upon the body beside the railway track. When he had read the note telling Metadier to take the money to Rouen, he immediately decided to disguise himself and apply at the bank for the package. So it was her next door neighbor to whom Irma Vep had seen the money given which she had thought she would get for the Vampires. While gazing in astonishment at the body Philip Guard surprised them. The Vampires overpowered him, however, and left him for dead. Half an hour later he regained consciousness and telephoned the police. When they arrived they trapped Moreno, knowing that he must have something to do with the death of Metadier, since the safe in which the body had been concealed opened into his apartment. They accused him of murder and would not believe his explanation that he had found the dead body beside the railroad track. Only Philip believed his story, knowing that he was drawing closer to the Vampires.

VOGUE.

SHOT IN THE FRACAS (Two Parts—Dec. 10).—The cast: The Janitor (Ben Turpin); his wife (Margaret Templeton); the peddler (Paddy McGuire); the husband (Arthur Moon); his wife (Gypsy Abbott).

Arthur Moon, a champion archer, who has a medal which he values highly, lives in a fashionable apartment with his wife, Gypsy. Ben, the janitor of the building, who believes in letting his wife do all of the work, is in the hall sweeping up when all of the trouble over the medal takes place. Paddy, the peddler, seeing the curtains in Arthur's window swaying back and forth and thinking it is someone trying to flirt with him, climbs up the fire escape and enters Moon's apartment. Here he spies the medal and manages to get it just as Arthur's wife comes into the room. Paddy hides behind a screen and furtively watches Gypsy practice archery. One of the arrows accidentally hits Ben and he is brought into the apartment to recover from his fright. Arthur comes home and, finding Ben in the house, becomes jealous. He misses the medal and starts to search for it. Paddy manages to slip it into his pocket and it is found. The medal falls into the hands of all concerned and finally to [illegible] before a two-story brick factory. Paddy [illegible] and Gypsy takes a sail through the clouds.

SIGNAL FILM CORP.

A LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS NO. 6 (Two parts—Nov. 27).—"Dollar" Holmes has a violent scene with the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which the Commission tells him he must build his railroad on to a certain point because the road has been declared a common carrier. He says in order to tie up his rivals by keeping their logs from the mill that he is not in a financial position to do that. The independents reply that they will take care of that by accepting his note for enough money on which to build the road. Holmes consents and signs the note. Dawson, representing the independents, accepts the note and sends Helen Holmes and his son, Tom, by train to the bank to discount the note and bring the money back. Holmes sends after them his foreman, Behrens, and a confederate. They have instructions to steal the money and get away with it, so that it shall be impossible for the independents to build the road.

Holmes' agents take berth in the same Pullman car with Helen and Tom. When the lights have been turned low and the train is speeding on through the night, the foreman and his pal climb out of their berth windows, make their way by perilous hand-grasps along the outside of the car from window to window, climb in through Helen's berth-window, steal the valise that contains the money from beside her pillow and manage to get back to their own berths. Just as the bag is lifted out of her bed Helen wakes and screams.

Her cries bring Tom hurrying from his berth, the conductor at his heels. The train is stopped and Helen and Tom get off to wait for a train which will pass in the opposite direction at dawn and enable them to overtake the thief, who by Behren's secret order has jumped off with the money-bag.

In the meantime the thief has jumped a freight, fought with the crew and uncoupled the caboose, on whose narrow platform he is riding. The train is on a down grade. As dawn breaks the runaway caboose comes plunging down the track where Helen and Tom are waiting. Helen climbs a telegraph pole and from its cross-arms leaps onto the caboose roof. She grapples with the thief and they have a savage fight on the platform and inside the car. The car runs into a closed switch and is wrecked. It catches fire from the overturned stove and Helen and the thief try to fight their way out of the burning trap. They cannot.

Young Tom Dawson has seen the wreck—he comes racing down the track to the rescue, not knowing whether either Helen or the robber is alive but hoping for Helen. He tries to get into the burning car, but cannot. He hears the cries of the men and girl inside, and through the smoke and flames he climbs up over the side of the overturned caboose to the window just below the roof, and drags Helen and the robber out.

He lifts her to the ground, and discovers that her wrist has been gashed. Her injury makes him forget the thief, who had managed to hang onto the valise of money as he was helped out of the blazing car and who casts gratitude aside and dashes off across the fields with the bag.

The fade-out of Chapter Six leaves the audience in doubt as to whether Helen and Tom eventually overtake the robber and recover the money, or whether they fail to and he gets away with it, leaving the small timbermen defrauded and unable to build the railroad extension, and Holmes therefore still the dominant figure in the situation.

MISS BILLIE BUTTONS (Dec. 11).—The cast: The Girl (Billie Rhodes); Her Friend (Ethel Lynne); The Boy (Nolan Leary). Scenario by Ira W. Tichenor. Produced by Al. E. Christie.

Billie and Ethel happen to read that a girl disguised as a boy worked two years in the mines. This starts an argument, Ethel saying it can't be done. Billie says that not only can it be done, but that she can do it and is willing to bet that she can. Ethel takes her on and Billie looks around for her opportunity. She dresses as a boy and gets a job as bell boy in a large hotel.

After some complications in the locker room, Billie gets by with her job, while Ethel is on her trail. But with the entrance of Nolan, a traveling salesman, Billie's fate is foreshadowed when he sees a girl's ring on her finger and is set to wondering. Her concealed sex gets her into some predicaments, but she always escapes with her secret.

However, Nolan knows Ethel and brings her to the hotel to dinner. Billie, bringing Nolan a telegram, is recognized by Ethel, but she has to keep still. Nolan has become much attached to the bright little "Bellhop" and decides to take "him" to a show. He gets Billie's address from the captain and goes to the house. Ethel is there with Billie.

Billie comes down, as herself, and Nolan, not recognizing her, asks for the bellboy. "That is my brother," says Billie, "but he's out tonight." Having the tickets, Nolan asks Billie to go in place of her "brother," and she accepts and goes to dress. Ethel now breaks the faith and tells Nolan. He finds proof when Billie comes down, in the same ring he saw at the hotel, and the whole thing comes out. Billie pays the bet, but Nolan declares that he is the real winner by Billie's little escapade.

THE YELLOW MENACE (Episode No. 16, "The Final Stand"—Two parts—Dec. 18).—In this, the last episode, we see Ali Singh defeated in all his schemes and recalled by the Council of Ton, over whose destinies he has been supposed to reign. Determined, however, not to be caught, he prepares to escape and dresses a substitute in his own clothing, sending this man away with Katisha, his faithful slave, in a car. They are pursued by soldiers and the spurious Ali Singh shot.

The real Ali Singh makes a dash for the open sea in a fast motor boat, but Police-Captain Kemp is too shrewd for him and follows in a gunboat, and ultimately sinks the flying vessels with all on board. The final scene of "The Yellow Menace" shows the clawlike hand of Ali Singh, clutched in impotent rage, sinking beneath the waves.

A SHORT SIGHTED CRIME (December.)—Tweedledum's young wife is fond of dolls. Tweedledum, wishing to surprise his wife by coming into her room suddenly, assures himself that she is there by looking through the keyhole. He sees her showering her attentions on "her child" and is filled with rage. Angry suspicion takes hold of him and losing all reason he bursts into the room, shakes his wife abominably, drags the child from her arms and throws it to the ground. A doll is naturally not used to such rough treatment and proceeds to come apart. Tweedledum, realizing that he has done something awful, bursts from the room, leaving his wife in tears and rushes to the police station, almost beside himself in fear of the consequences of his rash act.

The police take him back to the scene of his crime and, after letting him suffer for a short time, the true situation is exposed to him and the happy family is reunited.

Light
The light from an Alternating Current arc comes alternating from both carbons, while from a Direct Current arc it always comes from the same carbon. The Direct Current arc can therefore be arranged so that the maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an Alternating Current arc. A Direct Current arc also gives off more light for the same current than an Alternating Current.

THE STOLEN TRIUMPH (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five parts—Dec. 11). The cast: Edwin Rowley (Julius Steger); Stephen Hunt (Harry Burkhardt); Mrs. Hunt (Clara Whipple); Mrs. Rowley (Clara Blandick); Mrs. Williams (Marie Reichardt); Alice Hunt (Raye Dean); Little Alice (Helen Badgley); Edwin Rowley, Jr. (Edward Kenney); Little Edwin (Maury Steuart). Scenario written by Julius Steger and Maxwell Karger. Directed by David Thompson.

Success and failure meet in the persons of Edwin Rowley and Stephen Hunt, college chums. Rowley has marked ability as a playwright, but he is a visionary, and has not the commercial instinct necessary to market his wares. Hunt is a prosperous theatrical manager. Hunt's wife is ambitious for him to be known not only as a manager but as a dramatist. She urges him to try his powers in that direction. He promises to try, and she tells a reporter, who calls for an interview, that her husband is engaged in writing a great play. An item to this effect appears in the paper.

Rowley, meantime, has finished a play which is a masterpiece. Noticing the item in the paper, his wife suggests that he go to Hunt for advice about his play. Hunt welcomes the impecunious Rowley, who tells him of his struggles for recognition. Hunt says he will be glad to read the play. Rowley leaves his precious manuscript with him. Hunt makes him a loan to tide him over his immediate difficulties, and the money is spent at once for necessities for his wife and little boy, Edwin.

Hunt takes Rowley's play home and upon reading it recognizes it as a work of genius. When he has finished reading it, overwhelmed by its gripping power, he is irresistibly tempted to steal the play and present it as his own, knowing that he is safeguarded by the fact that Rowley has no copy. He begins copying the manuscript, only changing the title.

After anxious days of waiting to hear from Hunt, Rowley goes again to the manager's office to ask about his play. Hunt tells him that he has rejected it and mailed the manuscript to him several days ago. The loss of the play accentuates Rowley's sense of utter failure. Having come to the last of his resources, he gets a job at addressing envelopes. His faithful wife falls ill as the result of starvation.

Hunt engages a company and starts rehearsals of the stolen play. On the opening night Rowley buys a ticket and attends the performance. He recognizes the new play as the child of his own brain, creates a disturbance and is put out of the theater. Finding Hunt afterward he denounces him as a thief. He is threatened with arrest and, half-crazed, goes home to tell his wife the disheartening news. The shock kills her. Rowley, now entirely insane, jumps into the river.

He is rescued by a passing boat, but his hat and coat are found, and he is reported drowned. Hunt reads of the supposed suicide, and confesses to his wife that the great play was not his, but Rowley's. She says the wrong must be righted, and she takes Rowley's son into their home to bring him up with their little girl, Alice.

Rowley becomes a wanderer on the face of the earth, his mind a blank. As the years pass, Hunt tries to make reparation by giving Edwin every advantage. Edwin and Alice grow up into young manhood and womanhood, fall in love with each other and are betrothed. Hunt produces a play written by the missing man, to make belated amends for his misdeed, and Rowley seeing it announced, partially regains his reason. He reaches the Hunt home while the guests are toasting the bride and bridegroom. In response to the toast, Edwin begins reciting a poem, the work, as he tells them, of his gifted father. He falters in reciting it, and Rowley, his memory now completely returned, finishes it for him. The past is forgiven, and the playwright's reclining years are spent in peace and happiness.

WORLD PICTURES.

BROKEN CHAINS (Peerless—Five Parts—Dec. 11).—The cast: Harry Ford (John Tansy); Harry Ford (later) (Carlyle Blackwell); General Gwynne (Herbert Barrington); Paul Fitzhugh (Stanhope Wheatcroft); Dr. Tom Lincoln (Herbert Delmore); Samson (Henry West); Moses (Louis Grisel); Jefferson (William Sherwood); Georgia Gwynne (Madge Evans); Georgia Gwynne (later) (Ethel Clayton); Bessie Fitzhugh (Jessie Lewis). Scenator by Mrs. E. M. Ingleton. Directed by Robert Thornby.

Captain Ford, U. S. A., is sent down South to break a gang of moonshiners. Jefferson Gwynne, a lovable but rather hot-headed young southerner, believes Ford is aiding the negroes in their political fight against the whites, and as Ford is compelled to keep his mission secret, Jefferson conceives a violent dislike for this agitator as he believes Ford to be and makes no pretense of concealing his aversion.

Georgia Gwynne, Jefferson's young sister on the other hand, is attracted to the young northerner and after he saves her in a runaway accident their friendship develops rapidly, to the dismay of Paul Fitchugh, Georgia's cousin, who is much in love with her. When Georgia refuses Paul's offer of marriage, he accuses her of being in love with the strange agitator, but she also ignores his remarks and he goes away angry.

Jefferson accuses Ford of stirring up the negroes to vote against the whites. Ford tries to quiet the excited boy but his calmness only tends to heighten Jefferson's anger, and drawing Ford's sword from his scabbard, he begins to fight. Ford defends himself with a piece of wood. A scuffle ensues and Jefferson falls wounded. Ford rushes to the house for assistance.

While he is gone, Sampson, a negro political leader who hates the Gwynnes, steals up and seeing the wounded boy and the sword lying at his side, is possessed of a demoniacal idea. He seizes the sword, and plunges it into the boy's body. Captain Ford, coming up with Georgia, her father and others, is overcome to find Jefferson dead.

Circumstantial evidence points to Ford as the criminal, and despite his vehement protest of innocence, he is led away to prison. Georgia alone believes in him and comforts him with her assurance of faith. Paul, who saw Sampson stab the boy, and knows therefore that Ford is innocent, is torn by conflicting emotions, but his hatred of his rival, and his desire to get him out of the way proves stronger than a sense of justice, and he conceals his knowledge of the crime, and allows Ford to be led away to prison. Despite the unpleasantness of his surroundings in prison, Ford conducts himself bravely and manfully. In defending an old negro against the guard, he incurs the enmity of that official and in revenge the guard has him whipped by the negro Sampson, who had been in prison for stealing a ballot-box.

Angered by this unnecessary indignity, Ford still submits in silence, but that night when the prison catches fire, he seizes the opportunity to escape, and is trailed by the guards with dogs to Georgia's home. Georgia scarcely recognizes in this worn haggard prisoner, the man whom she loves, but she receives him gladly, and struggles hard to conceal him from the guard. Her efforts, however, are futile—the door is broken in and Ford dragged out.

Georgia has read that an individual can lease any convict he or she may desire, by applying to the Governor for a permit, and she determines now to make use of this knowledge. By clever maneuvering, she manages to detain the arresting party, while she rushes a messenger to the Governor, with an application for the releasing of Ford. Just as the guards are ready to lead Ford away, the messenger returns with the permit signed by the Governor, and Georgia demands that the prisoner be turned over to her.

Ford finds his new captivity much to his liking, and the affection between captor and captive rapidly grows. The old negro, whom Ford defended in prison, is released, and hurries to Col. Gwynne, to tell him the real truth about the murder—how Sampson, talking in his sleep, revealed how he seized the sword and killed Jefferson. By a clever re-enactment of the murder scene, Sampson is led to confess the truth. Ford is cleared, and he and Georgia are happy in each other's love.

THE LAST OF [illegible] (Van Dyke Film, [illegible] Reel, Dec. 1).—Mary Fielding, Gertrude McCoy; Billy Weeks, [illegible]; Bert Temple, [illegible]; Al Wayne, Arthur Housman. Directed by George Terwilliger.

Myra Fielding, a young country school teacher, becomes dissatisfied with the narrow outlook of her home, and goes to the city, despite the protests of her last accepted sweetheart, Bert Temple. There she obtains work in a cabaret, hoping to attract the attention of some theatrical manager. She becomes acquainted with Al Wayne, a flashy sport who, although he is married, insists on paying attention to her.

She learns that her father is in urgent need of medical attention, and having no money of her own to defray the necessary expenses, is forced to borrow from Wayne. He gives her $500 in return for I. O. U. for the money thinking in this way to obtain a hold over the girl. Wayne has taken the money from funds belonging to his wife, Edith, who, when she discovers her loss, accuses him of the theft. Wayne leaves her in anger, and going to Myra, demands that she leave the town with him. Myra refuses, and as they are arguing, Bert Temple enters the room. Temple thrashes Wayne, but scorning the life he thinks Myra is leading, leaves her.

Wayne leaves for Chicago, but is robbed of his wallet on the train by a pick-pocket, who is later killed while jumping off a car. The thief is identified as Wayne by the papers in the wallet, Wayne does not correct the error, preferring to start life again under a new name. Arriving in Chicago, he embarks upon a "political career" in a tough quarter of the city. All of his old associates think him dead.

Edith, meanwhile, has discovered Myra's I. O. U., and writes her, reproaching her for not only stealing her money, but her husband also. Myra calls on Edith, and tells her that she never knew that Wayne was married, and promises to repay the money. In the course of time, Myra succeeds in her ambition, and becomes a musical comedy star. By a strange coincidence, Temple, her old sweetheart, meets Edith, and falls in love with her. She, thinking Wayne dead, marries Temple, and they go to Chicago to live.

Temple eventually becomes District Attorney. He starts to wipe out the political gang that has been grafting on the city. Wayne, who is one of the gang that Temple is after, recognizes him, and learns that Edith is his wife. Wayne goes to Temple's home, and revealing himself to Edith, tells her that she is still his wife, but offers to remain silent if Temple will stop his prosecution of the gang. Edith, half-crazed by the situation, meets Wayne at his apartment to see if he will relent.

Myra, playing in a Chicago theater, sees Wayne and marvels at his being alive. Investigating, she learns the true state of affairs and discovers that Edith is to meet her former husband at his apartment. She remembers the wrong she unwittingly did Edith, and desiring to do what she can to help her fellows her. There, from a place of concealment, she sees Edith, attacked by Wayne, shoot and apparently kill him. She leaps out from her hiding place and hurries the other woman out of the room through the fire-escape. Then she returns, in time to be caught by the police, who have arrived, attracted by the noise of the shot.

Edith goes to her home all unnerved, and confesses everything to her husband. He loves her well enough to stand by her, and conducts an investigation into the entire affair. The search reveals the fact that, instead of having been killed by Edith, Wayne was shot by a man who had lain in wait for him for that purpose. Myra's sacrifice was therefore made unnecessary and she is released, bearing with her, none the less, the blessings of her former sweetheart and his wife.

THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY (Chapter 15, "The Human Tiger," Two Parts—Nov. 27).—Dr. Montrose decides his only escape from the clutches of the Crimson Stain gang is to destroy the apparatus, the drug, and the formula. In his laboratory he picks up an iron bar, but just as he is about to smash the frail machine, Kiel and Tanner, entering unnoticed, spring upon him. Vanya and the cripple lend their aid, and in a few words the doctor is on the floor [illegible]. The drug enters and Dr. Montrose enters with a pistol in hand. At her command the four super-criminals file out the door and [illegible] in search of a policeman. In the [illegible] of the Montrose home they meet Parrish [illegible] the quartet and marches them off to the police station. But just as soon as Parrish and his prisoners get out of sight of the house, Parrish unlocks the handcuffs and sets the gang[illegible].

Parrish follows Vanya to Robert Clayton's studio. Alone in the studio Parrish makes violent love to Vanya, and in the midst of it all Clayton comes. Angered at the woman's perfidy, Clayton orders them both from his studio. Glancing out the window, Clayton sees Pierre La Rue. Clayton gives chase, and follows Pierre to the Montrose home. He sees Pierre pass into Dr. Montrose's laboratory through the secret panel. As Clayton steps into the room Pierre attacks him and puts him under hypnotic control. Pierre then turns his attention to the apparatus, and with the help of the hypnotized Clayton, carries it outside to a waiting motor truck. The motor truck leaves and Pierre and Clayton return to the Doctor's laboratory. Pierre ties Clayton hand and foot in a chair. The next morning Clayton is found by Dr. Montrose.

In Tanner's apartment several of the Crimson Stain gangsters plan to discover Pierre La Rue's identity and thus hold him in their power. That afternoon, Dr. Montrose and Florence call on Clayton at his studio to see a rare vase that had just arrived. Clayton opens a big box and as he tears the wrapping aside Pierre La Rue springs out. Dr. Montrose tears off Pierre La Rue's disguise, revealing to the astonishment of all present, and Tanner, Kiel, and Vanya who are peeking through the skylight, the face of (?)

THE CRIMSON STAIN (Episode No. 16—"The Unmasking"—Two Parts—Dec. 4).—Alone in his laboratory, Dr. Montrose is startled by a noise at the secret panel. As the panel opens Dr. Montrose springs forward to halt the intruder. After a brief struggle in the passageway Pierre La Rue enters the laboratory. On the floor, half inside the laboratory and half outside, is the body of a man. Pierre La Rue takes Dr. Montrose's diary, then picking up the body of the man on the floor he exits through the panel, closing it behind him.

Harold Stanley is coming up the stairs. He sees a man crouching at the laboratory door. The man enters. Stanley follows and sees the man about to escape through the panel. Stanley captures him and discovers he is Felix. Stanley forces Felix to disclose to him the mystery of the Crimson Stain Gang. Felix gives his life's history as follows:

He was a student of chemistry when he met Dr. Montrose, who gave him the job of personal assistant. Shortly afterward Felix fell in love with Florence, but Dr. Montrose objected. Then Dr. Montrose discovered the element which he believed would stimulate the human mind to flights of genius. Dr. Montrose chose Tanner, Morrison, Vanya Tosca, and Layton Parrish as the subjects of his experiments. Dr. Montrose's discovery proved all he had hoped it would. Felix angered at Dr. Montrose's refusal of his daughter, injected a poison into Dr. Montrose's discovery, which created criminals instead of geniuses. Then came Pierre La Rue.

Felix sees a pistol in the drawer of the laboratory table. With a swift movement Felix pulls out the pistol and orders Stanley to throw up his hands. Felix forces Stanley into the secret passage-way, then escapes through the front door. Florence and Clayton set Stanley free. Stanley and Clayton leave the house in pursuit of Pierre La Rue.

In Tanner's apartment are the Crimson Stain Gangsters. Tanner mutinies. He declares La Rue is Harold Stanley. A police whistle. The door is flung open, framing the cripple who throws off his disguise, revealing himself as Harold Stanley. Policemen rush in. Pierre La Rue and the Black Mask escape. Stanley pursues Pierre while Clayton goes after the Black Mask. The Black Mask gains the roof, but before he can leap to safety Clayton throws him down. Tearing off the mask there is disclosed to Clayton's astonishment Layton Parrish.

Pierre La Rue escapes in an automobile. Stanley pursues in another car. The race continues for several miles. An obstruction stops the race. Pierre sets out on foot, followed by Stan-

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE (Five Parts—Dec. 11).—The cast: Helen Urmy (Dorothy Phillips); Aline (Vola Smith); Oliver Urmy (Frank Whitson); Edmund Stafford (Lon Chaney); Jenny Cupps (Evelyn Selbie); Billy Cupps (Jay Belasco); Ralph Kelton (Jack Mulhall); Landlord (Eddie Brown). Scenario written by Ida May Park. Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

Helen Urmy and Ralph Kelton are in love, but there is parental opposition to Helen marrying a poor man when she has many wealthy suitors. Ralph starts to drive Helen to the home of her old nurse, in the country, late one afternoon, and when a violent storm breaks, early in the evening, they are compelled to find shelter in a wayside inn. The torrential rains continue, and Helen and Ralph are compelled to register as man and wife and occupy the only room that is available. Dr. Stafford, who lives opposite, is watching from his window when lightning strikes the hotel at midnight. He finds that Ralph has been electrocuted by the bolt which narrowly misses setting the building on fire. Helen, distracted when she realizes her position, confesses to Dr. Stafford that she is not Ralph's wife and he promises to shield her.

In subsequent years Helen marries Oliver Urmy. They have a daughter, Aline, who falls in love with Billy Cupps, son of Helen's old nurse. One day Urmy brings Dr. Stafford into his home, introducing him as his college class mate. In Stafford's changed condition, due to the use of intoxicants and drugs, Helen does not recognize him—but the doctor clearly recalls where he saw Mrs. Urmy. When Aline returns from school Dr. Stafford falls in love with her and asks for her hand in marriage. The vast disparity in their ages makes the match seem ridiculous. Dr. Stafford recalls to Helen the incident of the lightning stroke, a secret she had safely kept, and as the price she must pay to prevent her exposure Stafford demands that she shall compel her daughter to marry him.

Jenny Cupps, upon her death bed, wires Helen that she must come to her old nurse. Helen receives a telegram that Aline and Billy Cupps have eloped and married. Helen proceeds upon her journey and finally learns the true parentage of Billy Cupps. The son Helen bore was entrusted to Jenny to rear as her own, Helen paying liberally for the boy's care and education. Some months after Helen's son died and, to keep the revenues coming, Jenny had substituted her daughter's boy and reared him secretly as the child Helen had entrusted to her old nurse to rear and educate.

The Billy Cupps, with whom Aline had just eloped, thus became acceptable as Helen's son-in-law. While Helen is away Oliver Urmy takes Dr. Stafford for an automobile ride. Stafford, under the influence of drugs, starts to make a disrespectful remark about Mrs. Urmy. Loosening his hold upon the steering wheel, Urmy grabs Stafford by the throat. The machine veers from the road, rolls down an embankment and Stafford is killed while Urmy escapes; miraculously, with slight injury.

Helen returns home, after remaining at Jenny Cupps' bedside until the old nurse dies, and learns the news of Stafford's death. With her secret now safe in her own keeping and her daughter married, Helen lives her remaining days happy in the love of her husband with her unfortunate past obliterated.

PEARL OF THE ARMY (Episode No. 2, "Found Guilty"—Astra—Two Parts—Dec. 10).—Captain Payne is court-martialed and convicted of treason because he lost a secret dispatch under suspicious circumstances. Unable to explain, he is placed in prison preparatory to being drummed out of service. In his solitary prison room, Pearl Dare visits him and, placing her hands in his, tells him she has come to say she believes in him. Before he can voice his gratitude, an orderly enters announcing the time is up.

The news of his downfall comes as welcome news to Major Brent, a less favored rival for Pearl Dare's hand and—millions. But on the horizon of his hopes a cloud drifts from out of the past in the person of Bertha Bonn, a girl he has wronged and who has a miniature signed by him years ago "to my darling wife." During a stormy meeting with her, Brent is astounded to discover that the locket which holds his portrait is strangely like the one lost by Payne, but he is unable to secure it from her, and lives in constant fear of its power.

The Silent Menace visits Col. Dare's home, and is discovered and pursued by Pearl in a taxi. A rug in the taxi suddenly comes to life. It overcomes her, and when next she gains consciousness she is in an unknown spot. Following some foot prints she discovers the secret meeting place of the Foreign Alliance, where the plots for the downfall of this Nation are hatched. She contrives an entrance, overcomes the Silent Menace with an ornament, and has nearly succeeded in snatching the mask from his face when his lieutenants discover her, and she is compelled to flee.

THE SHIELDING SHADOW (Episode No. 11 of "The Great Sacrifice"—Astra—Two Parts—Dec. 10).—Fleeing from her husband and the hirlings of Bianca, queen of the underworld, Leontine and her mysterious protector, Ravengar, find a haven of refuge in a cottage in the woods where he leaves her and returns to search for the mantle which has been stolen by Ruggles. Ravengar falls from a ledge, and Bianca and her men, finding his unconscious body, carry it to the shack where Leontine is hiding. Bianca seeking for some spirits to revive Ravengar, finds herself facing the shot gun in Leontine's hands. When she finds that Bianca is really trying to save him from the men who want his life she begs her to unlock the back door and let her go for help. This she does and Bianca, as Ravengar shows signs of returning consciousness, whispers to him to make a dash for the trap door when she opens it. With the gun she keeps them at bay until he makes the cellar and then joins him. Their shots fired at the two in the cellar failing to drive them out, they resort to a stick of dynamite. Bianca bravely picks it up and carries it upstairs, but not in time to save herself. It explodes and Bianca makes the great sacrifice for the man she loved.

THE CHALLENGE (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Dec. 10).—A young civil engineer exposes his superior for crooked work in a card game, and thus makes a bitter enemy. The other waits his chance for revenge, and through a "plant" sends him to prison. While he is serving his term, there is cradled in the heart of the West one of the largest engineering projects ever attempted.

After a futile search for a man big enough to tackle the job, those behind the gigantic deal realize that he is in prison. Through men of national importance he is pardoned and is given a golden opportunity. In the West he meets his old enemy, still cheating in the game of life. This time he has marked for his victim an unsophisticated little heiress who trusts him.

How the young engineer wins over the little feminine tornado, exposes the other man's villainy and causes the girl who has grown to love him not only to withdraw the challenge she had made, but to help him to the successful completion of his work, makes this a charming story.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS, NO. 10 ("Fashions and Charity"—Dec. 10).—In this number we see those who possess everything, arranging a benefit for the less fortunate. A Fashion Show is arranged at the Ritz-Carlton, the proceeds of which are to go to crippled kiddies in the hospital. This theme with its interesting reel wherein Dame Fashion and Charity go hand in hand.

LUKE—RANK IMPERSONATOR (Robin — Dec. 10).—Luke is a busy Beau Brummel. He is the paprika in the social baked potato and when they dress him up in an open-faced suit, he puts pep in a pitiful party.

THE FAITHLESS FRIEND (Reissue—Two Parts—Dec. 10).—This tale of rugged western life is colored throughout with the tender love of an Indian maiden for a white man.

Triangle Film Corp.

THE WHARF RAT (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Carmen Wagner (Mae Marsh); Edward Holmes (Robert Harron); Carl Wagner (Spottiswoode Aitken); Mrs. Wagner (Lillian Langdon).

Carmen Wagner is an orphan, the daughter of a musician whose career was ruined by the nagging of her stepmother. Her grandfather, a violinist also, hates all women because of his son's ruined career. He tries to save his granddaughter, whom he adores, from the stepmother. He also makes his granddaughter a woman hater and brings her up disguised as a boy. While in this garb she meets Edward Holmes, a law clerk, and the two become friends. The stepmother, catching the grandfather giving Carmen music lessons, drives him from the house. Carmen runs away, joins him, and they become vagabond musicians.

They take passage on a ship, and Edward Holmes, the law clerk of the firm, consulted by the stepmother, is delegated to find them. He takes passage on the same ship, identifies an innocent Italian musician and his daughter, whom he arrests. For this false arrest Edward is discharged. And in this plight he meets Carmen and her grandfather, who live in a derelict vessel and who make a living by the violin playing in the streets.

While protecting Carmen from a drunken sailor Edward is badly hurt and is taken in and cared for in the old hulk. Carmen throws aside her boy's clothes and puts on feminine apparel and imitates the dock watchman's daughter and coquettes with Edward, who at last identifies her as the girl whom he was originally employed to seek. They are in love, but keep it secret from the woman hating grandfather.

Other detectives, employed by the stepmother this time, have located Carmen, and Edward in defending her is knocked out, while the stepmother and Carmen take a steamer home. Edward with a friend in a fast motor boat follows, and Carmen jumps from the steamer and is rescued by Edward. The stepmother pursues in a pilot boat, but they finally make their escape to marriage and happiness.

BAWBS O' BLUE RIDGE (Ince—Five Parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Barbara Colby (Bawbs) (Bessie Barriscale); Ralph Gunther (Arthur Shirley); Phineas Bradley (Joe Dowling).

"Bawbs," whose real name is Barbara Colby, lives in the mountain wilderness of "Ol' Virginny" with her spinster aunt, "Maw Becky." Her parents died when she was an infant. She can read with effort and write just a bit. "Maw Becky" goes to town in the valley below about twice a year, but never takes "Bawbs," as she does every thing to prevent her meeting men.

Ralph Gunther, an author, comes to the Blue Ridge mountains seeking solitude while writing a new novel, and sees "Bawbs" dancing in the woods. She leads him a merry chase, but he finally finds her, and they are sitting on a big rock, chatting, when "Maw Becky" discovers them, and sends "Bawbs" to the house, and threatens to kill Gunther on sight if he is caught with her again. On the way to the cabin "Bawbs" chances to pick up a letter dropped by Gunther, which she reads that night. It states that Gunther must put up one thousand dollars at once as advance expense to the publishers of his books or all work will be stopped. This convinces her that he is "pore."

The next day "Maw Becky" leaves for her semi-annual trip to Wild Goose Bend, and a landslide causes her death. Her last words reveal the fact that "Bawbs" is rich, money left by her father being in a box in front of the fireplace under the stones. "Bawbs" cries all that night, waiting for the "writin' man" to come, but he does not know of her bereavement. After several days, during which time he has hunted for her in the woods, he decides to visit the cabin, and finds her at the grave of her aunt, but she repulses his advances, being aggrieved at his neglect.

Phineas Bradley, an aged and miserly hermit who has buried three wives, hears of "Bawbs'" wealth, and comes to court her. She has sent her money to Gunther, believing he needs it to go on with his writing. She tells Bradley of this, and he leaves when he realizes she has given away her money. Gunther sends back the fortune and starts for Wild Goose Bend. "Bawbs" realizes, when he returns the money, that she loves him, and hurries to Wild Goose Bend to intercept Gunther. Gunther recognizes her coming in the distance. They embrace and kiss. "Bawbs" asks him to take her to his mother in Philadelphia, which he promises to do.

Celebrating the First Anniversary

January, the first month of 1917, marks the first anniversary of the Spanish Edition of the Moving Picture World—CINE MUNDIAL.

Twelve issues have already gone out into the Spanish and Portuguese speaking countries. They have carried with them the sales messages of some of the most progressive American manufacturers, who have an eye open for EXPORT TRADE.

A satisfactory volume of business has been the reward for the effort and money expended; together with prospects of a rosy hue for a steadily increasing foreign business.

ARGENTINE, BRAZIL, CHILE, PARAGUAY, URUGUAY, BOLIVIA, VENEZUELA, PERU, COLOMBIA, ECUADOR, the GUIANAS, MEXICO and the Central American Republics, together with SPAIN, PORTUGAL, CUBA, PORTO RICO and the PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, are reached each month through the columns of CINE MUNDIAL.

IS THIS NOT A MARKET WORTHY OF YOUR ATTENTION?

Buenos Aires, the principal city of Argentine, has increased its number of moving picture theatres 100 per cent in the last few years. This city has a population of close to 2,000,000.

CIVILIZATION recently sold out in the Teatro Cairo, in that city at $2.50 (American money) a seat.

WHY NOT GRASP THIS OPPORTUNITY at the psychological moment and receive your share of this business starting with 1917?

CINE MUNDIAL goes to press for the January issue on Dec. 20th. Send your copy now to

BLAZING FILM STARTS SCARE IN A THEATRE
Women Faint and Men Fight to Get Out of [redacted]
None Is Injured—
There was considerable excitement last night at the [redacted] Theatre, when a movie film caught fire and was thrown out on a stairway leading to the theatre. There were about 1,000 persons in the place at the time and the attendants had difficulty in checking a panic.
JOHNS-MANVILLE SERVICE
COVERS THE CONTINENT
Are Your Patrons Adequately Protected?
These accidents happen, despite all precautions. But a cool head and a J-M Fire Extinguisher will keep all the excitement inside the booth. Just about ten seconds with the J-M and you're ready for business again.
Johns-Manville Fire Extinguisher
Always ready for every emergency. Discharged either by pumping or by air pressure previously pumped up and stored, an exclusive J-M feature invaluable in tight corners. Efficient on all incipient fires, whether from gasoline, grease or electrical arcs. And the price, bracket included, is but $8.00, in either brass or nickel finish—positive protection at negligible cost.
The J-M Fire Extinguisher is tested, approved and labeled by the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., under the direction of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.
J-M Extinguisher Fluid for recharging is the only liquid recommended and guaranteed for use in the J-M Fire Extinguisher. Supplied in sealed cans, carried in stock by all our dealers.

How To Make A Success With All Your Good Films

The simple reason why some houses make so much greater hits than others—using the same films—lies in the lens equipment. Other things being equal, it can be due to nothing else. Put your box office receipts up among the leaders by installing

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

They get the most out of the film stories you pay your money for—show them clear, vivid, with every detail brought out. Supply your machine with Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers—they are the standard equipment among discriminating operators.

Both Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly supplied with Bausch & Lomb Lenses—and you can be supplied through any film exchange.

"MARTIN" ROTARY CONVERTER

FOR REAL SUN-LIT PICTURES

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" polyphase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

PROFITABLE PICTURES

"The ..... theatre features good films, but I don't go there often because it's so hard on my eyes." How often this remark is heard.

Don't let this be said of your theatre. It's unnecessary. You can project pictures with such clear, steady smoothness that your audience will be unconscious that light is used at all. Projections can be made to appear so real as to be actually restful to the eyes. This result can be obtained by the use of a

TransVerteR
TRADE MARK

Suffice to say, new and remodeled theatres everywhere are installing Transverters, because they can't be fully equipped without them. The Transverter is a compact, simple, motor generator that meets every requirement for a steady, brilliant, easily controlled light for artistic projection. Guaranteed to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

This will be a big year in the moving picture business. Install the equipment that will enable you to get your full share of this business.

Write for further details at once. You lose money every day you do without a Transverter. Easily installed in any theatre. It means larger crowds, increased popularity, and greater profits.

Don't delay. Write today.

EXHIBITORS

Your most consistently helpful and dependable paper has always been the MOVING PICTURE WORLD

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has always been free and independent of any trade connection, either manufacturing or exhibiting.

Its policies are founded on principle and consider only the best interests of all. Injustice to any one side can only mean ruin in the long run.

We offer, now or never, no bribes for your support or the endorsement of any special interest in the trade. With us no endorsement has been necessary outside of furnishing the best and most reliable paper that you can read.

We stand on no insecure foundation of false claims as to exhibitors representation, either organized or unorganized, nor any equally false intimations as to independance of advertising patronage.

We have, for nearly ten years, given the best value by long odds to exhibitors and advertisers impartially and without special favor to any.

We thank you for your confidence and support heretofore and solicit a continuance of same, believing we are in position to give you even better value through our greater experience and understanding of all your problems.

Yearly subscriptions means less than a single admission to your theatre weekly. If not already a subscriber send your remittance NOW --- TODAY --- THIS MINUTE

Business is booming as never before

Theaters are crowded. Exhibitors are hustling. Now is the time to install a complete N. C. R. Ticket-Printing Register to help you to make money

This register will print your tickets as they are called for at the window.

It will record them as they are printed, and issue them direct to patrons at the rate of over 100 per minute.

It will enable you to do away with costly preprinted tickets (another saving to you), and will give you absolute control over your box office receipts, whether present or away.

If the National Ticket-Printing Register did no more than this, it would make you money.

But it can be ordered to print either plain or stub tickets, and from one to five at a time.

It can be ordered to print tickets of two colors, and number them consecutively.

Business is booming more than ever. Now is the time to make money.

If you are not using an N. C. R. Ticket-Printing Register, it will pay you to see our nearest agent, or write direct to

McCLURE PICTURES

TO MY PHOTOPLAY FRIENDS IN AMERICA:

I am on the job with Essanay at last. I'm here to stay. Count up my forty-six trunks and you will see I am prepared for some time.

Some people say you can't come back. I have exploded that theory for I am back after two years in the French army corps.

I have a new line of comedies which I believe better than any I have produced. I am jumping right into this work now and will be ready to announce my first release shortly.

I have been reported dead. I was wounded, but I am now feeling very much alive. I object to sitting at my own autopsy as long as I have laughs left in me. If I ever cease to make the public laugh, I will be willing to consider myself a dead one. But not till then.

I will be with you personally, on the screen, soon.

Yours for fun,

Investigate CHRISTIE COMEDIES —you'll start booking them at once.

MORE and more exhibitors are realizing that the OPEN MARKET method of film renting is the most profitable, the fairest, and in every way the most advantageous to them. It is the only method whereby the exhibitor can pick just what films he likes, when he likes, where he likes. The time is rapidly approaching when all film manufacturers will see the wisdom of helping the exhibitor make a greater success of his theatre by releasing their films on the OPEN MARKET.

THE CHRISTIE FILM COMPANY is one of the pioneer producers of OPEN MARKET RELEASES. Each week of the year the foremost INDEPENDENT exchanges everywhere offer a new, clean, sensible, laughable

CHRISTIE COMEDY

CHRISTIE COMEDIES are produced by Al. Christie, and feature the popular Betty Compson, Billy Rhodes, Neal Burns, Harry Ham, Eddie Barry and Horace Davy.

FROM Maine to California and from Oregon to Texas, BLUEBIRD Photoplays are sweeping the country with a tremendous wave of popularity, and the fact we want to drive home is that BLUEBIRD popularity and BLUEBIRD superiority has not been won thru advertising or publicity BUT ENTIRELY ON THE EXTRAORDINARY MERITS OF THE PRODUCTIONS THEMSELVES.

There are no finer feature productions now being offered in any market in the world. Comparison picture for picture, considering every minute detail, from the faithfulness of the details up to the story and Stars, NO FEATURE PRODUCTIONS BEGIN to compare with BLUEBIRDS.

Many feature producing concerns are shouting STAR-STAR without regard to story or play; without regard to many other things necessary for perfect productions such as BLUEBIRD Photoplays, while BLUEBIRD takes everything into consideration, with the PLAY always first—then the Stars and then the details.

In BLUEBIRD plays we give the public real Stars. Stars that mean something; plays, novels, stories and scripts that mean something. Direction and a lavishness of details that mean something. In short, BLUEBIRD plays bring to the public EXACTLY WHAT THE PUBLIC WANTS. That's why BLUEBIRDS are sweeping the country. Every week in the Saturday Evening Post 10,000,000 readers are reading all about BLUEBIRD Photoplays. YOU can share in the tremendous National campaign now being conducted by BLUEBIRD Photoplays by arranging for booking NOW.

Patria to Have Greatest Advertising and Publicity Campaign Ever Launched

WITH the definite conclusion to release Patria on January 1st, the International announces the most stupendous advertising and publicity campaign ever launched in connection with a motion picture serial. Patria has already been enormously advertised. The real campaign is now starting.

Patria will be advertised in the newspaper with the largest circulation in 30 of the largest cities in the United States. Full page, half page and quarter pages will be used.

Because of the popularity of Mrs. Vernon Castle, the star, and of Louis Joseph Vance, the author of Patria, newspapers are clamoring for the privilege of publishing the story in serial form. So far arrangements have been made with 25 of the leading ones to that end.

On the Sunday preceding the release of Patria three full pages will be used in each of the Hearst Sunday newspapers, whose combined circulation is more than 2,000,000.

Before the campaign closes, Patria announcements will appear in Cosmopolitan, the magazine with the largest circulation in the world, Hearst's Magazine, Harper's Bazar, Good Housekeeping, Motor and Motor Boating.

Supplementing all of this, more than 200 small newspapers throughout the country will carry the message of Patria.

Before the campaign closes, practically every city, town and hamlet in the United States will have been reached.

International knows Patria is the greatest serial ever produced. It is backing this knowledge with the greatest advertising campaign ever known.

A fortune in box office receipts awaits the exhibitors who book Patria. Films are now in International exchanges, together with a remarkable assortment of paper and exhibitor's helps.

AN EDITORIAL FOR YOU FROM THE N.Y. TELEGRAPH

A serious situation in the motion picture business seems to have arisen in the growing scarcity of short-length films. Producers who have in mind only the exploitation of stars and the possibilities of metropolitan productions, are by way of forgetting the many thousands of small town houses which cannot afford by reason of small seating capacity and limited attendanee-to pay for great features, great names and celebrated productions. The same is true of many of the small neighborhood picture theatres where small prices accompany a general desire for variety.

On the regular stage, the stars of the drama are seldom within the reach of the small houses or the patrons of vaudeville. These facts make plain the need and the commendability of the short film for the 5,000 to 7,000 lesser picture houses which cannot afford the great features or the star performers.

WILLIAM FOX has a NEW YEAR'S gift for motion picture exhibitors all over the world,—something they have never had before, something no other producer offers them,—real laugh makers—

FOXFILM COMEDIES

SCREEN COMEDIES are the most popular box office attractions in filmdom. They are also the most difficult to obtain. Mr. Fox sought to add comedies to his offerings, but he found he could not buy real gloom-dispelling pictures, because nobody made them, so he made them himself,—

FOXFILM COMEDIES

THESE PRODUCTIONS constitute his New Year's gift to exhibitors. A two-reel COMEDY PRODUCTION will be released each week, beginning January 1, 1917. They are available for all exhibitors.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

DECEMBER 23, 1916

"The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" Is New Mutual Serial

NEWSPAPER life is the background for the newest Mutual serial. "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" is its title. The serial consists of 15 stories each complete in itself. Each story deals with a powerful incident in real newspaper life. Each tells the story from the "inside"—depicting in detail the way in which front page news is collected. Many of the stories are founded on real facts. They show girl reporters exposing the evils of the underworld—securing confessions from crooks—interviewing society debutantes—aiding the government in capturing counterfeiters and blackmailers—ferreting out strange crimes—foiling evil plots.

Newspaper Life From the "Inside."

It is hard to conceive anything more fascinating than newspaper life. The whole world lies before the eyes of the star reporter. He delves into all that is queer and unusual. He mingles with the biggest men of the land and the most unscrupulous. Bankers and crooks, presidents and politicians, clergymen and murderers are all "copy" to him. Make the reporter a girl and you double the interest in the situations. Tell the stories from the "inside" and you again increase its fascination. Nothing to compare with this series of newspaper tales has ever before been revealed on the screen.

Each Story Complete.

Each chapter of this fascinating new serial is complete in itself. Each tells the story of a bit of "front-page news" that is more interesting than the news itself. New and unusual thrills will be found in each chapter. "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" was produced by Niagara Film Studios. The pictures were directed by George Terwilliger. They feature such stars as Earl Metcalfe, Helen Green and Zena Keefe. Each chapter is two reels in length. The first is released December 28. Bookings on this new serial can now be made at any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges.

Gaumont's mystery-detective series, "The Vampires," has broken box-office records in many theaters. Its exposure of life in the underworld of Paris is unusually vivid. The surprising twists and turns in its plot keep audiences constantly on edge, and with curiosity whetted for the next episode in the series. Interested exhibitors can obtain bookings on applying to their nearest Mutual exchange.

Powell Studios Are Greatly Enlarged

The studios of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation are being greatly enlarged. In these new and enlarged studios will be made the Nance O'Neil and Marjorie Rambeau Mutual Star Productions, mentioned in these columns the last few weeks. The augmented studios will have a total floor space of 16,000 square feet and be equipped with every modern device that will tend for better pictures. Miss Rambeau's first appearance will be made in "The Greater Woman." This is an adaptation of Algernon Boyeson's famous play of the same name which has been a tremendous success in Europe. Nance O'Neil will make her Mutual debut in "Mrs. Balfame." This play is a dramatization of the celebrated novel by Gertrude Atherton. Thousands have read the novel and are sure to look forward with interest to the picturization of the story. President Freuler paid Mrs. Atherton a tremendous sum for the exclusive right to film this successful book. In so doing he is carrying out his avowed intention of securing the works of the very best authors for film purposes. Bookings on both the Rambeau and O'Neil pictures can now be made at any of the Mutual Exchanges. The exact dates of the first releases featuring these talented stars will be announced shortly.

Chaplin in "The Rink"

Chaplin grows more versatile with each new release. You have seen him in all sorts of situations. But this is his first opportunity to demonstrate his ability as a roller skater. He surely makes the most of it. The very thought of seeing Chaplin on roller skates will bring thousands to the theaters showing "The Rink."

William Russell Is At His Very Best In "The Twinkler"

"THE TWINKLER," a five reel William Russell Mutual Star Production, is scheduled for release the week of December 18. This production was made at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Cal. It is a powerful human interest tale of the underworld. It was written by a convict in Sing Sing penitentiary. It is based on real facts. It gives William Russell a chance to do some of the best acting of his entire career.

Powerful Situations.

Powerful situations abound throughout the picture. Surprises follow one another thick and fast. "The Twinkler" is a light-fingered thief—a "dip"—in police parlance. His "best girl" is sentenced to be electrocuted. "The Twinkler" seeks a pardon for her. The governor's own secretary sets out for the prison with her pardon. On the train the secretary accidentally displays his wallet. The temptation is too strong for "the Twinkler" to resist. He nips the wallet. After hopping off the train he finds within the wallet his sweetheart's pardon. His robbery has sent his loved one to the chair.

Big Human Interest Appeal.

Theater audiences the country over are sure to be held spellbound by the human interest appeal of the tale. The ending of the story is particularly unique. The biggest surprise of all is reserved for the last. Popular though William Russell is today, "The Twinkler" will make him more so. Bookings on all of the Russell pictures can be obtained at any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges.

"Diamond" Sequel Plays to Capacity Business

Reports so far received on the business done by the sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky" prove that it is even a greater box-office magnet than was predicted. Turnaway business has been done at practically every theater showing it. In some places the crowds were so great that it was with difficulty that pedestrians could make their way past the theaters. In several cases re-bookings have already been arranged, so great a drawing card did it prove.

In the latest chapter of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," Helen Holmes performs no less than four separate "stunts" in this single episode. Exhibitors are declaring this chapter play a real housepacker.

A LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS

READ WHAT THESE EXHIBITORS SAY:

"'The Lass of the Lumberlands' is packing our house both afternoon and evening. We had to close the ticket-window several times, as we had no standing-room to sell, but they always come back."

L. J. Hathaway, Mgr., Theatorium, Richmond, Ind.

"Pardon us for not answering your wire regarding second day's booking on 'Lass of the Lumberlands.' I desired to know first if business would warrant it. I find that it does, so kindly arrange bookings for Thursday and Friday hereafter."

C. W. Gates, Mgr., Bijou Theater, Aberdeen, S. D.

"'The Lass of the Lumberlands' bids fair to outdo 'The Girl and the Game' which was one of the best money-getting serials we ever had in the history of the Gem Theatre."

C. Carlin, Mgr., Gem Theatre, Cincinnati, O.

"Contrary to all expectations, which led me to believe that every serial starts out better as to attendance than it continues, I notice that my receipts are increasing weekly as I continue showing 'The Lass of the Lumberlands.'

I can't account for this pleasing condition excepting this serial gets the valuable mouth-to-mouth advertising that no exhibitor can buy."

Facts and Comments

Yes, we would rather have a million friends than a million dollars, and it is a dead sure thing that money could not buy a single friend worthy of the name.

* * *

INTERESTING, indeed, have been some of the figures published in this paper showing the relation of cost to attendance. On a snap judgment it might seem more profitable to play at an increased rental an attraction that brings in receipts in excess of the added cost, but the real figure to be studied is the relative advance in the cost of film. This is something to which few have given serious thought, and yet presently they must give this matter their most earnest consideration. Some years ago a vaudeville manager displayed his books, showing that his attendance figures remained stationary, while each year the cost of his program advanced about one hundred dollars a week. As the house was then showing an average profit of less than eight hundred dollars a week, it seemed as though in the ninth year the cost of the bill would exceed the box office receipts. As a matter of fact, the house turned to picture [illegible] four years later as the simplest way out, but it is again facing the problem of increasing rentals. The cumbersome statistical system sometimes advised are more of a nuisance than the evils they are supposed to check, but some elementary statistical system is necessary to the manager who hopes to remain in the exhibiting business. He must not only know where he stands, but whither he is heading.

* * *

THE man who reads aloud the titles as they flash upon the screen has long been the butt of the picture paragraphist, but he is not at all the joke he seems to be. He is a nuisance against whom other patrons are entitled to protection, and some means should be found to curb his activities. Direct approach is, perhaps, the best way, but this approach must be tactfully made lest the patron be offended. At the same time it is better to lose one patron through direct offense than to suffer a greater loss through the irritation of many. It is not possible to draw the line too strictly, nor should a manager insist upon absolute silence in his auditorium, but there should be some happy medium between perfect order and the riot that obtains in some theaters. Tact will bring about this condition.

* * *

CORDWOOD and vegetables have long been "current funds" in the practice of the rural newspapers, but until lately food in exchange for entertainment has been more of a press stunt than a practical charity, save around Christmas at some special matinee. This year numerous houses are running "potato matinees" and the like to good purpose, and the Strand, of Muncie, Indiana, has a regular schedule of three potatoes, three apples, three onions, three turnips, one egg (storage not barred), two oranges, one can of tomatoes or one jar of jelly or preserves as the admission price to a special matinee given each day between the regular afternoon and evening performances. Each night the collections are turned over to the Winter Relief Association and the scheme was continued for an entire week. This is a practical charity in that while the house benefits from the advertising, the poor are fed, and all at a slight additional cost for current.

* * *

EVEN the prisons are being robbed of some of their hardships. More than one alert press agent has made the State reformatory at Ossining the basis of film publicity, but in other penal institutions the motion picture has, in more legitimate fashion, brought cheer into desolate lives. Good Words, the prison paper of the Federal Prison at Atlanta, Ga., chronicles the opening of the season with Essanay's "The Man Trail" on November 13th, followed by Fox's "The Two Orphans" the next day with Essanay's "The Raven" on the same bill. On the 20th the Theda Bara "Carmen" and Chaplin and Ritchie comedies were much appreciated. At one time it was not uncommon for dramatic companies to visit prisons for a brief entertainment, but these were irregular in occurrence, and, naturally, incomplete in scope, but it is a real and solid charity to brighten the drab lives of men with good pictures, and since it merely involves the loaning of film it is a thing to be commended to exchanges everywhere. Most prisons now own projection machines and the only cost is expressage. Prisons should not be made too attractive, else there is danger of a waiting list, but even men who have erred are entitled to some brightness in life, and nothing brings greater entertainment at smaller expense than a good program of pictures.

Creative Methods—Shaw

By Louis Reeves Harrison

PICTURE if you can a certain illustrious member of the Zeletical Society, also of the Dialectical Society, his whiskers shaved off, prowling around the studios with a scenario under his arm, modestly introducing himself as Mr. G. Bernard. Notwithstanding the fact that he is on easy terms with the most difficult medium of expression in the world, he has come to the conclusion that moving pictures, with their direct appeal to millions of people naturally progressive, offer a superior opportunity to irrigate, freshen and brighten millions of minds, and he has written a scenario.

This scenario has been rejected several times, along with the script of Soda-Fountain Willie and that of Nellie the Beautiful Typist, but G. Bernard is in a state of revolt—he is pre-eminently an intellectual rebel, a hater of dull monotony, especially of the flat and treeless desert of adaptation. He manages to get in contact with the President of a producing concern, and he attempts some of the logical wit that has made him a successful dramatist. "You say that I am disagreeable," he cries, thumping the presidential desk with his fist. "I am glad you think so, for I have roused you from your stupid torpor and made you think a new thought."

"But—ah—" says the President after a half hour's chat over the 'phone with his leading lady, "Mr.—ah—I think you said your name was Bernard—people do not go to the picture show to think. I have just engaged Lily Sapphed to act for us, and she will draw more dollars than all the high-brow stuff you can write." Mr. G. Bernard, having penetrated the art of humbug in an older art of expression, is neither discouraged nor abashed.

"You have a right," declares Mr. Bernard with another thump of the fist, "to make a perfect ass of yourself in private life with one pretty saphead or another, and you may think that you have an inalienable right to make a fool of yourself in business, but you are abusing that right. This pretty girl—there are many thousands in the states—costs two-thirds of your production. You get it back by charging from seventy-five to a hundred dollars a day for exhibition. You kill off the small exhibitor, and thus the great support of the mass who made moving pictures possible and profitable. You have found an easy way to help yourself along while destroying the greatest value of this new art, its popularity with people of limited means."

"Don't interrupt me," roars G. Bernard. "The trouble with you is that you do not take pains—or you do not know how—to publish the right thing to say with such grace, such levity, such charm, that it seems to be a delightful, off-hand utterance. Jar the dulled sensibilities of people if you like. Rouse sluggish blood with some vital motive behind the surface action. You are only administering a soothing syrup. It may taste sweet just now, but it will become sickening as a steady diet. You are trying to inject lassitude into the veins of a people whose race characteristic is energy. Are you wise?"

A sick smile appears on the President's face, an expression of patient boredom, as he calls his typist and asks what time Miss Sapphed is expected in her mauve limousine. G. Bernard rises, throws down a card with his full name and exits. "Say!" the President exclaims to his typist, "don't let any more of those fellows in." Then on scanning the card, "Hurry! Chase after that man. Bring him back. His name on a billboard is worth a fortune to us."

Genius is not so rare as many imagine. The beautiful flower of it is seldom hardy enough, however, to thrive on next to nothing in an unfavorable environment until it attains full growth. The sturdy vigor of Shaw, a native endowment, his pugnacious optimism and a certain amount of newspaper opportunity enabled him to endure hardship and eventually compel recognition. The warm hearthstone is now his, but it is his warm heart that keeps alive recognition that the greatest art of expression is that which reaches out to the minds of the greatest number. With the common people always in mind, he adapts himself tactfully to the claims of commercialism.

"I have to consider," he says, "the extent to which the magic of art can break through commercial prudence, the limits set by honor and humanity to the tasks I may set to my fellow artist the actor: in short, all the factors must be allowed for before the representation of a play becomes practicable or justifiable; factors which some never comprehend, and which others integrate almost as unconsciously as they breathe or digest food." The great dramatist is generous even to the fakir—he must live, but he is inclined to think that while the clockwork mouse may be as amusing as the real one, it will kill the cat who swallows it in good faith.

That great compassion which accompanies breadth of view enables Shaw to see sympathetically all sides of a question. He examines every facet, once the diamond of a thought is cut, and turns on a soft light well calculated to modify its brilliance. There is to be illusion, but no obscurity. He has looked into the depths of human nature and discovered that the light of truth sometimes hurts the eyes.

Only half awake, most of us are unable to stand the full radience of truth, but it may filter through the lace curtains of romance in serene purity and show us where we are. Maintaining the illusion in his attractive presentations, Shaw permits none as to the social complex with which he deals. However he may tone down the light, it must be that of the sun. When he jars us, as he does occasionally, it is because we are slow to free ourselves of theatrical tradition and contemporary prejudice. Then most of us have been wrongly taught at some early period of life, and we are reluctant to leave the stand we have taken for one of unproven safety.

The great dramatist claims boldly and frankly that artistry of presentation is only an instrument, to be employed for definite purposes. "What I really do," he says, "is to take the events of life out of where they have no real bearing on a question and show them in their spiritual and actual relation to each other. I have to connect them by chains of reasoning, and to make bridges of feeling." What are his purposes but those of clarifying what we do not fully comprehend, to call upon us to give up false ideas we are cherishing.

Like Mark Twain, Bernard Shaw is big enough to see the utter hopelessness of the sermon. Preaching lost its hold when human nature refused to be scared by hell fire out of its folly. The only methods by which we can get rid of it now is to reason it out for ourselves, or have some brilliant mind help us to laugh it away. We are just beginning to appreciate that our great humorist was a very serious man at heart. Like Shaw, he simply tried to make us realize our debt to humanity.

We did wonder a bit last summer at receiving quite a lot of reasons from the publicity office of a film-producing concern as to who should be head of the Exhibitors' Organization. We did not need any space fillers at the time, but, gee, they would make interesting reading now. Darn that waste paper basket!

The Problems of the Small Exhibitor

THE big libraries haven't killed the magazine business, nor will the big theaters make the neighborhood houses take a back seat. They are the backbone of the business today, and will be that fifty years from now in all probability. The small exhibitor need not despair of a good living. The best in quality of human minds is not, necessarily, so ambitious that it is dissatisfied and jealous of other men's big successes so long as it has a good thing itself. The good sense and judgment of the many smaller showmen and their money is in the aggregate more valuable to the business than the fewer big contracts of the 3,000-seat exhibitors. They are likely to remain so. The man with a small theater is often a bigger man than his ambitious competitor who speculated and made a big success.

In a village there'll be no big theater in competition and in a small city there aren't likely to be more than two or three. The difference these big houses will make will be more temporary than lasting. Everyone who goes about town knows of them, and many "take in" the show there once in a while or often. Their overhead is enormous; they are too big to be personal, and they are often inaccessible to the patron. What the big theater would like to do is to use up the picture appetite of the whole community. They can't begin to do it. If the three, where there are three, operate on an understanding and run all the good films for one night only they merely advertise the best shows for the neighborhood man to run later. You don't see many old films in these houses. If they make long runs the policy, they have to leave a bonanza untouched. The big house can afford many things beyond the reach of the small exhibitor; but if the patron wants to see a picture, and be sure he does want to, and is going to want to, he'll go where the picture is shown. The business of supplying films may not be ideal just at present, and this may put difficulties in the way of the small man. It will correct itself. The maker who caters to smaller theaters will find that it pays to cater to them even better. The outlook for the future is brighter than the present state; but the present state isn't bad.

The exhibitor has to use his brains and has to get all the help he can from the trade journals and his other friends. If a picture has made a hit downtown he ought to know of it. If it is making hits in other places he should know of that, and he ought to have at hand good, able reviews of all the pictures, and he ought to read them.

What Practical Exhibitors Say

FOR the past few months the stream of correspondence reaching this office in regard to proposed restrictions and special legislation on moving picture theaters has increased very considerably. Most of this correspondence is from exhibitors direct, some of it inclosing editorials from local newspapers.

All of it constrains the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to say for the hundredth time that if ever legalized censorship comes the industry will have to thank those within its own ranks, both producers and exhibitors, who make and exhibit productions that offend public taste.

The industry is big, but not big enough to overlook, nor will it ever be too big, to give careful heed to public opinion. Here is an extract from a letter, dated December first, from a firm of exhibitors controlling three fine theaters in one of our most progressive southern cities. Doubtless there are many other exhibitors in this same position:

The people in this city are certainly on the war path over some of the pictures that have been shown here recently, and unless the makers of regular programs and feature services quit sending us the stuff they are now sending our business is going to follow the saloon and restricted districts and cease to be.

If we take a regular service we are forced to play what is sent us or close up. If we buy in the open market we have to buy trash and sensational stuff.

However, you know all this without our telling you. We could write a book on the subject of what is the matter with the exhibitors' business, but this is a letter of thanks, not of protest. Yours very truly,

MUDD & COLLEY AM. CO.

For all the years of its existence the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has led in the fight against legalized censorship of the moving picture, either local, state or federal. It has done this through its editorial columns, it has spent many hundreds of dollars in sending members of its staff to Albany, to Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, to protest and argue the case before legislative bodies, and it has cheerfully paid all the expense of members of its staff to attend innumerable gatherings of exhibitors for the same purpose. We have mailed to exhibitors everywhere a mass of helpful information on the subject.

In the face of all this it is almost beyond belief to learn that there are exhibitors still in business who do not only flout public opinion, but who attempt to add a few dollars to their miserable receipts by advertising the fact that they have a questionable film or one that has caused censorship troubles in other towns. Only a few weeks ago we cited the case of an exhibitor who hired a brass band to advertise the fact that he had legally fought the local city authorities and won on a film that has stirred up the censorship question all over the country. What short-sighted, asinine reasoning leads anyone to think that he gains anything by antagonizing his fellow townsmen and the very people on whose patronage he depends.

Verily the fools are not all dead yet, as the following letter from President Glamann of the Kansas League will show. The advertisements he refers to were in local Missouri papers, one theater boasting that it was showing only problem plays, and referred to one production which the city authorities had prevented them from showing. The other advertisement was practically along the same lines. Again we say the industry has more to fear from those inside its own ranks than from all outside influences combined.

Motion Picture World,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—I am inclosing two "ads" which I cut from the Kansas City Star today, which will give you some idea of what we Kansas exhibitors will have to contend with when we ask for the repeal of the censor law at the meeting of our next legislature in January.

A few exhibitors are running the picture business, it would seem, for a little extra money. They do not care for the future or for their brother exhibitors. It is such pictures as these which cause censorship.

We realize we have a very hard fight on our hands when we ask for the repeal of the censor law, but if the exhibitors would use a little judgment it would be a very easy victory for us. Missouri does not have a league at the present time, which makes it impossible for us to ask for help through that channel. Won't you please make an appeal through your valuable paper for the good of the whole business to run clean pictures? Very truly yours

C. E. CLAMANN,
President M. P. E. of Kansas.

P. S.—The Kansas City Star is a Missouri paper and the two houses which I have reference to are in Kansas City, Mo.

KEEP THE PICTURES CLEAN AND KEEP THEM OUT OF POLITICS.

Famous Players-Lasky Takes Over Paramount

Big Distributing Organization Absorbed by Producers—No Change in Personnel of Officers

ONE of the most important combinations of interests recently effected in the motion picture industry occurred December 8, when the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which includes among its subsidiaries the Famous Players Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and Pallas Pictures, acquired the controlling interest in the Paramount Pictures Corporation, the distributing medium of the photoplays of those companies.

This musical alignment of photoplay interests places under one control producing and distributing resources. The array of stars under the management of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the studios of its various companies in New York City, Los Angeles and Hollywood, and the chain of exchanges controlled by Paramount form through the consummation of this coalition what is undoubtedly one of the greatest single motion picture organizations and a most comprehensive interlinking of the various units of the business.

The capital stock of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is $12,500,000 and that of Paramount $10,000,000, giving total aggregate resources of $22,500,000. There will be no change of administration in either the parent or the new subsidiary company, Adolph Zukor remaining president of the former and Hiram Abrams continuing as the head of Paramount. The other officers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president; Arthur S. Friend, Treasurer; Elek J. Ludvigh, secretary; Cecil B. De Mille, director general; Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer, and Ralph A. Kohn, assistant secretary. The Paramount staff, which continues in office, is as follows: Hiram Abrams, president; William L. Sherry, vice-president, and James Steele, treasurer and secretary.

The reason for the taking over of control of Paramount by the producing combination lies in its determination to come into a closer direct relationship with the exhibitor, to unify the producing and distributing branches of the business, and to concentrate its activities on a direct photoplay service from producer to theater.

In conformity with the policy that followed the creation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation all the subsidiary companies will preserve their individual identities and will simply be guided in their general policy by the parent company.

"We consider this move to be the logical solution of many of the difficulties which at the present time beset the film business," said Mr. Zukor. "So vast has become the industry in which we are engaged that every step which leads to the solidification of its component parts is inevitably a step in the right direction. The interests of the producer and those of the exhibitors have erroneously been considered to be at variance, and I have always believed this impression to be one of the greatest deterring factors in the art's development. It has therefore been the aim of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to establish direct contact with the exhibitors, who will readily perceive the possibility of the economies that will automatically result from this combination of interests and which will become manifest to them in the form of better productions."

"When I assumed the duties of President of Paramount," said Mr. Abrams, "I found that the co-operation which then existed between the producers and Paramount virtually amounted to the unification of the entire system into one great whole. The complete merging of our interests was practically inevitable. The assumption of control by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of its distributing medium means one thing—better pictures, because the avenues between sfudio and theater will now be so much more direct. I am confident the result will be a program of photoplays more consistent in excellence than was ever possible under former conditions of divided interests and authority."

The tracing of the events which led up to the consummation of this great deal is like recounting the history of the development of the feature play from its inception.

It was in April, 1912, that the Famous Players Film Company was formed for the express purpose of introducing to the motion picture public the great stage stars who had thus far refused to appear on the screen. Having had great difficulty in obtaining the type of photoplay which he demanded for his own theaters, Adolph Zukor determined he would go into the producing field himself and make feature photoplays that would conform to his standards as an exhibitor.

Despite the fact that there was scarcely a stage star of any repute who would appear on the screen at that time, Mr. Zukor interested Daniel Frohman in his idea, and the Famous Players proceeded to enlist one stage celebrity after the other, until to-day that company has the unique record of having introduced no less than forty-five well-known stage stars on the screen, many of whom have become permanent photoplayers.

Though the Famous Players Film Company was the first to institute a program of feature productions, its pioneer work was so successful that the company was soon forced to increase its annual output.

In November, 1913, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was organized with the purpose of increasing the artistic possibilities of the screen. It has among its stars many notables, among them Geraldine Farrar, whose entry into the motion picture world was one of the most sensational events of last year.

The desire of these two producing companies to ally themselves on the same program resulted in the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation in September, 1914, which included in its program of releases the productions of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and of Pallas Pictures.

Thomas A. Curran—Thanhouser Leading Man

THOMAS A. CURRAN, who is "James Palmer," the villainous pursuer of Jeanne Eagels in Thanhouser's "The World and the Woman," soon to be released through Pathe, is an Australian. Born in the antipodes, he went to San Francisco, seeking his fortune as an actor. He learned his profession in stock and vaudeville on the Pacific Coast and decided that his best opportunity lay in his home country. He returned to Australia and for several years played in musical comedies, touring Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

In 1912 he came back to the United States and played in vaudeville in a sketch, "His Father's Son." He joined "Oh, Oh, Delphine" and later played the Englishman in "Excuse Me."

Mr. Curran decided to try motion pictures and was immediately successful. After several engagements with Metro, Universal and Famous Players, he joined Thanhouser.

Mr. Curran gained great fame as the artist in Audrey Munson's "Inspiration" and as the elder brother in Frederick Warde's "Silas Marner," both well known Thanhouser productions. He has important parts in "The Pillory," featuring Florence La Badie; "A Modern Monte Cristo," in which Vincent Serrano is to be starred, and in "The Vicar of Wakefield," a Frederick Warde play now being made at the Thanhouser studios.

Thomas A. Curran.

CONNESS IN SHERRILL PRODUCTION.

Robert Conness is now engaged in a picturization of "The Rainbow," in which he is playing Henry Miller's old part. The picture will be released by the W. L. Sherrill Feature Corporation December 21.

Happy and Prosperous

New Year

From the Staff of the Moving Picture World

Christmas 1916

Christmastide with its glad Message of Peace and Goodwill is with us once more. The thoughts of millions, not only in this great country, but all over the world, turn toward their fellowmen with a kindlier feeling, and especially toward the young. We vie with each other in an endeavor to bring some additional happiness into other lives and often wish that the spirit of Christmas might remain throughout the year.

Can we not feel that our great moving picture industry comes nearer being an all year round Santa Claus than anything else we can think of? When we remember the millions who receive entertainment, amusement, relaxation and mirth from the moving picture every day of the year, and when we also remember that this great art is educating all races through a language understood by all and bringing a clearer and better knowledge and understanding between peoples, surely we may be proud of the industry and its achievement.

Let us determine that it shall be rid of all harmful influences and everything that gives needless offense, and that it shall fill more completely than ever before during the coming year its great mission of good cheer, harmless amusement and helpful and educational entertainment.

Stanley Mastbaum Is Host to Film Men

Over Two Hundred Producers, Exchangemen and Exhibitors Dine and Listen to Interesting Speeches

PHILADELPHIA film men showed New York some thing on the evening of Wednesday, December 6. It was at the home of that big and charitable sort of man New Yorkers present feel their own town needed to take a real brace. Stanley V. Mastbaum, the big film man of the City of Brotherly Love, was host to producers, exchangemen and exhibitors to the number of an even dozen over two hundred. There was a dinner on the roof of the Bellevue-Stratford, there was a vaudeville entertainment—it did entertain, too—and there were many speeches by men representing big business, the bar, the censors, the producers, the exhibitors, the distributors and the press.

Stanley V. Mastbaum.

The dinner primarily was given to the members of the Stanley Exhibitors' Association, the organization of Pennsylvania showmen who book their films through the Stanley company. Present to meet them were many producers and film men from New York, invited, according to Mr. Mastbaum in a welcoming address, to afford the exhibitors of Eastern Pennsylvania an opportunity to come in contact with the men who make the pictures they exhibit. Present also were Louis J. Breitinger, the head of the censorship board of the Keystone State, and Joseph L. Kun, his legal adviser, of the staff of the Attorney General.

Siegmund ("Pop") Lubin received one of the heartiest greetings of the night. The pioneer was seemingly in good health and certainly in the cheeriest mood. He kept the party in continual laughter, following his opening remark that he recalled the time when he took a picture of a horse eating hay there was no one then to censor the picture. George H. Earle, Jr., introduced as a doctor of business, and Felix Isman, the big real estate operator, also spoke.

Among the New Yorkers present were Hiram Abrams, Felix Feist, Arthur S. Friend, Samuel Goldfish, Walter E. Green, Earl Gulick, Walter W. Irwin, Carl Laemmle, Al Lichtman, Mitchell H. Mark, B. S. Moss, Carl H. Pierce, Lewis J. Selznick and Adolph Zukor.

The party gathered at 6 o'clock. After three-quarters of an hour of informal converse the guests filed into the dining hall. The tables, decorated with freshly cut roses, were arranged in the form of a letter M. Over the stage at the end of the room was printed in letters of light, "Stanley—In Union There Is Strength." On the stage were massed two-score musicians from the Stanley theaters, playing the stirring strains of the Stanley March, dedicated to Mr. Mastbaum. It was an inspiring beginning. Joseph M. McCready, who had that day been elected president of the Stanley Exhibitors' Association, introduced Mr. Mastbaum, who asked that business be suspended until the dinner was finished, when he intimated there were many things to be talked over by the guests. In the meantime he urged them to go the limit and enjoy themselves.

During the serving of the dinner, which in itself was representative of the best that Philadelphia affords—or any other old town, for that matter—there was a vaudeville entertainment. It consisted of singing, dancing and instrumental numbers. One of the latter that made a marked hit was the violin playing of Miss Ollie White, from Croskey's theater.

During the course of the evening Mr. Mastbaum was presented with a large loving cup by the members of the Stanley Exhibitors' Association, as a token of the esteem and affection of the men who compose it. After the cigars had been lighted Toastmaster McCready called on a long line of speakers. Near the end of the program he surrendered the gavel to Jules Mastbaum, "Exhibit B," as one of the lawyers present described him. He kept up the pace of his predecessor, inquiring at the close if there was any one who wanted to talk who might have been overlooked.

The speakers were, besides those already mentioned, John McCarthy, Lewis J. Selznick, who aroused great enthusiasm when he said the Lubin studios had been brought under his jurisdiction; Adolph Zukor, Harry Jordan, Horace Stern, W. W. Irwin, Harry Knapp, dramatic critic of the Inquirer; George Blaisdell, Samuel Spedon, W. Stephen Bush, Mitchell Mark, Felix Isman, Samuel Goldfish, Arthur Friend, Richard Beamish, Colonel Samuel D. Lit, William Smith and Abe Einstein, the latter of whom is credited with being the father of the splendid arrangements for the night. It is said and it is entirely creditable he has worked on them for a month, from sun-up to midnight. Letters of regret were read from William A. Brady, Frank J. Rembusch, Herbert Brenon and Jesse L. Lasky.

During the evening a motion picture was taken and one was shown. About 250 feet were taken by the Tisdale Industrial Motion Picture Company, which had installed many lamps for the purpose. These were exhibited in Philadelphia the evening following. The showing of the single picture marked one of the prettiest incidents of the night. It was a close-up of the mother of the host, taken that morning for the occasion. It was greeted with prolonged applause.

Those present other than those already named were:

What Some of the Speakers Said.

"Two years ago, when the Stanley Company was formed," said Toastmaster McCready in his opening remarks, "it furnished bookings for eleven theaters. Today eighty-five theaters are booking through that office. I am going to say that a year hence, when we again celebrate, there will be one hundred and eighty-five theaters. The name Stanley has burst the bonds of a local tradition and is now spreading fast through the country. All the theaters now booking through the company approximate in valuation $8,000,000. That is some sum of money. This association was formed permanently today and I have been elected to its presidency."

Mr. McCready then presented to Mr. Mastbaum the loving cup, the acceptance of which was followed by the cheers of the diners.

"We welcome investigation of conditions in this territory," said Mr. Mastbaum, after his formal acceptance of the token. "That is why we arranged this dinner, so that exchangemen, film men and exhibitors could meet so many interested people. We welcome you all."

"The motion picture not only brings back to us something of the past," said Attorney John A. McCarthy, who spoke as a "fan" rather than as a lawyer professionally interested in the industry, "but also brings to us something we hope for in the future."

"Mr. Mastbaum converted me just as he has converted you," said Mr. Selznick. "He satisfied me that you were getting a square deal. If at any time you feel as if you wanted relief take your case to Mr. Mastbaum. If you can't get it from him come to me." Mr. Selznick then made the announcement in regard to taking over the Lubin studios.

"This gathering is an inspiration to me," said Mr. Zukor. "Looking back four or five years, to the time when the formation of the Famous Players company was under consideration, when we were in doubt as to whether the project would be a success or a failure, I cannot help thinking if then we had had the good fortune to look upon such an intelligent audience as we have here tonight and all interested in motion pictures, there would have been no doubt as to the success of our undertaking. At that time it was a question whether pictures of quality and with nothing sensational in them would attract the exhibitor. I did believe they would attract the great public. Since then conditions have changed and for our faith in the industry we have been amply rewarded. Undoubtedly, we all owe a great deal to such men as Mr. Mastbaum, men with vision. Mr. Mastbaum was one of the first to book pictures for a run.

"One of the principal reasons operating against the run was the small capacity of the theaters. Nearly every one depended on the display in the front of the theater to attract passers-by. Mr. Mastbaum was the first to take a theater with a big capacity. I think he will bear me out in the statement that he had a struggle in the beginning. He had the nerve and foresight to stick to his policy until he turned the tide. It is men of the make-up of Mastbaum who furnish the inspiration to do the things that will attract the good American element to the picture theaters and to induce it to take them seriously. I don't think we have as yet accomplished our aim, but we are on the upward trend. We need your assistance and co-operation, you need ours.

"I want to say personally of the organization I represent, that in all dealings with exchangemen we have at no time tried to force a deal whereby we knew that they could not live or make it profitable for you gentlemen. We have at all times tried to make terms on such a basis that all could live. You must be paid for your effort and your labor and your investment must be safeguarded. If you don't make any money I want to be on the same side with you. If you are making money I want to share with you, nothing beyond."

Horace Stern was greeted with a ripple of mirth when he expressed doubt as to whether he should discuss censorship in the presence of Mr. Breitinger, chairman of the Pennsylvania censors, in view of the fact he often had to appear before that official. "Censorship should be based on public opinion, on the average intelligence of the community," said Mr. Stern. "If censorship should be based on the average moral sentiment of the community there would be no complaint. I don't think censorship should give us moral pills. If the public wants Charlie Chaplin the public should have Charlie Chaplin. The average person is entitled to his views as to what is ethical in life, and the standard should be of that average person.

"One more thought, and that is this: Censorship is based upon the fact that nothing should be produced in moving pictures that a child cannot see. I, for one, don't think this is a proper standard. If it is improper for a child to see a picture keep the child away from seeing that picture." Mr. Stern expressed his opposition to the theory that two men and one woman should say what pictures should be seen by the eight or nine millions of Pennsylvanians.

Louis J. Breitinger was next introduced as "the man who sits on the lid and who tells us what the public shall and shall not see."

"I don't see why I should be injected at this time," said Mr. Breitinger, "when criticism is in the air. I am only too glad to hear it, nevertheless. It is a very unpleasant task or duty we have to perform. I felt when the bureau was organized it really was a police task. Censorship is repugnant to the trade, to all Americans, in fact. When we think of the word censorship we feel it is an arbitrary word."

Mr. Breitinger gave some figures relating to his past year's work, saying the board had passed 45,429 reels and collected $49,000. "I trust next year we will collect no fines whatever," said the State chairman, after mentioning that the past year $5,385 was collected under that head. "I hope that you will not only live with censorship, but that you will outlive it," he said in closing.

"Some men say that censorship is an attack upon the right of free speech," said Mr. Kun. "Free speech does not mean that you can say anything or everything at any time or place. Free speech in this great country simply means that you have the right to express your opinion, but it must be done in a legal, orderly way. Free speech does not mean that a man may use vile language. That is not the free speech that the constitution specifies. Thus men can only succeed by abiding with the law.

"It is not censorship that is wrong. It is not the idea. It may be that sometimes those who are temporarily in charge of the administration of the law are the very men who are not average persons. This is the real test. It is not the law. The law is all right. In high government offices you don't always have the best man to administer the law. That is the test, the thing you want to bear in mind. I suggest the censor member we have here tonight is not the unfit member. (Great cheering.)

"We have put in an amendment to the censor bill which we hope to pass at the next session to give the chairman of the board of censors the final authority on a picture. If we put that over, gentlemen, you know you will have no complaint to make. I know from the caliber of the men around this board that you will not put over on the people of this commonwealth anything they should not see. The laws of this state don't give the right to pass a picture conditionally—that children shall not be admitted. It is believed to be a sensible thing to have pictures closed to children, but we have not the power. There is ample time to prepare such an amendment."

"We have arrived at a time in this industry in this country when there must be genuine co-operation," said Mr. Irwin. "Unless we begin to organize and to co-operate we are likely to find that the larger part of the world is so closely organized we will be unable to compete with them when the war is over. The producer and the distributor will be glad to co-operate with every exhibitors' organization so long as the exhibitors select for their head men of the broad caliber, fair disposition and the integrity of Mr. Mastbaum.

"I can't understand how any one in this democracy, in this city of Brotherly Love where the constitution was signed, can say that the motion picture is different from free speech or that there is nothing wrong about censorship. The principle of censorship must be repugnant in any democracy."

"American Ambulance" Pictures at Strand

THE Strand theater, with its splendid orchestra, was put freely at the services of the people who are generously promoting four reels of cinematographic film, "American Ambulance Field Service in France," already reviewed in this publication, to raise more funds to carry on the work of relief for wounded soldiers which these Red Cross ambulances are doing in France. This theater has over 3,000 seats and the house was packed at $5 a seat, with boxes in demand at $100 a box. Besides this, programs beautifully illustrated, at $1, went as fast as they could be provided. And more than this, some $36,000 was voluntarily subscribed for the cause during the performance.

As a stirring experience it was worth $5 a seat. The music, songs and speeches in conjunction with the pictures of the ambulances, their work at the front where the fighting is going on, and with added glimpses of the flying corps, made up a program of quality that is seldom to be enjoyed and only on occasions of special appeal like this. The audience was made up of many of the leaders in thought and action of this nation and was representative of American feeling in this matter of giving neutral help with the respect and gratitude which we as a nation naturally gave to the sister republic who stood by us in our need. This same enthusiasm can be made use of in every place where this picture is put on exhibition, if those who have it in charge get the right people to back it and support it.

The Strand announces that the film will be shown on its regular program from Sunday, December 10. At the showing, semi-private, of December 8, a showing which interrupted the regular show, there were at 2.45 P. M. 2,163 automobiles parked up as far as 54th street.

U. S. Theater, Bronx, Opened.

Fleischman & Goldreyer Establishes Handsome 2,400 Seat House—Charges 15 and 20 Cents Admission.

CAPACITY business marked the opening of Fleischman & Goldreyer's U. S. theater, situated at Webster avenue and 195th street, Bronx, New York City, on Saturday evening, December 2. This beautiful photoplay house, which is the newest to be opened in the Borough of the Bronx and which has a seating capacity of 2,400, was started on its career with "Civilization."

The U. S. theater represents an investment of over $100,000, and is the acme of comfort and convenience; it is a structure dedicated to the exploitation of high class motion pictures of which the inhabitants of the Bronx may justly be proud. The house is under the management of Jules Sarzin, who opened the other Fleischman & Goldreyer theater, the Majestic, 186th street and St. Nicholas avenue, a little over a year ago.

The U. S. has an orchestra of eight pieces, but it is the intention of the management to augment the musical accompaniment by the installation in the near future of a big pipe organ. The house is opened at 1:30 p. m. and gives a continuous show until 11 p. m. The Power's 6b machines are used, and the pictures are projected upon a seamless Atmospheric screen. The admission prices are 15 and 20 cents.

General Film War Pictures

Will Distribute the Charles Urban Product Taken Under Permission of British Government.

GENERAL Film Company has for distribution a series of war films. The films were photographed under the supervision of Charles Urban, who was officially appointed by the British Government, including those handled for a time by the Patriot Film Corporation. The films will be released in two-thousand-feet lengths. They will not be released on the General Film program, but will be distributed as special releases, one release a week. The first installment is scheduled for January 8, 1917. It is announced that the rentals on these films will be used to promote war relief work.

There are already in this country, it is announced, about 80,000 feet of war pictures. These will be edited and titled from official records. Among the early releases are "Kitchener's Great Army" and "Jellicoe's Great Fleet."

According to Robert W. Priest, who is one of the leaders in the exploitation of the films, the pictures will take the form of visualized news of the war, supplemented by Charles Urban's animated war maps. It is claimed for the films that they show war in its every phase—that Tommy Atkins is seen from the time he meets up with the recruiting officer until he reaches the trench, and afterward. The films are said to have been taken with the sanction of the British War Office, the British Admiralty, the Minister of Munitions and several other officials and bodies, all of which are represented in the British Cinema Committee. The films are also sponsored in this country by men and women prominent in war relief work.

P. H. Smith Makes Record With Metro

P. H. SMITH, well known in the film world and who has been in charge of the N. Y. City territory for Metro ever since the birth of that organization, has indeed good reason to feel proud of the record he has established for that concern. Mr. Smith up to the infantile paralysis ban was carrying over 55 per cent. of the theaters in N. Y. City using program service. This is remarkable, in view of the short time Metro has been in the field, and in the face of strong competition, with the numerous programs and features in the market. This has been accomplished only by hard earnest efforts and close application to his business.

P. H. Smith.

Mr. Smith has made many friends among the exhibitors through his kind and courteous treatment and by his clean honest methods of handling their accounts. Mr. Smith's territory includes not only New York City but Staten Island, Yonkers, Mt. Vernon, New Rochelle and White Plains. This he is handling entirely by himself, there being no other representative in the field.

Gosh, but it takes a whole lot of whitewash to cover a room papered with stock certificates even when experts are on the job.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE ORGANIZER.

In answer to recent inquiries in regard to the Exhibitors' League Organizations and for the information of exhibitors in any of the States, readers will kindly note that Fred J. Herrington is National Organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. All correspondence on the subject may be addressed to him at 402 Knox avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Michigan Exhibitor Sounds Warning

Says the Theater Manager Must Obey the Law and Respect Public Opinion.

GEORGE W. TRENDLE says that the best method for obtaining results along legislative lines is not to be antagonistic but by co-operation with those who are advocating reforms. To the Moving Picture World representative Mr. Trendle expressed the following views:

Co-operation the Keynote.

"In the writer's opinion, the motion picture business is, at the present time, very much in the same position as the liquor business was in two years ago. Ever since then a determined effort was made on the part of the liquor manufacturers and all clean retailers to secure co-operation of the entire industry to better conditions and obtain the influence of favorable public opinion; but the unscrupulous dealer insisted upon disobeying the laws and refused to co-operate in order to make a few extra dollars, thereby succeeding in counteracting all of the efforts made, and as the public usually classes an industry by its lowest unit, the failure on the part of the selfish retailer to see far enough ahead coupled with the failure of the manufacturer to eliminate him entirely created an antagonistic condition and the election in Michigan on November 7 was the final result—i. e., failure to co-operate with those who sought the proper regulation of the industry brought disaster.

Element of Public Opinion.

"In the film business, even more so than the liquor business, does the element of public opinion enter into the future welfare of the industry, for in this business not only the wife but also the husband becomes interested in the moral standard of the entertainment which may be offered to the children from week to week, and the failure on the part of the Michigan exhibitors to follow the trend of public opinion in this particular can only result eventually in the same disastrous finale as that which the liquor interests suffered when the prohibition amendment was passed.

"Instead of trying to curb legislation to provide clean amusement for the children and the parents as well, it should be the object of exhibitors' organizations to throw the weight of their influence on the side of public opinion, which demands clean productions, whether they feel that they should do so from a sense of moral duty or not, as it is only reasonable to suppose that their financial future is absolutely controlled by public opinion, for without the good will of the public this business will not continue to be successful. The only safe way to control legislation, or secure proper laws on this great question, is by co-operation with civic bodies, instead of by antagonism. They realize that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League knows the situation better than they themselves, and just a fair, reasonable argument will bring about legislation fair to all. Directly opposite standards, with the general public in the majority can only mean one thing, and that is, disastrous legislation, unless the manufacturers themselves realize the situation and step in before the Exhibitors' Leagues do too much damage, which is just what the breweries now regret that they did not do.

What Happened in Ohio.

"Had the Ohio State exhibitors co-operated with all of the various organizations seeking to improve the quality of motion pictures instead of openly declaring themselves to be against any censorship or improvement, the Ohio Censorship Bill would never have been introduced.

"If the motion picture exhibitors of Michigan cannot be made to see that they are on as dangerous ground and that the same result will occur unless a change of heart is experienced, the motion picture business in this State will experience serious difficulties in the very near future. While the average exhibitor will say this comparison is not a correct one, as the interests involved are entirely different and that the motion picture business of today is above criticism, the truth is that the majority of the women of our country see it differently and unless we can satisfy them the censorship question will always be before us. Therefore, I say that with the prohibition vote before us, why not forget legislation and laws and build up a machine of satisfied patrons and pleased civic societies through co-operation, rather than antagonism, which, after all, means public opinion, and as legislation always follows public opinion sooner or later, you have solved the problem."

CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS NOMINATE OFFICERS.

Candidates for the various offices in the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce were named at a recent meeting of the organization, at which the nominating committee reported the following tickets: Red, President, F. L. Emmert; vice-president, A. G. Hettesheimer; second vice-president, Henry Hoefle; treasurer, John J. Huss; sergeant-at-arms, J. J. Meiss. Blue, president, Otto Dieckman; vice-president, Theodore Bley; second vice-president, J. J. Huebner; treasurer, J. A. Ackerman; sergeant-at-arms, Geo. F. Horning. H. Serkowich, of the Chamber of Commerce, was named as secretary on both tickets, so it seems probable that he will be elected. The election proper will be held this month.

At a succeeding meeting secret bids were filed by exhibitors for the honor of first run of the "Whoozoo?" film, in which the animals at the Zoo are featured, and part of the proceeds of which will go to the worthy purpose of buying the Zoo for the public. Competition for the use of the film is keen, and while probably every house in the city will run it, the first run will be not only popular, but profitable as well. the film is the more interesting as the first appearance as a scenario writer of Luke McLuke, otherwise J. S. Hastings, the widely-known "column" writer of the Cincinnati Enquirer.

LEAGUE MEMBERS TO SHOW ZOO FILM.

The motion picture exhibitors of Cincinnati are generously lending their screens in a popular campaign for turning the Cincinnati Zoological Gardens into a public instead of private enterprise. Two philanthropic women have each donated $125,000 and the public is called upon to donate $125,000 by January 1st to "Save the Zoo." James S. Hastings, known as "Luke McLuke," of the "Cincinnati Enquirer," has written a scenario "Whozoo," which has been produced by the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company under direction of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The League's committee consists of F. L. Emmert, its president; Amos Foster, I. W. McMahan, Charles Weigen and H. Serkowich.

Arrangements have been made to exhibit this film, which depicts the consternation of the animals at the possibility of losing their homes at the Cincinnati Zoo and going elsewhere, at about 100 theaters, the owners or managers of which are members of the League. Collection boxes will be placed at all theaters for Zoo fund contributions, and a special Zoo day is scheduled, when a percentage of the receipts of the various houses will be contributed to the fund.

Ochs Committee Meets and Adjourns

Attorney Keppler Will Be Furnished Copy of All Minutes Before Sessions Are Resumed.

A MEETING of the committee investigating the charges against Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, printed last month in Variety, was held at the rooms of the Manhattan local on Friday, December 8, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. Present were Chairman Samuel H. Trigger, Secretary Charles Steiner, and Messrs. Oestricher, Rhonheimer, Ascher, Anson, and Samuelson. Also in attendance were J. Robert Rubin, counsel for the committee; Tobias A. Keppler and his clients, Fleischman & Goldreyer.

Mr. Trigger stated in opening the meeting that the action of the committee at its last hearing in closing the doors on the reporters was due to the advice of Mr. Rubin. He said further if the members of the press did not receive a copy of the proceedings of the secret session it was not the fault of the committee. He said the stenographer had not had time to get out the minutes, but that they would be ready at noon on that day and ready for the inspection of reporters.

Mr. Rubin said his object in advising shutting out the representatives of the trade papers had been to expedite business, that there had been noted a tendency on the part of every one connected with the hearing to "talk for the press," to "spar for position." He stated that at the previous meeting, owing to the absence of reporters, the committee had been able to make progress. He expressed his regret at the inability of the reporters to get a copy of the minutes.

Mr. Keppler called attention to the fact that he had not yet received an official copy of the proceedings of the hearing held on November 18 nor for a major part of the proceedings of December 1. He asked that the meeting be adjourned so that he could be furnished by the committee with a complete copy of the record and that the next meeting be called five days after he had received these, at which time he would be ready to proceed.

"I feel we have devoted much time to this investigation and we would like to get through," said Mr. Trigger. "One paper gave full details of the proceedings of November 18 and it was a fair report.

"In handling testimony you cannot take a newspaper report for a record," said Mr. Keppler. Mr. Keppler said he had, however, asked the paper in question, meaning the Moving Picture World, for a complete copy of its reporter's record, but that journal had deemed it advisable to decline.

Mr. Anson made a motion and Mr. Steiner seconded it that the committee adjourn in accordance with the request of Mr. Keppler. There was but one dissenting vote.

Mr. Ochs was not in attendance at the hearing.

According to the minutes of the secret session held on December 1 the proceedings were devoted to an examination of Mr. Ochs and Mr. Fleischman. The testimony had to do with the relations of the two men as neighboring exhibitors in the Bronx. There were introduced several letters written by exchange managers to Mr. Ochs denying the truth of the charges that caused the hearing.

One fact brought out in the examination of Mr. Fleischman was that the Pathe service had been restored to Fleischman & Goldreyer.

At the conclusion of the hearing Mr. Ochs asked the committee to sum up and reach a decision in the case, but the committee decided to wait for the presentation of Mr. Keppler's witnesses and any further evidence he may have to offer.

TRIGGER THROWS HATS IN TWO RINGS.

Samuel H. Trigger announced this week his candidacy for the presidency of Manhattan Local, Exhibitors' League of America, and for New York State branch. The former election will be held December 20 and the latter in February. Opposing Mr. Trigger for the position of Manhattan executive will be Charles Steiner. Mr. Steiner is secretary of the committee investigating the allegations against President Ochs of the National League and Mr. Trigger is the chairman.

Mr. Trigger, who was the first president of the State branch, will in January make a tour of the local organizations throughout New York accompanied by Emmet Cornell, State treasurer. The two offices for which Mr. Trigger is a candidate are at present held by National President Ochs.

Capitol District Association Formed

Is Combination of Exhibitors of Albany, Troy and Schenectady, N. Y.—Officers Elected.

ON THE evening of Wednesday, December 6, at a joint meeting of the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League locals of Albany, Troy and Schenectady, N. Y., held at the New Mohawk hotel, Schenectady, it was decided to combine the membership under the title the Capitol District Association. These officers were elected: President, L. A. Buettner, Cohoes; vice-presidents, Messrs. Miners, Buck and H. L. Levy; secretary, Mr. Apple; treasurer, F. N. Barhydt, Troy.

The committee in charge of the meeting was complimented for the very excellent beefsteak supper that was served just before the meeting. It was decided to hold the next meeting at the Regent theater, Albany, N. Y., on Wednesday evening, December 13.

Among the subjects discussed was the Sunday closing decision, and Mr. Bender, upon whose case the decision was rendered, said that he proposed to appeal his case.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of December 10 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Oliver Twist" at the Strand.

THE Strand theater presented Marie Doro in a photodramatic version of Charles Dicken's famous story, "Oliver Twist." Marie Doro was an ideal Oliver, when she appeared in the all-star revival of the famous play on the speaking stage a few years ago, and repeats her success in the screen version. Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, Elsie Jane Wilson, and James Neill have the other important roles.

"Our American Boys in The European War," a new comedy, another chapter of Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," and The Strand Topical Review were also shown.

Nadine Legot and Enrico Arenzen were the soloists.

"The Witching Hour" at the Rialto.

"The Witching Hour" was the week's feature at The Rialto. The Frohman Amusement Corporation, which produced the picture, chose an excellent cast, headed by C. Aubrey Smith as Jack Brookfield, the gambler, and Marie Shotwell as the sweetheart of earlier days whose son Brookfield saves from conviction for murder. Augustus Thomas, after seeing the private showing of this picture, paid it the highest possible compliment by admitting to President Sherrill of the Frohman company that it excelled the stage version.

Beginning Monday, Charles Chaplin, in "The Rink," demonstrated the humorous possibilities of the skating craze. There were also the usual scenic and educational features with the "Literary Digest of the Screen" for good measure. The soloists were Jenny Dugan and Vincente Ballester.

"The People vs. John Doe" at the Broadway.

At the Broadway theater the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. has launched its new feature photoplay, "The People vs. John Doe," on an engagement of two weeks. The play is being presented by the Universal under the auspices of the Humanitarian Cult, of which Misha Appelbaum is the founder and leader, and which numbers something over 100,000 members. It is an organization for the lessening of undue suffering caused through the machination of so-called justice. The film is the work of Lois Weber, and has to do with a man convicted of murder and sentenced to the electric chair. Circumstantial evidence is the closest approach to proof of his guilt.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four new pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, the screen attractions were Mae Marsh in "The Wharf Rat," and Charlie Chaplin in "The Rink."

Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, W. Desmond and Dorothy Dalton in "A Gamble in Souls" and a Keystone comedy, produced by Mack Sennett, were on the program.

GEORGE TUCKER COMING TO NEW YORK.

George Loane Tucker, the American director, who for several years has been producing with marked success for the London Film Company, sailed from England for New York on the steamship New York on December 9.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Hold Meeting

Decide to Look Into Activities of Hoy Reporting Service—F. I. L. M. Club Adjuster.

THREESCORE members of the Associated Brooklyn Exhibitors gathered at the Triangle theater for a regular session at midnight on December 9. The meeting lasted two hours and a half. In that time a mass of interesting business was brought to the attention of the members and acted upon. The Hoy Reporting Service, the "adjusting" representative of the local F. I. L. M. Club, was the subject of much discussion, and a committee of three was appointed to investigate its activities.

Executive Secretary William Brandt broke a lance on the executive committee of the board of the National League, accusing its members of accomplishing little in their periodical meetings. One question to which he tried hard to find an answer was what steps, if any, have been taken by the national executive committee to increase the membership from the reported ratio of less than 5 per cent. of the exhibitors of the country. He charged the board with laxity.

Three representatives of National President Ochs' trade paper addressed the local and asked for indorsement and the formal designation of the publication as the official journal of the body. These three were the editor, the secretary-treasurer and the advertising solicitor. The members acceeded to the former request, but flatly refused the second, one member remarking it was a "private enterprise." Secretary-Treasurer Louis Blumenthal of the new paper in the course of his remarks said that the inception of the publishing venture was primarily due to the attitude of the other trade papers last spring toward the Manhattan exhibitors during the latter's controversy with the Board of Trade over the exposition.

Louis Levine made a report for the committee on fire insurance statistics. He complained of a lack of interest in a subject of importance to exhibitors. The members were urged by President John Manheimer to forward to Mr. Levine the details of the insurance carried, the amount of premium paid and the fire loss, if any.

Mr. Levine also reported as to the result of the conference between the Brooklyn and Manhattan locals and the F. I. L. M. Club the previous Thursday evening in an effort to agree upon a common carrier for film between exchanges and theatres. There was a sentiment among the members that the exhibitors had not been fairly treated by the club, that the theater men were given no voice in the selection of a carrier. The meeting voted to disapprove the selection of the conference and to discharge the committee.

Mr. Brandt made an effort to learn what had been accomplished by the national executive committee in its recent sessions. In response to his charge that over 95 per cent. of the exhibitors of the country were without the ranks of the League, that the great deposit question remained unsolved, and that the average theater was suffering from the unfair competition of the chain houses, he was told that Fred J. Herrington had been named organizer.

"We are vitally interested in every one of these questions," declared Mr. Brant. "Here are chain houses showing eight vaudeville acts, a long feature and a Chaplin for 10 and 15 cents. We can't compete with that. The deposit system is getting worse. One of the new feature companies not only requires deposits, but asks for a certified check ten days in advance. These questions should be brought to the attention of the national committee. It seems to me it has been lax in not taking them up. The members meet and apparently do nothing. It means we will have to take care of them as a local if we can't get a hand from the national body."

"As regards the chain theaters question, the trouble does not lie with the houses," said President Manheimer. "The trouble lies with the exchanges. They give these houses service at prices less than they charge us. I can give you an instance of a feature for which you would have had to pay $100 or $150 going to one of these chain houses for $75 and the personal appearance of the very famous star of the picture thrown in—a star you could not hire to appear in your house. The exchanges say they are going to do away with the unscrupulous exhibitors. If we have unscrupulous exchangemen we must do away with them, too."

A flood of complaints followed the last remark of Mr. Manheimer. One that aroused perhaps the greatest indignation was the experience of an exhibitor who on a Saturday was notified by the license commissioner that a show he had booked up for the following Sunday and Monday was banned, that if he put it on his license would be summarily revoked. The exchange offered him no relief. The manager insisted he show the subject in spite of the inhibition, saying he would have to pay for the two days' booking.

One exhibitor read a letter threatening him with penalties if he failed to adjust a charge of $1.25, which he insisted was unjust. On top of that was a claim for an extra day's rental of a subject which he had delivered to the carrier at 11 o'clock on the night of its showing. It developed the expressman was in the hall and that he also is being charged for the loss of the entire film, the exchange claiming in one instance the film did not reach it until the next day, and in the other that it was lost altogether.

One member described how he was notified by an exchange that before he secured the final chapter of a serial for the next day's (Sunday) showing he would have to pay a charge of $40 instead of the usual $12.50. It was a Saturday and he had to have the film. Before he could get the check made out word came that the charge against him would be $65.

"In desperation I told the exchange manager over the phone that I would send him a check signed in blank, that he could fill it in, but I must have the film," went on the member. "I got the film. At 9 o'clock on Monday morning I notified the bank to stop the check. As I was coming out of the bank the check was coming in by messenger for certification. (Laughter.) Well, they are after me for that difference. I have carried to that exchange all my vouchers, which I am sure will prove I owe it nothing. The end is not yet, but I am staying right with the exchange."

As a result of the relation of other and similar experiences the president appointed a committee of three to take up the whole subject of the Hoy Reporting Service.

Gus Koenigswald, who before the Public Service Commission won the notable victory over the Edison company resulting in a reduction of from 11 to 8 cents a kilowatt hour where a rotary converter is used, presented to the local the bill he had received from his lawyer. It was decided to appeal to those exhibitors who had benefited by the decision to share with Mr. Koenigswald in the payment of the bill.

At 3 o'clock Sunday morning the members gathered around a long table in a Fulton street restaurant and discussed chop suey.

Foreign Market Good

So John R. Freuler of Mutual Reports After Investigation.

PRESIDENT JOHN R. FREULER of the Mutual Film Corporation has returned to Chicago after a week spent at his New York offices, in the course of which he closed important contracts for the distribution of various Mutual film products in Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Russia.

"The foreign film market has now reached a complete readjustment in the neutral zones and out of the range of the war," remarked Mr. Freuler. "Our films are now even working right up to the battle lines on both the north and the south of the great conflict. It has taken a good while for the foreign business to find itself in all the chaos of war and confusion of shipping and communication, but we have things operating smoothly now."

An interesting incident of war time film difficulties occurred in the Mutual offices the other day when, due to war shipping emergency, an army of office boys was set to work mailing a half a ton of posters in four-pound packages by "book post" to a foreign buyer.

PRESS AGENTS SHIFT.

Victor Johnson, formerly with the Vitagraph V. L. S. E., is now with the Kalem Company, succeeding Robert Welch, who goes to the News.

Albert S. Levino, formerly with Arrow, takes Johnson's place at Vitagraph.

Robert Priest is now a publicity dispenser at the General Film office. He was with "Civilization."

W. W. Powers, formerly with Artcraft, is now managing the Liberty Theater for "Intolerance."

E. J. O'Donnell, formerly with the Sherman-Elliott Company, is now with the Rogson Film Company.

EXCHANGE MANAGER'S WIFE DIES.

Word was received in New York Wednesday, November 29, that death had taken Mrs. Harry Bugie, wife of the Manager for Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service at Cincinnati. Mrs. Bugie had presented her husband with a daughter a week preceding her death. Mrs. Bugie was a Newark, N. J., girl and her body will be laid at rest there.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

Four Companies of Sherman & Elliott, Inc., Will Open With "The Crisis" Dec. 24.

H. A. SHERMAN, President of Sherman & Elliott, Inc., Minneapolis, made a brief call at this office Wednesday, Dec. 6. He was accompanied by J. A. Brehany, general manager of the company. Mr. Sherman announces that he will put out four initial companies of "The Crisis," opening at Minneapolis, Denver, Omaha and Portland, Ore., about December 24. It is his intention to supplement these companies by several others, just as soon as the territory now being covered by "The Birth of a Nation" and the "Ramona" companies is clear. Wm. Sievers, of the Grand Central Amusement Co., St. Louis, will also open "The Crisis" in the Grand Central Palace on the same date.

Mr. Brehany intends in the near future to make Chicago his headquarters. He has at present general management of all the road shows of Sherman & Elliott, and when a theater is secured in Chicago for the presentation of "The Crisis," Mr. Brehany will have charge. Mr. Sherman has hopes of being able to close with a certain first class theater in the city around the opening of the new year, for the run of "The Crisis." He wishes it thoroughly understood that "The Crisis" will not be presented in any part of Illinois until it has had its run in a first class Chicago theater.

Mr. Brehany informed me that he had just closed with Clarence J. Bulliet to fill the position of general press representative for the company. Mr. Bulliet is widely known as an able man in his department. He will also make headquarters with Mr. Brehany in the Chicago office, which it is expected will be in readiness about the first of the year. All the road shows of Sherman & Elliott, Inc., will be directed from the Chicago office by General Manager Brehany, the companies including "The Birth of a Nation," "Ramona," "The Crisis," etc.

Mr. Sherman regretted that the reference made by a moving picture contemporary in New York, that he had closed with Mr. Selig for "The Garden of Allah," had appeared, but he stated to me that a final conference with Wm. N. Selig would take place Friday, Dec. 8.

A private showing of "The Crisis," with full orchestral accompaniment, will be given Friday evening, Dec. 22, at the Lyric theater, Minneapolis, for Governor Burnquist, of Minnesota, and his staff; Mayor Van Lear, of Minneapolis, and a list of prominent guests.

Mr. Sherman left Wednesday night for Pittsburgh, where he will assist in organizing a company for H. P. Wolfberg, who bought the state rights of Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, and the District of Columbia. Thence he will proceed to New York City.

An attractive line of printing has been gotten out for "The Crisis," on the order of Sheman & Elliott, Inc., by the Riverside Printing Co., of Milwaukee. This line includes 20 sheets, 16 sheets, 8 sheets, 3 sheets, 1 sheet and ½ sheet in several styles, and it is understood that the saine styles will be used by all those who have purchased state rights from the company.

Sudden Death of D. W. McKinney.

The numerous friends of D. W. McKinney in the trade will be made sad to hear the news of his untimely death at Gulfport, Miss., where he was general manager of the Southern Film Co.

W. R. Barber, president of the company, writing to a friend in Chicago from Gulfport, states that Mr. McKinney passed away at 8:15 p. m., November 30, after an illness of 18 hours. Mr. McKinney particularly emphasized that he was "feeling fine" on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, and attended a picture show early the same evening. At midnight he was suddenly seized with convulsions and suffered twenty-seven of these attacks from that time until 10 o'clock Thursday morning, finally passing away on Thursday evening at the hour stated. He never regained consciousness after the first attack.

Attending physicians could not say what the trouble was. "Nor have we any idea," writes Mr. Barber. "We must say that it was a distinct shock to us all; as we, with whom he has been connected for only a short time, thought a great deal of him, and he was held in high esteem by all of his acquaintances here on the Coast."

Mr. McKinney was well known in trade circles in Chicago and New York. At one time he held a responsible position in New York City with Universal, to which he as appointed by Carl Laemmle. Failing health caused him to resign, and he later established himself in Chicago, engaging in the production of advertising films of an original type. Seeking larger ventures, he proceeded to the south, where, after some time, he succeeded in inducing capital to establish the Southern Film Co. The fine record he established there is fittingly attested by Mr. Barber.

Personally, I regret exceedingly to learn of Mr. McKinney's death, just as he was achieving success after a stout battle. He was a thoroughly sincere man and a loyal friend, and he was always a firm supporter of the Moving Picture World.

In accordance with a wire received by Mrs. McKinney from her father-in-law, at Menlo, Kans., his old home, she accompanied the remains to that place for interment.

Chicago Film Brevities.

At the meeting of the F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago, held in the offices of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., Tuesday, Dec. 5, a motion was unanimously passed to send out a call to all film exchanges throughout the country, requesting the managers to meet in a convention to be held in Chicago about Feb. 15. The main objects of the convention will be to demonstrate the good wrought by the Chicago club since its organization, and the great benefits that can be derived by the formation of other organizations of this kind. It is believed that by having a national organization, still greater benefits can be secured. It is the intention to have at least three delegates attend the proposed convention from each city, where film exchanges have been established.

Francellia Billington has been engaged by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Co., Inc., to play opposite William Russell in a new line of five-reelers, the production of which will be undertaken in the near future, at Santa Barbara. A series of fine features has been specially secured by Mr. Hutchinson for the starring of Mr. Russell.

The meeting of the Chicago advisory committee of the Chicago executive section of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., which was announced to be held in Room 1811, La Salle Hotel, Wednesday, Dec. 6, at 4 o'clock, has been postponed until some future date.

Frank Cook, manager of the Princess, one of the Saxe Brothers' houses in Milwaukee, called at this office while on a visit to the city Tuesday, Dec. 5. Mr. Cook reported excellent business at all the Saxe houses. He has just recovered from a serious accident that occurred late in September, due to a fall which seriously shattered his nervous system. His many friends will be glad to learn that he has now almost recovered his former state of health.

Joan, the young widow in "War Brides," who is impersonated by Nazimova, and the Princess Beloved in "Intolerance," sustained by Seena Owen, have been reproduced in doll form for the great doll pageant that will be held December 15 in the Auditorium Hotel, this city. Mrs. Samuel I. Levin, wife of the general manager of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's enterprises, has secured a valuable collection of dolls from nearly all the prominent stars on the dramatic stage, and also from prominent bankers, lawyers and officials of the city for the occasion. Valuable specimens of dolls have been donated by Nathan Ascher, Alexander Pantages, W. W. Kimball, Aaron J. Jones and other prominent Chicagoans. The doll pageant is given for the benefit of the Esther Falkenstein settlement house, and the proceeds will also be used for Christmas baskets, coal and other forms of relief for the poor districts of Chicago. A prominent State street store has given the use of one of its most important display windows for the exhibition of these dolls for the week beginning Monday, Dec. 11. In addition to the pageant, the occasion will be marked by a dance, the music for which will be furnished by a real "Jaas" band.

The six public schools in Chicago for which the Board of Education recently purchased picture machines, it appears, will not be permitted to use them until further safeguards have been provided. When the machines were purchased it was understood that they were perfectly safe to use in school buildings, but investigation has revealed that there is still an element of danger, and so their use has been forbidden as a precautionary measure.

Geraldine Farrar had the privilege of viewing herself in "Joan of Arc," in the projection room of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., Tuesday, Dec. 5. It was a pleasant diversion for the operatic star, who is now appearing at the Auditorium as one of the stars of the Chicago Grand Opera Co. Cecil DeMille brought the feature all the way from Los Angeles, Cal., for the occasion, and he was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Lasky and Miss Jeanie McPherson, the latter being Mr. DeMille's assistant and scenario writer. John C. Flinn also came on from New York to meet the Lasky notables and to arrange for the presentation. After the exhibition, the opera star expressed her astonishment as follows: "To think that I spent three months suffering and working—never worked so hard nor so long in my life on anything—making this play, and now see it all spread before me in a little less than three hours! It's almost unbelievable."

Jesse Lasky announced that "Joan of Arc" will be shown in special theaters, and that its twelve reels will be accompanied by special music.

Norma Talmadge and her newly-wed husband, Joseph M. Schenck, stopped over in the city Tuesday, Dec. 5, on their way to California to spend their honeymoon. Mr. Schenck expects to close his contract with Roscoe Arbuckle for feature pictures (to be produced under the Selznick banner), while in Los Angeles. Mr and Mrs. Schenck were the guests of Aaron J. Jones during their stay, and attended the premiere showing of "War Brides" at the Studebaker theater last Tuesday evening. They were accompanied to California by Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Loew of New York.

"The Circle of Mystery," taken from the Polish play, "Zaczarowane Kolo," was recently completed by the White Eagle Cinematography Co., of this city. This company was organized this fall for the purpose of reproducing famous Polish, Russian and Jewish literature and history in five-reel feature films. The cast in "The Circle of Mystery" is entirely Polish. It includes Adamo Didur, a basso of the Metropolitan Opera Co., New York City; Wanda Zarska, formerly leading lady of the National theater, Warsaw; Zbyszko, the well-known international wrestler, and many other Poles of reputation. The costumes and scenery are exclusively Polish, and the titles and sub-titles are in both Polish and English. W. Zadora Szuwalski is director general of the White Eagle Cinematography Co., and at one time produced several Russian plays for the Vitagraph Company. William Buckley, at one time with D. W. Griffith and the Famous Players, is production manager, and the technical direction is in the care of Frank J. Boyle. C. E. Martin is treasurer, and K. M. Scoville is general manager. At a recent private showing of "The Circle of Mystery" in this city, Ignace J. Paderewski and Mme. Paderewski were present. So was John Smulski, a prominent Polish banker of Chicago, and others well known in Polish circles. Much enthusiasm was displayed.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Studebaker—Nazimova in "War Brides" (Herbert Brenon Film Corporation for Selznick Pictures) enters its second week at this theater. Louis J. Jones, house manager of the Studebaker, reported very big business, and considers "War Brides" one of the best pictures yet shown at that house.

Ziegfeld—"An Enemy to the King," with E. H. Sothern and Edith Story in the leading roles, is retained for another week.

La Salle—"Idle Wives" (Universal), featuring Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley. Very good business is reported.

Colonial—"Intolerance" (D. W. Griffith). Long lines of people outside the theater daily, continue to afford the best evidence of the great drawing power of Griffith's masterpiece.

The Jackson Park theater, owned by Edward I. Bloom and managed by W. P. Clement, had its formal opening on Thanksgiving eve, Nov. 29. The Jackson Park is situated at 6711 Stony Island avenue, and is a thoroughly modern house in every detail. Its seating capacity is 1,500, and the seats are roomy and comfortable. A large pipe organ and a five-piece orchestra furnish the music. Manager Clement reports that the attendance at the house on Thanksgiving Day was over 6,000 people. The opening program included "The Soul of Kura San" (Lasky), a Burton Holmes travelogue, and a one-reel comedy. The admission prices are five and 10 cents, far too low for such a house and its attractions.

The Pine Grove theater, a beautiful house at 717 Sheridan Road, this city, on the Hamburger circuit, barely escaped destruction recently at the hands of the bomb fiends who now plague Chicago. The attempt was made early Thursday morning, Dec. 7. Five sticks of dynamite were found in the rear of the theater. One fuse had been lighted, but after burning several feet it, evidently, had been blown out by the wind. E. D. Hobson, manager of the Pine Grove, informed the police that members of the Electrical Workers' Union, Local 157, called at the theater on Monday and demanded that he discharge his operator who was a member of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 118, I. A. T. S. E. He refused.

Griffith Bids Mae Marsh Godspeed

Director Who for Four Years Has Guided New Goldwyn Star Wishes Her Success.

EVERYTHING isn't jealousy in the motion picture art, as Mae Marsh, the first of the screen stars to be announced by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is glad to bear witness. Miss Marsh, accompanied by her mother and several sisters, arrived in New York recently, after taking leave of D. W. Griffith in Chicago. For four years Miss Marsh and Mr. Griffith have worked together, and the little screen genius has done everything in her power to further the fame of her director.

Mae Marsh.

As a reward for the patience of Miss Marsh, her willingness to work hard and her great ability, she has been given the most sympathetic roles in nearly all of Griffith's personally-directed pictures. Millions of persons know her in "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "The Escape," and other subjects.

So it is no wonder that D. W. Griffith constantly referred to Mae Marsh as his "inspiration." But when it came to leave-taking, when he realized that opportunity had knocked at Mae Marsh's door and taken her away for a career of still bigger things, Griffith revealed the same big broad traits that have characterized his screen achievements. Upon her arrival in New York, Miss Marsh found the following telegram:

> I wish you every possible success in your new venture. While I feel that your loss to our company is one that can hardly be replaced I shall be as glad and proud as yourself for all the new successes which I know are sure to come to you.
> D. W. GRIFFITH.

Miss Marsh and her mother are busy apartment hunters in New York. They think they have found just the kind of home they desire, on Riverside Drive, and in a few days they expect to be settled down for the winter and spring.

Announcement will be made in a few days of the director under whom Miss Marsh is to make her debut for Goldwyn Pictures, and likewise the first remarkable play chosen for her premiere production.

WOULD-BE-DARE-DEVILS DISAPPEAR.

When Kalem started the production of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series at the Jacksonville studio a number of would-be dare-devils made their appearance in the neighborhood. The "would-be's" offered their services doubling for George Larkin at prices ranging from the price of a meal upward. As Larkin takes particular pride in the fact that he performs all his thrills himself Director Ellis for several weeks has had a strenuous job dodging the increasing list of applicants. Last week in staging "A Mission of State" Larkin was called on to jump into a speeding automobile from a bridge, and in doing so turned on his ankles in addition to receiving numerous painful bruises. Larkin had a narrow escape from more serious accident and as it was spent a week with his ankles in a plaster cast. But in the week's absence from the studio the news evidently circulated, for on Larkin's return he found that there wasn't a would-be-dare-devil in sight.

DeMille to Produce Cohan Subject

"Broadway Jones," Cohan's First Piece, to Be Supervised by Cecil B. DeMille.

SHORTLY following the announcement that George M. Cohan's initial screen subject to be released by Artcraft will be an adaptation of "Broadway Jones," the popular star's greatest stage hit, it is learned that Cecil B. DeMille has been engaged to supervise the production.

Mr. DeMille left Los Angeles for the East recently to be present at the New York premier of his new Farrar production, "Joan of Arc," on Christmas Day. At Chicago he stepped over to show this film to the star, and it was during his stay in the windy city that his engagement in connection with the production of the Cohan subject was affected.

Geo. M. Cohan.

It is planned to have "Broadway Jones" ready for release some time in February, and work will be commenced on the production immediately in the New York studios. "Broadway Jones" is undoubtedly the most prominent of Mr. Cohan's many New York successes. Written and staged by himself he also appeared in the title role at the Cohan theater, on Broadway and Forty-second street, three years ago. In the production of the screen version, Mr. Cohan will collaborate with Mr. DeMille, whose wide experience as a director of both stage and film plays will greatly enhance the Broadway favorite's film debut.

"The acquisition of Cecil B. DeMille's services under the Artcraft banner offers further proof of our policy to enlist the best talent and brains in the industry in order to give the exhibitor and his patrons attractions that are entirely in keeping with the highest standard as evidenced by such stars as Mary Pickford and George M. Cohan," said Walter E. Greene, President of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. "George M. Cohan in 'Broadway Jones,' produced by Cecil B. DeMille, offers a combination of rare merit. Mr. Cohan's photoplay will be the third release of Artcraft, following the two Mary Pickford productions, 'Less Than the Dust' and 'The Pride of the Clan,' the latter now nearing completion for January release."

Cecil B. DeMille.

Cecil B. DeMille was one of the four organizers of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and as director-general had charge of all producing at the Hollywood studios since the inception of the company. The work he has evidenced on the screen during this time has established him throughout the world as a master of photoplay production. Prior to his connection with filmdom, Mr. DeMille was highly successful as a dramatist, actor and stage director, having made his debut as a thespian in "Hearts and Trumps" in February 1900. He continued acting for about a decade, subsequently devoting his time to the management and production of many well known stage successes.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

W. H. Clune Enters State Rights Field

"Ramona" and "The Eyes of the World" to be Released on a New Plan. H. O. Martin Appointed State Rights Representative.

W. H. CLUNE, the well known theater magnate of the Pacific Coast, and president of the Clune Film Producing Company, has entered the state rights field and will release two of his large feature productions on a new and elaborate state rights plan. One of these productions is the twelve-reel picturization of Helen Hunt Jackson's California classic "Ramona," which was presented with remarkable success at the Clune's Auditorium and subsequently shown in very pretentious style in New York, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburg and San Francisco. The other feature production is a ten-reel photo-dramatic version of Harold Bell Wright's popular novel, "The Eyes of the World," which has recently been completed at the Clune studios and will soon have its initial presentation at the Auditorium theater.

W. H. Clune.

The details of Mr. Clune's state right plans are not as yet for publication, but we are informed that the new system provides one of the easiest means yet devised for buyers to secure and exploit these features. One of the phases of the new Clune plan of "state righting" was revealed by Mr. Clune. He contemplates an extensive national campaign of advertising before and simultaneously with the release of his productions. Mr. Clune's plan contemplates the building up of a wide demand both among exhibitors and the masses which ought to be of great commercial value to state right buyers and the exhibitors whom they desire to reach.

H. O. Martin, one of the best known and most experienced motion picture men in the country, has been engaged by Mr. Clune to present his plan to the state right buyers.

Mr. Martin is a show man and entrepreneur of more than 20 years' experience, which includes both the exhibiting and the marketing ends of the film business. Among other enterprises Mr. Martin exploited with great financial success, the Selig master picture, "The Spoilers," and he also purchased and marketed with similar results state rights for "The Christian."

The Clune method of production and exhibiting is along distinctly original lines. Two years ago when Mr. Clune, owner of numerous theaters on the Pacific Coast, was unable to secure feature productions of sufficiently high grade for the clientele he had built up at his Auditorium theater, in Los Angeles, he decided to go into the manufacturing end. The Auditorium is the largest theater west of Chicago, with a seating capacity of nearly 3,000. Here all productions are presented in a most elaborate and unique manner, with an orchestra of 30 pieces, stage embellishments, etc., and prices are secured that rival those of the largest legitimate offerings. This house is also the home of grand opera in the southwest, and is fully equipped for stage productions.

The first essay of the Clune Company, "Ramona," was such a success that it played for ten straight weeks to more than 200,000 patrons. It was subsequently shown in New York, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh and San Francisco, with the main idea of introducing its merits to the large centers of population.

At his studio, Clune devotes the energies of his organization entirely to one subject at a time. He believes that one of the main things that is holding back progress in the film field is a lack of thoroughness in the attention to output. "Most companies," said Mr. Clune, "were dividing their energies among a number of different subjects. We decided that concentration, constant study, attention to the smallest details and team work were necessary to a finished product. We also believed that the stock company idea was all wrong for large features, and decided to pick our actors for each subject that we undertood from the entire national field, in order to secure perfect types and the highest acting ability for each part.

"Experience with this system has confirmed us in our views. Months are spent in the preparation of scenario and the planning of sets and properties, and other months are devoted to the actual work of production." The production of "The Eyes of the World" has been on the way for six months, and the first exhibition will soon take place at the Auditorium theater. The novel enjoyed an enormous popularity, having been read according to the publishers by more than four million people. The photo dramatic version surpassed the written story in every way because of the superior scenic opportunities of this tale of the mountains and vales, and the melodramatic incidents.

It is understood that the Clune company has the rights for the filming of all of the stories that have come from the pen of Harold Bell Wright. These include "The Winning of Barbara Worth," "The Shepherd of the Hills," "When a Man's a Man," "That Printer of Udell's" and others, nine in all, which have had the amazing total sale of over eight million copies. Mr. Wright had an active hand in the preparation of "The Eyes of the World" for the screen, and is to lend his personal assistance in interpreting the characters of his other books for the camera.

Photoplayers' Ball a Great Success

Charlie Murray was the Master of Ceremonies. Motion Picture Directors Also Give Brilliant Ball and Buffet.

THE newly organized Hollywood Photoplayers' Club made good Thanksgiving eve at Shrine auditorium, and the overflowing crowd in attendance voted the affair a huge success. Long before the doors opened the street was thick with sightseers, who wanted to get a glimpse of the film folks as they entered.

It looked as if all filmdom was there. Arthur Shirley, director general, flittered here and there, while Charlie Murray, as master of ceremonies, made it pleasant for everybody and announced the entertainment features, and there were many of them, in a voice that could be heard for miles. The program was excellent.

The grand march was led by Mayor Woodman and Mrs. Charlie Murray, followed by Tom Mix and Victoria Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Shirley and a great line-up of picture folks and their friends.

Francis Ford, president of the new club, and Grace Cunard entertained a party of friends, and Miss Cunard was the recipient of a traveling case given by the club in appreciation of her efforts to assist in making the affair a success. Her song, "Meet Me at the Movie Ball," was featured during the evening.

Charlie Murray was also remembered with a grip, which was presented by Arthur Shirley. In receiving the gift Charlie remarked, that it was the first time anyone had received "the grip" so openly at the Shrine.

Harry Hoskins, as well as all the officials of the club, are to be congratulated upon the success of the affair and undoubtedly a good deal was realized toward the new club house. The social spirit displayed by all present was an effort that reflected much credit upon all. Mr. Hawks is entitled to great credit for the finished product. The new weekly issued by the club also made its first appearance and proved to be a newsy sheet.

The second annual ball and grand buffet of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, at the Alexandria, Thanksgiving night, was perhaps the most elaborate event in the local film world in months. Directors and their wives from San Francisco and San Diego and intermediate points attended. In all there were approximately 250 persons at the exclusive affair.

W. R. Daly, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, was assisted by Allen Curtis, Joseph DeGrasse, Roy Clements and W. D. Taylor. Otis Turner was chairman of the Reception Committee and R. B. West of the Floor Committee.

Isadore Bernstein to Produce on the Coast

Former Universal City Manager in Town Opens Studio to Star Cleo Madison.

QUICK action is evidently to be the motto of Isadore Bernstein in the future and this is strictly in keeping with his policy of the past. Mr. Bernstein arrived in Los Angeles November 22. He had selected the site for the new studio to be the home of the Cleo Madison Film Corporation, and December 1, at 11 o'clock, the deal was consummated.

The studio covers 10 acres and is located at 763 Boyle avenue, corner Stephenson; five minutes ride from Broadway; construction work started this week; producing is scheduled to start between the 1st and 15th of January; only men trained personally by Mr. Bernstein are to be engaged. The plant is above the fog line and furnishes every conceivable location without leaving the grounds; and the electrically controlled studio can be changed from an outside location to an enclosed stage in fifteen minutes.

Mr. Bernstein stated that he will produce pictures that appeal to the clean minded people, and every production will be under his personal supervision. Miss Madison will be the only star featured at the start. The executive offices are at 1103 Hollingsworth building.

Cleo Madison a Bride.

The actors and actresses at Universal City were greatly surprised to learn, on the afternoon of November 25, that Cleo Madison had figured in an early morning marriage at the Mission Inn, Riverside, California, where some two years previously she had enacted the role of a bride in the Universal serial, "The Trey O'Hearts." The bridegroom was Don Peake, Pacific Coast representative of an automobile manufacturing company.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

A benefit performance for the motion picture actors of California who belong to the Federal reserves will be given at the Mason opera house, Tuesday evening, December 12. The principal feature will be a presentation of the second act of Sheridan's "The Critic," satirizing a theatrical rehearsal. This is to be under direction of Hobart Bosworth, the Lasky star, who will also play a part. Many other stars will appear, including George Beban, Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Anita King, Tully Marshall, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, James Neill, Wallace Reid, Eugene Pallette and Tom Forman.

A fund of $462 has been collected at the Keystone Film Company's studio and was presented this week to the widow of L. B. Jenkins, a former employe of Mack Sennett's forces, who was a victim of Santa Monica race track catastrophe, in which a racing automobile took a toll of four lives. Mr. Jenkins was a cameraman employed by the Keystone Film Company, and it was while in pursuit of his duty that he met sudden death.

An elaborate floral piece in the shape of a motion picture camera complete with tripod, was the message of condolence the Keystone laid at the faithful cameraman's grave.

Members of the Nevada Motion Picture Corporation have returned to Los Angeles during the past week. We are informed that Director John Ince and Assistant Director Joseph Boyle have left the company, and that Director William J. Bauman and Director Rice have gone down to Gautemala to take their place. The rest of the company, including Tyrone Power, Lamar Johnston, Maude Taylor, Norbert Miles, George Odell, Louis Fitzroy, Jessie Burnett, Herman Withaker and Philip Hansen is still down in Central America. The company went down to Guatemala on October 9 to produce "The Planters," a large feature production from [illegible] well known story. The production is not as yet finished, and we are informed that it will be several weeks before the players will return. General Manager Chance J. Ward has leased this week the old studios of the Crown City Film Company in Pasadena, where the company will later on stage interior scenes. The Nevada Motion Picture Corporation has a downtown office in the Union Oil building.

From Santa Barbara we learn that Francelia Billington, the new leading woman of the William Russell company, has arrived at the Flying A studios. The former Universal Star succeeds Charlotte Burton, who has gone to Chicago for an engagement with Essanay.

Miss Billington is a charming young woman who has been seen on both the Mutual and Universal programs. She was with the Universal until she signed with the American Film Company.

The new William Russell series starts next week, and it will be Miss Billington's first appearance in an American feature. The story was written by Nell Shipman and is of the period at the close of the civil war. Mr. Russell will play a young northern soldier and Miss Billington a girl of the south.

President S. S. Hutchinson left on November 29 for the east and will not be back in Santa Barbara again until after the holidays. The present visit has been a noteworthy one. During the last month there has been a reorganization of forces, and J. R. Crone installed as studio manager. There has been a complete reorganization of other departments.

The industry is growing. Every division is organizing for social or other purposes. A movement is now on foot to organize an indemnity club with the property men only entitled to membership. Props is the busiest man around the studio. If it isn't in the studio he must go out and get it, he MUST get it. The Pallas company has just received a bill for damages for props. On account of the seemingly exhorbitant amount asked the management will in the future put props under bond and he in return will have to insure in order to insure safe return of the goods borrowed or pay the freight in case of loss or damage.

Look over this list and note the items and the damages asked:

Hand broken on grandfather's clock	$ 5.00
Puncturing Queen Victoria's face	.75
Scratching Venus' legs (naughty boy)	10.00
16 books lost (second hand)	16.00
Two Turkish rugs massacred	75.00
Chipping off Lincoln's mole	.75

Is it any wonder that Props is up in arms? The damages asked are only fair and a stop should be put to anyone daring to fool with the limbs of Venus or any other celebrity.

Douglas Gerrard is directing and playing the featured lead in a three-reel photoplay, "The Coming of Jessica" at Universal City. Ruth Clifford plays opposite and a large cast of stock actors and actresses appear in support. The scenario was prepared by Maud Grange.

Lois Weber has under production a five-reel feature written by Willis-Woods, entitled "Even as You and I." It is an allegorical story laid largely in the studios of an artist and a sculptor. Miss Weber has been given a notable cast of players. The featured leads are played by Ben Wilson with Mignon Anderson opposite. Others in the cast are Maude George, Harry Carter, Bertram Grassby, Earle Page, Seymour Hastings, Priscilla Deane and E. N. Wallock.

With a company of fifteen people, Director Raymond B. West, of the Ince-Triangle forces left this week for San Francisco, where he will film about 100 scenes for a current Triangle-Kay Bee play by Leona Hutton which he is producing. The scenes are to be made aboard Charles Crocker's palatial yacht, "Vergana," in San Francisco Harbor. Among those accompanying West are Charles Gunn, Howard Hickman and J. Barney Sherry.

Louise Glaum was the honored guest this week at an elaborate Thanksgiving eve celebration in Fresno. The "vampire de luxe" of the Ince-Triangle forces went to the Northern city at the invitation of the Fresno exhibitors and, on the arm of Mayor Snow, led the grand march at their annual reception and ball. This function, however, was not the only one on the program arranged in her honor. Arriving in Fresno in the morning she was escorted about the city by a reception committee of prominent exhibitors. Then she graced with her presence a luncheon of the Commercial Club, delivered a brief address to the Vocational Club girls at the High School, held forth for several hours at the Kinema Theatre, where her most recent starring vehicle "Somewhere in France" was showing and concluded the day by attending the ball.

Inceville was the scene of a novel outdoor wedding this week, when Cliff Smith, assistant director to William S. Hart, and Cleo Morrow, one of the Ince-Triangle players, were married in one of the picturesque glens that abound at the 15,000-acre plant. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Johnson, of Santa Monica, and was attended by William S. Hart, Business Manager E. H. Allen and several score players from the studios.

A cottonwood stump served as the pulpit and the bridal couple, as well as those attending were garbed in typical western regalia. Hart acted as best man, Margaret Thompson was maid of honor, and Thelma Salter had the role of flower girl.

Ruth Stonehouse, who is starred in the Universal feature production, "Constantinople by the Sixth," wore boys' clothes during most of the making of the film play, and one morning she came to the studios and forgot to bring the proper shoes from her Hollywood home.

The dainty little actress was wearing the suit of clothes, so she jumped into her machine and started on a dash for the missing shoes. She was bowling down Hollywood Boulevard at a rate of thirty-seven miles an hour, when a motor policeman dashed up alongside and she found herself enmeshed in the throes of the law. The officer asked her the name and she replied, "Ruth Stonehouse," but she had a hard time convincing the policeman she was really a girl.

The following morning, while working at Universal City, she recalled she was due in the police court to answer the summons and she started away to court wearing the boys' clothes, so at the police station the officer was waiting and escorted her to the women's court, and there she created another sensation as the woman judge insisted she should go to the other court. After additional explanations by Art Flavin, her assistant director, "Her Honor" took the whole matter as a joke and dismissed the actress.

The Signal Film Corporation has completed the ninth episode of their latest Helen Holmes serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," and are practically finished with the tenth installment, "The Gold Rush." Elaborate preparations have been made for night lighting effects in the tenth episode which it is said have never been duplicated in motion pictures. The story calls for a running fight on board a train of flat and box cars between two gangs of men. The fight takes place at night and in the melee one of the coal oil torches with which the cars are lighted is overturned and the flames spread to the entire train. The effect thus gained, showing the train rushing through the black night like a comet may well be imagined.

It is the company's intention to leave again soon for El Portal, where two episodes will be made in the snows. Following these, they are to double back to Los Angeles and after a few days at the studio make a flying trip to Las Vegas, Nevada, there to make a mining episode. That completed, they are to return to the Yosemite valley to make the final scenes of the serial.

CARELESS HANDLING OF FILM.

It's too easy to grow careless with scraps of film. We are so made that when we prevent accidents long enough, we begin to think that they prevent themselves. This must have been the case with the employes at the Family theater in Philadelphia, where an accident occurred that resulted in the death of the proprietor, Cris Peterson. Another item in this morning's mail brings to light another bit of hardly excusable carelessness in the headquarters of a local operators union in Indianapolis, where a reel of film seems to have been left behind the steam radiator and resulted in considerable damage to property though not this time in loss of life. We could cite other cases. Those who handle film should write Safety First on their very hearts.

You can fool some of the exhibitors all the time, you can fool all the exhibitors some of the time, but you cannot fool all the exhibitors all the time, even in New York.

Essanay Plant Like a Beehive

Never Before In Its History Have So Many Companies Worked Under the Expansive Roof—President George K. Spoor Talks of His Numerous Enterprises.

THE spacious Essanay plant is as busy these days as a veritable beehive. Never before in its history has the big Argyle street structure housed so many companies every one of which, under its competent director, is working with enthusiasm to break all former records and to carry still higher the banner bearing the Essanay brand.

George K. Spoor, Essanay's president, talked the other day about the various great enterprises that now claim his attention, as a boy might talk about his marbles. Thus big business, after occupying a man's mind for years, evidently becomes commonplace, because it is an every day occurrence.

James Young—concerning whom it was stated he would engage in the direction of the first Essanay picture in which Max Linder will appear—began work, November 27, on the production of the three great Cohan and Harris plays, "Hawthorne, U. S. A.," "On Trial" and "Young America." The fine stage success of these plays promises a big repetition on the screen.

Max Linder is now busily at work on his first comedy, entitled "Max Comes to America." This will be in two reels. Mr. Linder writes all his own scenarios, and is the sole director of his comedies, in addition to playing the principal roles. This is in accordance with his customary practice heretofore. Three other Linder comedies have been written, and both Mr. Spoor and Mr. Linder have consulted over their possibilities.

"The Truant Soul" was finished about 10 days ago, that is, it was all ready for assembling and trimming, etc. This photodrama has been adapted from the story, "The Mask," written by Victor Rossereau, and is eight reels in length.

Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson appear in the principal roles, and the production is under the direction of Harry Beaumont. Seven weeks were devoted to it, and, judging from the three last reels seen by me at a private viewing last week, it is a powerful subject, with an appeal that is positively thrilling.

Mr. Walthall has already taken up work on another five-reel feature, entitled "The Little Shoes," a sentimental photodrama. Miss Charleson will play opposite to Mr. Walthall, and Director Beaumont will supervise the work.

Mr. Spoor also informed me that Harry Watson, Jr., of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" fame, is busily engaged in New York City in producing for Essanay a continuation of his single-reel comedies, with Louis Myll as director.

The engagement of Clare Briggs, the famous cartoonist, whose comedy series, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," gained him nation-wide reputation, is another big coup by Mr. Spoor. The filmed series will be twenty-four in number, and will appear every second week in cartoon form. Mr. Briggs is now working on the series, the first of which will be released early in January, through General Film.

The series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" in which the Essanay Stock Company is engaged, is progressing well, Mr. Spoor states. Four of these have already been finished, and after viewing them, Mr. Spoor announces that he is very much pleased with them.

"The Black Cat" series, adapted from stories which appeared in the publication of that name, is also working out splendidly, Mr. Spoor declares. These are two reels in length, and cannot fail to enthuse patrons of the General Film Company's programs. Unusual interest has been taken in these pictures by exhibitors in every section of the country. The first release will be made December 16.

Bryant Washburn and his supporting company have begun the production of "Skinner's Dress Suit." Mr. Washburn plays the lead, and the support is able. The photoplay has been adapted from the story of that name which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

In concluding the interview, Mr. Spoor gave out that some big surprises for the trade will be sprung by Essanay in the near future.

J. S. McQ.

MANY WANT LINDER PICTURES.

Distributors from the four corners of the earth have opened negotiations with George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, for the rights to Max Linder's comedies. Competition to get the films is strong. Arrangements are under way whereby the films produced by the noted European comedian shall be shipped to Europe, Asia, Australia, Africa and South America. Within but a short time from the release of the first of Max's "barrels of fun" the entire world will be laughing.

Selznick Companies Active

Brenon Takes One to Florida—Miss Young Goes to New Orleans.

TWO Selznick-Pictures companies are at present out-of-town filming the exterior scenes of forthcoming productions. The Herbert Brenon company, engaged in preparing its presentation of Florence Reed in "The Eternal Sin," an adaptation of Victor Hugo's famous drama "Lucretia Borgia," have gone to Florida. The entire company left New York in a special car bound for St. Augustine. Mr. Brenon expects to remain in Florida for nearly a month. St. Augustine was selected as the ideal spot because of its adaptability to the requirements of the story and because of the fact that hundreds of extras can be obtained in Jacksonville, about an hour distant.

Miss Clara Kimball Young, Director Charles Giblyn and the supporting company left for New Orleans shortly after the Brenon company migrated South. The company is engaged in filming the exteriors for Miss Young's third Selznick-Picture, a motion picture adaptation of David Graham Phillipp's famous novel, "The Price She Paid." Director Giblyn, who is familiar with the territory surrounding the southern city, expects to complete the exteriors in about three weeks. Albert Capellani, Director General, remained in New York to superintend the final touches on his second production, "The Foolish Virgin." Mr. Capellani is also making his own adaptation of Eugene Walter's drama, "The Easiest Way."

The third star to temporarily desert the New York studios was Miss Norma Talmadge, who has just completed her work in the film adaptation of the drama "Panthea." The star and her husband, Joseph M. Schenck, have taken a belated honeymoon trip to Los Angeles. Arriving at the Coast city, the couple was greeted by the star's mother and her sister, Constance, as well as hundreds of friends in the film colony. The honeymooning couple will return East shortly after the New Year.

The only star working at the studio at the present time is Robert Warwick. Under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, Mr. Warwick is well advanced on the film version of "The Argyle Case," the detective drama by Harvey J. O'Higgins, Harriet Ford and William J. Burns. The services of Mr. Burns, an internationally known detective, have been enlisted to supervise certain details of the production.

Roy Stuart

ROY STUART is the latest leading man to be added to the Triangle-Fine Arts Stock Company. He has been specially engaged to play opposite Lillian Gish, in place of Keith Armour, who has been obliged to leave the coast and return to his home in Chicago for an indefinite period, because of the serious illness of his mother.

Before coming under the Triangle management, Stuart played leading parts with Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley. Previous to that, he filled important roles in American features, and was also prominent in the support of Ralph Stuart and Max Figman. Physically he is one of the largest screen heroes to gain attention, standing some 6 feet 3 inches in height and weighing over 210 pounds.

Roy Stuart.

Stuart is a native of San Diego, California, and unlike 99 out of a 100 screen actors on the coast, did not have to travel far from home to find the right field for his talents. He is a graduate of the University of California, and a strenuous devotee of the outdoor life. For several years he held the championship of the Pacific Coast for rowing the single sculls. The first Triangle feature in which Stuart will be seen will be the Fine Arts production of "A House Built Upon Sand," scheduled for release December 31.

Censorship in New England

Chairman Brenton of Board of Review Addresses Meetings in Several Cities.

THE Chairman of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, Cranston Brenton, at the request of the Mayor, Chamber of Commerce and the Federated Women's Clubs, addressed a meeting in Providence, on Saturday, November 25, at Sayles Hall, Brown University, on the subject of "Motion Pictures and Legal Regulation." On the following Monday evening he spoke to eight hundred men, at the Forum of the Boston City Club. At each place he emphasized the National Board's opposition to all forms of legalized, pre-publicity censorship and was able to convince his audiences that such censorship is contrary to our American principles of freedom of speech and freedom of expression. At the City Club, Mr. Brenton answered for an hour questions from the floor in regard to every phase of theatrical and motion picture regulation, and defended the proposition that the public should be the only ultimate court of appeals.

On Tuesday, November 28, at the request of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Brenton addressed a board in Worcester, Mass., newly formed for the purpose of censoring the motion picture exhibition of that city. As a result of the meeting the proposed plan to censor all films has been abandoned and the procedure which has met with the approval of the public and of the motion picture industry in innumerable other cities, has been adopted. The city of Worcester will now receive, through its chief of police, the bulletins of the National Board, will exclude from the city all films not passed by the board, and will insist that its eliminations are carried out, and will call on the Worcester Board of Censors to view only such pictures as may possibly be objected to because of special local conditions.

RIALTO CHANGES EXHIBITION POLICY.

Manager Rothapfel Says He Prefers to Deal in the Open Market.

THE feature picture at the Rialto Theater, New York, for the week of December 10, is the six-reel screen version of Augustus Thomas' stage play, "The Witching Hour," produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation. Next week Clara Kimball Young in "The Foolish Virgin" will be the attraction, and the following week the Vitagraph feature, "The Girl Philippa," leads the program. "Blind Justice" and "Arsine Lupin" are also future bookings.

Since its opening date last April the Rialto used Triangle pictures exclusively, until the week of November 26, when the Vitagraph feature, "An Enemy to the King," with E. H. Sothern as the star, was shown.

During an interview, Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto stated that the theater had entered the open booking field to stay. Mr. Rothapfel declined to give his reasons for discontinuing the Triangle program, but said that although he recognized the drawing power of Douglas Fairbanks and other Triangle stars, the number and quality of feature pictures now in the open market made it possible to present a program equal to the best. The manager drew attention to the success of the engagement of "The Witching Hour," to support his position, and declared that he felt positive the open market was the logical policy of any moving picture theater that desired to offer a program of the highest quality.

HORSLEY ENGAGES NEITZ, AUTHOR.

Alvin J. Neitz has been engaged as staff scenario writer by David Horsley to write five reel dramatic stories to be filmed by a new acting company which Mr. Horsley is putting to work at his Los Angeles studios.

Neitz is a scenario writer of much experience. He sold his first scripts to the American Film Co. for its American Beauty comedies, when that brand was first started.

In addition to his literary knowledge Neitz understands the requirements of motion pictures through practical experience, for he has also served as a co-director and a director. In these capacities he was engaged at the Ince plant for nearly three years and also at David Horsley studios.

THE CORRECT ADDRESS.

Persons writing to Lucille Lee Stewart or Huntley Gordon are advised that the correct address is Care of Ralph W. Ince Producing Company, Bay Shore, New York. Last month 179 letters, it is said, were delayed in delivery; they were from exhibitors and fans, too.

Against "White Slave" Subjects

National Board of Review Finds Sentiment Against Them and Will Refuse to Pass That Class of Picture.

AFTER considerable investigation of the subject of "white slave" pictures the National Board of Review has decided to refuse to pass pictures of that character. The board made an extensive canvass of the motion picture theater managers of the country and learned that a great majority was against exhibiting "white slave" films. With this adverse verdict from the exhibitor as a guide the National Board has sent to producers and directors a bulletin worded as follows:

The National Board takes this occasion to draw to your attention the following:

From answers it has received to a query recently sent out to exhibitors throughout the country as to the attitude of their patrons toward "white slave" films, the National Board learns that almost without exception, exhibitors are convinced that the great majority of their patrons are entirely opposed to this type of picture.

This is conclusive evidence of a well-defined sentiment throughout the country repudiating the so-called "white slave" film. Newspaper clippings, letters and official communications constantly reaching the National Board make this fact undeniable. Public opinion has crystallized upon this point. It demands that "White Slave" as a theme for commercial exploitation on the motion picture screen be no longer used.

The National Board seeks to reflect public opinion.

Therefore, no picture hereafter will be passed by the National Board which is concerned wholly with the commercialized theme of "White Slavery," or which is so advertised as to give the impression that it is a lurid "White Slave" picture.

This bulletin is issued in a co-operative spirit. It does not apply to strictly propaganda pictures produced obviously for social betterment and exhibited in a way compatible with that purpose. The bulletin seeks to acquaint producers and directors with public opinion on one hand, and the danger to their interest and prestige if they continue to affront it, and to acquaint them, on the other, with the position which the National Board as an interpreter of public sentiment feels called upon to take.

To Raise Fund for Paralysis Victims

Theatrical and Motion Picture Interests Will Hold a Big Benefit at the Astor, December 17.

UNDER the direction of a committee of the theatrical and motion picture interests, a benefit will be held at the Astor theater on Sunday evening, December 17, the proceeds of which will be donated for the after care of infantile paralysis cases. An auction sale of boxes will be held at the theater on Tuesday morning, December 12, at 11 o'clock. Haven Emerson, M. D., is the chairman of the committee; Lewis J. Selznick, treasurer, and Louis T. Rogers, secretary. The secretary may be addressed at 218 West 42d street, New York. A fund of a quarter of a million dollars could be expended in caring for the unfortunate victims of the scourge of last summer.

HESSER PUBLICITY BUREAU.

After two years of success in Canada, during which it has grown to be the foremost concern of its kind in the Dominion, the Hesser Publicity Bureau has enlarged its field, and opened New York offices at 1128-1129 Aeolian Hall, where Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser, the managing director, will make his headquarters. The main office of the bureau is in Montreal, with branches in Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. In Canada, they have handled the publicity and exploitation of Metro Pictures since their entry into that field, and recently have broken all records for serials with "The Crimson Stain Mystery." The Canadian business will be continued as heretofore, under assistant directors.

A department of foreign advertising is also maintained for the making up of film ad copy in French, Russian, Italian and Spanish. Foreign publicity campaigns can thus be handled directly from New York, which should be extremely valuable to American manufacturers seeking export markets. Canadian exploitation of big film features is another branch of the Hesser business.

FLORA FINCH HAS OWN COMPANY.

Flora Finch, long time Vitagraph comedienne, who appeared in many of the successful comedy productions made by that company, has signed a contract to appear in productions to be made by the Flora Finch Comedy Company, just formed. M. M. Feely is president of the new company, Louis T. Rogers is treasurer and general manager and W. R. Wilkerson is secretary. A comedy director has been engaged and a good supporting company of players will be selected as required. Production will be started in a few days.

Raver Comes Back

Announces the Birth of Apollo Pictures With Himself as President—To Release Through Art Dramas.

APOLLO Pictures, Inc., Harry R. Raver president, is the title of the newest producing organization to affiliate with Art Dramas. Apollo Pictures, Inc., has been quietly perfecting its organization for some time and it was only recently Harry R. Raver permitted any announcement to be made. "The trade is not interested in rumors or indefinite statements," said Mr. Raver, "and I was determined not to say anything about my new company until sufficient headway had been made to warrant a statement of facts. However, now that ample studio facilities and a splendid producing staff have been arranged for and work on our first production has actually begun, those exhibitors who are contemplating the use of features released under the banner of Art Dramas should know something definite about Apollo Pictures.

"One five-reel production will be issued each month. A popular picture star will head the cast of each of these. Much effort will be concentrated on the stories used in Apollo Pictures, in fact there is no limit to the amount we will pay for top-notch material, for I consider the story the foundation upon which a picture is built and that foundation cannot therefore prove weak or we cannot hope to succeed. 'The God of Little Children' is the title of the first Apollo production. Alma Hanlon is the star. Harry Chandlee wrote the story. Richard Ridgley will direct the picture. Author, director and star are too well known to both exhibitor and the public to warrant lengthy comment.

"Miss Hanlon will be supported by an evenly balanced cast of well known players and the staging of 'The God of Little Children' demands many elaborate and costly settings and properties. January 18 is the date of release. However, a preliminary showing will be made one week previous, to which the metropolitan members of the trade will be invited."

Alice Neice

ALICE NEICE, who is the leading woman of the Dudley Motion Picture Company, and who is shortly to be seen as the star of "Humanizing Mr. Winsby," has had a very interesting career. As a child she went to Alaska with her father, who was a prominent mining man, and spent most of her young girlhood there. She was possessed of unusual musical talent and was sent to Berlin to cultivate her voice. After several years, she returned to America and appeared in various parts of the country in concert work.

Alice Neice.

"The call of the frozen North was too strong," says Miss Neice, "and I finally decided to return to Alaska, where my parents were living. After a time there, I met a prominent theatrical man who induced me to try the motion pictures. Like most girls who have appeared before the camera, I liked the work very much and have kept at it ever since."

Miss Neice has played leading roles with Lubin, Selig, Universal and in Vogue comedies and has been identified with the Dudley Motion Picture Company for the past year. In "Humanizing Mr. Winsby," Miss Neice plays the part of a very determined Irish girl who refuses to stand in awe of Mr. Winsby, of whom everyone else is terribly afraid. This picture will be released in the near future by Paths.

O'DONNELL LEAVES SHERMAN-ELLIOTT.

E. J. O'Donnell, who for some time past has been publicity manager for the Sherman-Elliott Company in their exploitation of the State rights for "The Crisis," has resigned to enter new fields of endeavor.

"The Masque of Life" Revamped

Reissue of Foreign Made Five-Reel Melodrama in Greatly Improved Form Released Through Rogson Film Co.

THE five-reel photomelodrama, "The Masque of Life," is now the property of Marcus Loew, and a new version re-edited by James McKay, is ready for release through the Rogson Film Company. This foreign made picture, with its scenes from circus life, contains one of the most sensational "thrills" ever devised. All the incidents surrounding the stealing of the royal infant by the baboon and the rescue of the child from the top of the high smokestack, are carried out in a way that keeps the spectator on the edge of his seat. The other novel scenes are well done.

The story of the circus girl and the monarch who gives up a throne for her sake, although somewhat overdrawn to American eyes, touches a human note, and one notable example, at least, is to be found in the history of the house of the Hapsburgs of Austria.

The new version is a decided improvement over the one first shown in this country, and has been supplied with excellent subtitles.

Mary MacIvor

WHEN W. S. Hart's latest Western "thriller" by J. G. Hawks is released on the Triangle program some time next month, it will introduce an entirely new leading woman to the screen in the person of Mary MacIvor.

During his successful career as a Triangle star, Hart has had numerous leading women, including Clara Williams, Enid Markey, Bessie Love, Margery Wilson, Nona Thomas and Alma Reubens, but advices from the coast, where the Hawks drama is now being filmed, say that the initial work of Miss MacIvor is such as to assure her of many important roles in future.

Mary MacIvor.

Mary MacIvor belongs to that class of screen actresses who are rapidly climbing to the top despite an almost total lack of experience in the spoken drama. Students of dramatics some time ago declared that the screen would evolve its own favorites of the future, and that day seems to have arrived. Miss MacIvor is one more example to prove the prophecy was well grounded. Natural talents and a determination to get on in the motion picture field tell the whole story in her case.

She was born in Barnesville, Ohio, in 1899, but owing to delicate health never attended school. With her mother, who acted as her tutor, she traveled extensively throughout the country and thus acquired an education that has equipped her for a career. Nearly a year ago Thomas H. Ince granted her application for an engagement, but not until this month has her patience been rewarded with a leading part.

Miss MacIvor is of medium height, with a glowing color, due to years of out-of-door life, and clear blue eyes. She has golden hair which curls readily.

"I think I am the luckiest girl in the pictures to be able to make my debut under the direction of Mr. Hart," she declares.

ROGERS IN BIG DEAL WITH SELZNICK.

Louis T. Rogers has closed a contract with Lewis J. Selznick by the terms of which he is to handle the Selznick productions for New York City and State for a period of five years. To handle this business the Rogson Company has opened offices in New York and Buffalo, the latter being at 15 Swan street and in charge of A. I. Shapiro. The Rogson Company will also handle "The Masque of Life" in the same territory.

Fox Publicity Campaign

An Elaborate System Is Planned for the De Luxe Productions.

WILLIAM FOX has assembled an unusual publicity staff for the nation-wide campaign of "A Daughter of the Gods." Each large city is to be treated as an individual unit, with a veteran showman in charge, assisted by hustlers in the literary and outdoor advertising departments. This refers not to Mr. Fox's existing system of picture exchanges in the various cities, but to the entirely separate organizations he is rapidly building up to take care of the Annette Kellermann spectacle and other de luxe attractions which will be played by him in first-class theaters.

Boston will be in the charge of E. V. Giroux. His associates in the New England campaign are Joseph di Pesa, James Decker and John Luce, and the opening will take place at a Tremont street playhouse soon after the first of the year.

Ben Stern is to manage the Chicago run, with Jack Lait, the author of "Help Wanted," to look after the press and "Jim" Decker volplaning into town from time to time to make billboard contracts. The interesting Chicago premier takes place at the Studebaker on New Year's day.

Louis Stern is the "elder statesman" entrusted with Louisville and St. Louis. Mr. Stern and his helpers will open up the play in the Mary Anderson theater of the Kentucky metropolis during the closing hours of 1916. A short run in Louisville will be preparatory to an extended engagement at the Shubert theater, St. Louis, beginning the third week in January.

The Detroit company will start at the Washington theater there on Christmas week with Edwin B. Tilton in charge. Victor Harmon will pilot "A Daughter of the Gods" at the Belasco theater, Washington, D. C., and Will O. Wheeler will be the helmsman at the Wieting opera house, Syracuse, both engagements opening the week before Christmas. Mr. Fox has also provided one company to play the week and half-week stands of New York State and another for Pennsylvania, following up the signal success of the spectacle in the Lyric theater, New York; the Chestnut street opera house, Philadelphia, and the Pitt theater, Pittsburgh. George Roberts and Harry Leavitt, respectively, will be connected with these State companies.

San Francisco and Los Angeles will be handled just like the big Eastern units. The first appointment made is that of "Colonel" Ned Holmes, who goes to the Coast to prepare and manage the run at the Savoy theater, San Francisco. As fast as time is secured other agents, managers and companies are being sent out and other large-city units established until utimately forty organizations will have been formed.

The clever, artistically minded John Zanft is Mr. Fox's trusted right bower in the work of staging the spectacle. The big job of bookings is capably handled by Charles A. Miller. Randolph Lewis gets up national publicity schemes and stuff to road agents. W. C. Thompson attends to the New York daily newspaper work, and Henry MacMahon, the general press representative, supplies material to the literary periodicals. At the head of the several organizations is Winfield R. Sheehan, Mr. Fox's general manager.

This system illustrates the great changes that have been brought about by the comparatively recent entry of pictures into the so-called "legitimate" field. Each department of the work is highly specialized. Multiple man-power is used to solve big problems. As a result of the noval methods, "A Daughter of the Gods," and other Fox de luxe attractions will be brought before the American public in a quarter of the time that would have been required for traveling companies to tour the "two-dollar" houses in the olden days.

JOE FISHER DOWN WITH TYPHOID.

Joe Fisher of Cape Town, South Africa, who for several months has been in New York on an important business mission, is in St. Luke's Hospital, 113th street and Amsterdam avenue, fighting typhoid fever. After five weeks' separation from the film boys Mr. Fisher is anxious to see his friends. A wide circle of these will be sorry to hear of his illness and glad to learn he is on the road to recovery.

FRED CHURCH UNDERGOES OPERATION.

Taken suddenly ill with an acute attack of appendicitis a few days ago, Fred Church, one of the leading actors of Director Lynn Reynolds' Universal Company, was rushed to the hospital where an immediate operation was performed. The actor rallied well from the shock and the effects of the anaesthetic, but it will be about six weeks before he will be back at work at the film capital.

Mixed Identities

EDWARD EARL, vice-president and treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company, and Edward Earle, the motion picture favorite, both of whom are very prominent in their diversified work in connection with the motion picture art, while very close friends indeed, are not relatives. There are a great many people, however, who are of the opinion that they are one and the same person, and many humorous and sometimes unusual complications arise through misdirection of mail to these gentlemen. Mr. Earl has often received telephone calls complimenting him on the excellent work on the screen of Mr. Earle, and the latter has often been called on the 'phone regarding large business matters which were of interest only to Mr. Earl.

Edward Earl of the Nicholas Power Co.

For the benefit of their friends, we would suggest that mail for Edward Earl, the captain of industry, be sent to 90 Gold street, New York City, and that of Edward Earle, the star, be sent to the Screen Club of New York City, 117 West 45th street.

Edward Earl has never appeared on the screen and is not likely to, but Edward Earle has recently been appearing in Metro pictures in support of Viola Dana Just what his next connection will be as leading man has not yet been determined, as we understand he has several propositions under consideration. Previous to his last Metro connection, his work with the Edison company will be readily recalled by many admirers.

Edward Earle, Actor.

Mr. Earle, the screen star, was born in Toronto, Canada, and began his stage career with the Valentine Stock Company in comedy. His first New York appearance was with Henrietta Crossman followed by engagements with Bertha Galland, Mary Mannering, Jas. T. Powers, De Wolfe Hopper and others. He also was a member of the Augustine Daly Musical Company. In addition to his screen connection already noted, he has appeared in Famous Players and Pathe productions. His work before the camera reflects his many years of experience and is particularly noticeable for the absence of over-acting in all parts which he undertakes.

BEATTY GOES TO McCLURES.

Jerome Beatty, former Director of Publicity for the Thanhouser Film Corporation, has resigned to join McClure Pictures. George T. Bindbeutel, formerly editor of "Motor Print," succeeds at New Rochelle.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Taking a Dare.

BEFORE the Stillman theater, Cleveland, opened, C. L. Madden, who handles the advertising for the house for Fuller & Smith, wrote jubilantly that the companies supplying his bill were going to give him all the help possible. We sent him a typewritten, horse-laugh and he soon found that it was all too true. From a recent letter we clip this extract:

> The very distinguished Mr ——— ——— was in our village yesterday. Also he apparently failed to leave for me some ——— photos solemnly promised. Will you tell me why/well the producers hesitate about investing seventy cents' worth of photos in a town that they're trying to take $40,000 out of? I dare you to. There seems to be a conspiracy among 'em to see that anybody who tries to put any enthusiasm into exhibitors' advertising meets a wall of bono. 'Co-operation.' Sure. Write him a letter and tell him we're for him strong; no, never mind the questions he asks; photos? photos? Did I understand you to say PHOTOS? . . . Certainly NOT. He might be making a collection. But ask him to write a story for our house organ.

The answer is we cannot. The name of the agent and the attraction is deleted because it is unfair to single out one offender from the many. They all are in much the same box. Some companies are more helpful than others with press stuff, but they most all go shy on photographs. The parts that companies get a load of real price on a long term contract well hedged with protecting clauses, but there is no clause to the effect that a certain number of photographs will be provided, and yet the company really could afford to give five dollars' worth of photographs to a live wire advertising man who would get them in the papers as Mr Madden would have done. Conditions have improved wonderfully of late. We have spoken of Paramount's change of heart and the efficient Bluebird publicity, but the photographs are still a sore point with most alert house men. Photographs cost money from five to ten cent apiece for process stuff—and most assuredly there are managers who like to decorate their offices and their dens with them, but it is a business proposition, none the less, and photographs should be provided even if it seems reasonably certain that a proportion of these will be stolen. The rest will be worth the cost of the entire lot. With some companies it is impossible even to buy a sufficient supply. Will the press heads please take notice? Meantime, answering Mr. Madden's question, there are two reasons. One is the big boss' lack of knowledge of theatricals and the other is the little boss' ditto.

STILLMAN THEATRE
TODAY AND ALL WEEK
Mary Pickford
in "Less Than The Dust"
The charming and adventurous romance of a little English castaway in India—adopted by a sword-maker and raised among the low caste natives as one of them.
This is the first film made by Miss Pickford at the head of her own, producing company—the biggest thing she has yet attempted. The cast is unusually capable, and the production elaborate. It is an extraordinary picture-play, and we offer it as such.
Special Musical Setting
Come at 2:45 or 7:00
MARY PICKFORD
"Less than the Dust"

And speaking of the Stillman, here is the advertising for Mary Pickford for Sunday. The reproduction is a panel slightly less than six by ten with a half inch white margin. Less than a quarter of the space is given Miss Pickford. The rest goes to the music and to the details of performance. Mr. Madden knows that the announcement of the first Artcraft will make people want to come, so he takes the remainder of the space in telling when to come. It is a pretty white advertisement for a Sunday, but it is kept to itself and so it stands out and is better than a lot of black type telling a few unnecessary facts. The program shows as a prelude to the production the lyric by Lawrence Hope set to music by Amy Woodford-Finden, and the full lyric is printed on the program to serve as the keynote to the play.

And also notice the weekly Stillman post-card. This is a double card 5 3/16 by 5 3/16. The edges are slotted in opposite directions and by a single movement the slots are engaged, sealing the card without a paper clip or gummed slip. This is a device invented by Mr. Madden, who offers it to others. It not only does away with the paper clip, but it is easier to handle and it does not cause the postman to curse when he has many of these in a package of letters. The paper clip so greatly increases the bulk of one point that it is bothersome to handle the bundle. The slit card does not. In case the slit does not come up in the engraving, the effect is practically a V-shaped cut, but one arm of the V is on one edge and the second on the other. It supplies a perfect lock. In the right-hand card the [illegible] for employes.

Mr. Blanchard Joins In.

J. M. Blanchard, father of Orpheum Bill and manager of the Orpheum, Chambersburg, Pa., joins the procession for sobriety of adjective. His copy is a single-column story in a double-column space, with the trade-mark cuts and the house name. It is worth the space it takes up. Read it and use it, then live up to it:

> When we speak of a picture in our advertisements as having many thrills we do not wish to carry the idea that we have a cheap melo-drama of the paper-covered class, but a picture that appeals to red-blooded, live-wire people, and always high class.
> Are you acquainted with the Triangle and the Paramount pictures, plays with the real stars, by real authors; picture [illegible]

symbolize, and are representatives of every day individuals in our social life. Their faces are as familiar as their clean-cut personalites. Practically every home in Chambersburg has a member, who can mention twenty Paramount or Triangle favorites, or who know the titles of plays in which have appeared certain stars.

Because the Orpheum does not follow the common practice of advertising all plays as Great, the DON'T MISS IT style, regardless of the quality and because each play is studied and booked for its worth, and if found not up to the high standard of the house, this play is paid for but another picture is booked to take its place.

We are here for your business and we expect to get it. We expect to make our theater so popular that you just can't help but attend, not once in a while, but several nights each week. We can only do this with good sound business principles and good pictures. A business built up on artificial channels would soon crumble, but a business built up on the best in the market and offering the public a little more than their money's worth can live and will live to welcome the respect of every fair-minded person in this city. Come and see Anita King in "The Race" Friday, and if you say you have not been well entertained just tell Sally you want your money back and you will get it and no questions asked.

It is a healthful sign when stuff like this replaces the old-fashioned junk that becomes so much a matter of course that "greatest ever" is faint praise. Text like this, followed out, makes business brisk with people who can afford the best and are willing to pay for it. And in these days of the kid matinee it is worth remembering that Mr. Blanchard was among the first, if not the very first, to have a matinee bill for the kiddies and a different night program for their elders. This was three or four years ago, in Sunbury; so long ago that perhaps Mr. Blanchard has forgotten it himself, but we recall that he brought back a fairy play for a Saturday matinee, giving the regular booking at night.

Number One.

The Denver office of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service was the first to register with the Billie Burke Baby stuff. It got out a special mailing card urging the Exhibitor to "Help us celebrate the coming of Little Bill—only he's a girl. Doc says so. But help us celebrate anyway." And as a last line, "Ask the wife who has had one. Note. Billie Burke has inaugurated many styles and fads. We're strong for this one." We have already pointed out that Miss Burke-Mrs. Ziegfeld was doing all she could to help boom Gloria's Romance, but we think that Denver is whooping it up just a little bit too strong.

Booming Silas.

L. W. Carroll of the Lyric, Lancaster, N. H., recently had Silas Marner, and he worked it in a clean-cut fashion for all it was worth. He writes:

Under separate cover I am mailing you a copy of the Coos County Democrat with marked copy on pages 1, 4 and 5, and I wish to explain a word in regard to the manner of explaining this picture.

First I mailed every teacher a complimentary ticket (two if married) and wrote a personal letter telling of the merits of the picture and quoting from the Woman's Home Companion's list of better film. Then I prevailed upon the Superintendent to speak about it from the stage when the whole school assembled, laying special stress on the coupons for the matinee, as I wished to get rid of the little ones before evening, so that they would not disturb the older people. This was followed by a stock herald mailed into each home, and then the paper came out with the ad. I mentioned that a special music score from G. Schirmer was being used, and many came to me after the performance and wished to purchase a score if possible.

Our matinee and evening performances were both well attended and the teachers and press were loud in their praise. A picture of this kind is a good ad.

Incidentally I might add that the book "Silas Marner" is read in the third year English, and this fact added greatly.

His advertisement was a double-column, slightly more than half a page long. The lower half was divided between two coupon tickets. The first of these was a ticket admitting any child in the grade schools for five cents if the parent countersigned the ticket (adding the address). The second coupon was for the high school pupils and admitted for fifteen cents instead of the twenty-five cents regularly charged adults. Two stories and a local paragraph were also run in the same issue. This subject was particularly useful because it was part of the school studies, but interest can be roused in any similar adaptation provided that the adaptor has not taken too many liberties with the text, as is too often the case. Mr. Carroll, however, does not say what he did with the public library. There is always a chance here, as well. But he did the rest in a thorough fashion and cleaned up nicely.

Another "Contest."

Film Forecast, the Rowland & Clark general house program, has a new contest, or more properly an adaptation of the Mary Anderson, Louisville, scheme. Five quotations are given. These may be located somewhere in the issue, either in the advertising or film announcements. The first five earnest readers to place the quotations get ticket-book prizes. This form of scheme is most practical in a fairly large program such as the Pittsburgh company publishes. It ensures the reading of the entire issue by a majority of persons, many of whom will not trouble to enter the contest, so the results are not to be judged by the replies alone. Scores of persons solve the puzzles in magazines using them without ever trying for the prizes, and it is the same with this sort of contest. Someone should be scolded for announcing "Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in Col. Heezaliar Gets Married." Probably it was the printer who transposed an "in" and an "and."

Small Effect Scenes.

Gordon F. (100%) Fullerton, Advertising Manager of the Liberty, Seattle, sends in a photograph of a stage effect designed by himself and Manager J. G. von Herberg for "Old Folks at Home," though the scheme itself is not limited to any one picture but is valuable in the extreme as a means of getting scenic and lighting effects without the almost prohibitive expense of full stage settings to be used only for a day or a week. A glance at the cut shows two framed openings, similar to the boxes continued into the proscenium. These are used for miniature stage sets. "Old Folks at Home," for example, suggested the farm. While the organ played "Home Sweet Home" the left hand box was lighted to show the farm homestead in the glow of sunset, which quickly deepened into night. The windows were lighted up and one by one the stars twinkled out and the crescent moon was revealed. Then a red light was gradually brought up on the right hand box, showing the interior of the living room in the glow from the fire as seen through the old-fashioned eight-paned sashes. As the air drew to a close the title was thrown upon the curtain and this rose on the author's title. To be a little more in keeping, the film was cut to permit a scene of the interior to first show on the screen preserving the continuity. Few managers are able to afford the elaborate stage settings occasionally described, but any fairly large house can make good use of these miniature stages to get the spectator into the properly receptive mood. It might be added that scrim curtains are used to gain atmosphere, but these were removed before the photograph was made that the details might show clearly. It is not very expensive to install a small lighting system with dimmers, and the device may be used regularly or, with better results, reserved for the special features. In lighting it is well to remember that blue and amber bulbs should be used with the white to get the best straight lighting with rows of red and amber separately wired to get the sunset glow and blue for moonlight. And Mr. Fullerton knows how to write lines. Take for instance "A western Keystone comedy—all thrills, spills and giggle filled." Anyone would want to see a film of that sort.

Church Stuff.

The Motion Picture Exhibition Company, of Newark, N. J., sends in a leaflet sent to the pastors of churches suggesting a series of programs for church entertainments, laying out the program for general entertainment for church clubs, Sunday night subjects and Sunday school stuff. One thing to be noted in all their advertising, and they do much of it, is their adoption of the proper tone in their work. They do not dash off wild hurrah stuff, but adapt their style to their prospective patrons and offer arguments that will appeal to ministers rather than to showmen. With such a wide field in churches and schools, to say nothing of the kid matinees, it is little short of amazing that so few have entered this field as yet.

All Red.

The Princess, Clarksville, Texas, issues a four-page program, red on white. It is a bit gaudy in its looks, but it is audible. It would be possible to get a better layout after a chat with the printer. He breaks the program by setting the days in larger type that he does most of the titles, and in this way he detracts from the display. He should use rule to break with, set the day and date in ten point and take the space gained for a larger letter for titles or, better still, for white space. The proof reading is poorly done. With the fans so expert on names and titles, it hurts the house to announce Ralph Killard. Read proof on the proposition that the printer is not supposed to be an expert on names, and that you are there to guard against his errors.

Special for Drunks.

H. L. Hamilton of the Gem, Barberton, Ohio, has a new one, as the press clipping shows:

> Barberton Oct. 20.—Mayor J. W. Bishop and Chief of Police Ray will begin their crusade on drunks early Saturday morning and every drunk picked up on the street will be taken to the city prison, where he will remain for the day and made attend the public free-for-all worship Sunday morning at the Gem theater. The chief's and mayor's plan has been widely advertised all over the country, papers in Columbus carrying the story Thursday, when City Solicitor Ray Morton picked up a copy. Rev. C. H. Holcomb, the Sunday school teacher at the Brotherhood service will score the prisoners, who will occupy the first two rows in the theater. If business keeps up as it has been every day this week, two dozen will be the average attendance for Sunday's service.

The house is given free of all expense. It is a novel idea, but we are not wholly certain that it is a good one. There may be too large a patronage of inebriates, and some of these may have families to take offense at the publicity given the head of the house. Much depends upon the temper of the town, but it is something to be handled with care.

Majestic Mention.

It will be joyous, Brother Richardson, to see a whole page in the Majestic Monthly, the organ of the Majestic, Columbus, O., given to the three operators. This is in keeping with the policy of making all of the house staff known to the patrons in one of the best monthly programs gotten out. And it winds up with the statement that "The operating room is pleasantly located, half in the open, so that in summer and in winter it is a light and cheerful place to work."

The last issue is fully up to its predecessors as a program of personality and personalities. It gives more real reading than the average, and it is partly about the house and its people. There is a whole page each issue on "The House and Its Policies," and a page advertisement of some pocketbooks found and uncalled for, though some of them contain money. Cash must be easy in Columbus. It has no clip stuff this month, but it is always readable.

Another Anniversary.

The Parkway theater, Baltimore, is past its first year. The anniversary was marked with a tasty program in blue on white with a cut in brown attached. Inside there is a tactful appreciation and promise of even better to come, the program for the week and full house information. It is all in excellent taste. Most of the work of this house is above the average and we are sorry that we have seen so little of it lately. We wish they would put us on the permanent mailing list.

Vale.

V-L-S-E Pals and the Clansman have been discontinued. We shall miss both. These two exchange sheets were invaluable to their readers and cannot be replaced by a more general organ. L. J. Scott remains with the Kansas City branch, but Tom North has left Seattle and we feel a sense of personal loss in his going. The last we heard of him was via Aeroplane mail from Chicago, and as he sent no address will he please accept this as our reply of appreciation of his thoughtfulness.

Mr. Scott sends in the story of his campaign in Kansas City with Edith Storey. The Post is about as easy to break into as a national bank, but they thought they could use a story, and a photograph was snapped showing her at a machine in the Post office typing the story. Then they took her on a round of the big stores where she posed in hats and cloaks. The stores paid the Post for putting in the pictures (some of them quarter pages), and the thing worked from every angle. Then Miss Storey appeared in two episodes of "The Scarlet Runner" and they slapped a banner on a red car and used that to shoot her around town, there was a ball at the screen club and in two days Miss Storey appeared twenty-five times in twenty of the fifty-four picture houses in town. It made four pages of publicity in papers that grudge stickfulls. It was real press work all the way through with nothing overlooked.

A Newcomer.

Oliver Gill, of the Erie, Hugo, Okla., says he is a newcomer to the department, but that he is an old reader and has Picture Theater Advertising. He sends in two pieces of advertising, a throwaway and a card. The former is 10 by 15 inches and looks more like a wall poster than a throwaway. It is well laid out and the printing is better than usual, a strong black that dries down glossy. It is a good plan, even in a "today" to add the date in smaller type, but apart from this we like the layout. The card shows the same clean make-up and good selection of type faces. Both pieces feature the music, one announcement being that the organist will feature the Indian music that forms an appropriate accompaniment to the picture, and that this alone will be worth the price of admission. A line that is much better than saying that the organ cost $50,000. No one will believe the latter statement. Many will be interested in the Indian music. Music is an asset if it is good, and can be made a talking point.

A Children's Theater.

Saturday mornings the Strand, Providence, R. I., is known as The Children's Theater, and a series of matinees are given at ten in the morning on the lines that were originated, we believe, by the Majestic, Columbus, Ohio. Each performance is a benefit for some welfare organization. The first performance was for the benefit of the summer camp of the Boy Scouts and the bill, very appropriately, was "The Bugle Call." Other features listed are "Poor Little Peppina," "Little Mary Sunshine," "Let Katie Do It," "Robinsoe Crusoe," "Still Waters" and a repeat of "Alice in Wonderland." In addition there is a one-reel comedy and some travel stuff, but this last is not made the feature. They talk of the entertaining value of the program and not their instructiveness.

A Double.

The Queen and Majestic, Wilmington, Del., ask for comment on their program. Ten thousand are put out, of which 3,000 are divided between the houses and the rest mailed or otherwise distributed. The issue is a four page program, of which the center pages are shown here. The front and back pages carry cuts, one for each house. In addition the back page carries a small paragraph of house talk, the issue to hand bearing upon cleanliness. It is not a long argument, but a seven-line announcement with a punch to it. We like this form of program; in fact, we have said so before, but we think that the printer can do better for his share. Take the first announcement, for example. The copy is all right, but the composition is not. No one who cares needs be told that Shakespeare wrote Romeo and Juliet, nor is it necessary to emphasize the "Immortal." It would be better to drop to an eight-point "Shakespeare" and a six-point "immortal" and cut Harry Hilliard a couple of points to gain height for the name of Miss Bara, for the play and Miss Bara are the two things that will make for business. In the next box that "one day only" if set in italic would have made the name of Miss Glaum more prominent without detracting from the "one day" line. Over on the Majestic side there was room for a larger W. S. Hart, and Hart, rather than the play, would be the attractor here. It is always well to keep in touch with the foreman of the printing office and let him mark the type to get the proper display. Explain to him that the play and the star, unless otherwise noted, are more important to the box office than the name of the maker or author. Ask him to see that these are given the greatest possible display and he'll take an interest in it. Otherwise he'll merely turn out a good looking job and let it go at that. We think that the days of the week and the date could go in a slightly smaller type without hurt. Apart from this the program is well handled.

Saves Paper.

The Censor theater, Albion, Mich., is in line with the anti-envelope movement. They simply leave one page of their eight-page folder blank, use that for the address and seal with a bit of passe-partout paper, which is cheaper and better than the paper clip. With envelopes costing what they do, the self-contained program is a real economy.

Mark Em.

Contributors who send in newspapers will gain our love if they will mark the items to which they desire to attract attention. It saves a lot of time.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Script Risks.

MORE than a year has passed since we received the last complaint of mutilated scripts, and a new kick just to hand without foundation in reason, but perhaps others feel about it as this writer does.

One of his exhibits is a manila envelope, the front of which has been torn apart and sealed together with official stickers. A rubber stamp explains that the mutilation was caused by the cancelling machine. The author seems to think the company to blame, though clearly they delivered the script to the post office in good order. All large offices now postmark and cancel the stamps by machine. The feeds are gauged to the ordinary envelope. When a five ounce script comes along, if the paper clip is on the address side, there is liable to be a rip. It cannot be avoided.

Another exhibit shows a script marked by the paper clip, not alone at the margin, but in the center of the sheet where the fold comes. Here, too, the cancelling machine probably is to blame for the embossing, but any script will show such marks after a few trips.

A third envelope was insecurely gummed and forms the basis for another complaint. There is evidence that the flap was moistoned, but not sufficiently to soften the gum.

None of these troubles can be blamed upon the companies returning the script. It is a part of the gamble the author takes and the script that shows only ordinary wear from handling and yet must be recopied for further submission, is a regular overhead charge on all authors. Most authors have learned that by now and stand the loss because they know they must. If a company deliberately maltreats a script there is ground for complaint, but you must expect some wear and tear and be prepared to meet it.

Just a Dream.

This morning a crazy person suggested that there should be established by the picture makers a central bureau for the reading of all scripts and the instruction of authors. He had to be crazy to think of a scheme like that. What is wanted is a license bureau. All authors should be made to apply to the bureau for a permit to submit scripts. They should send ten plots with their application. If passed they should be given a permit good for one year. If they failed to pass they should be permitted to make application at intervals of twelve months until they did pass. Those given yearly licenses should have them renewed unless they had meantime become pests to the editors. That is a crazy dream, too, but until submissions are limited to those who really can write, the real writers will suffer for the sins of the boobs who flood the offices with junk and discourage the editors. The greatest handicap the competent but unknown author has to face is not his lack o fname, but the moral effect on the editor of the boob stuff. He cannot help but feel that nothing good can come out of such a mess of rot and he reads unbelievingly even the good.

The Reason.

Someone wants to know why we have let up on the school schemes. We have let up for the same reason that no one kicks the dying man. The good old days have gone and while a few still hang on, their pickings are comparatively small. The great mass of the public has been warned and only those who would be swindled anyway fall for the garish promises of the schools.

A Patch Book.

If you cannot think of full ideas, think of parts of one, and if you can think an idea and a half, save the half. Most authors keep a plot book of some sort, but keep a patch book, too. When ideas come slowly and in fragments, save those fragments. Perhaps you think of a piece of business. Write it down on a slip of paper. Perhaps it is nothing more than "They have lunch under the trees." This does not look very promising, but in the course of time you will get such a collection of stuff that you can make nearly en entire plot from what you take from the book, just as a patchwork quilt is made from scraps. Then you can do what they cannot do for the quilt; you can make it into a smooth story.

It is better if you can learn to think of stories as a whole, but this will help you to reach that point, and even after you do think entire plots you will often find that the idea that suggests nothing today will offer a whole plot next week or next year. There is always danger in doing too much literary bookkeeping of this sort, but some form of record is almost essential until you can train your mind to preserve ideas and present them when wanted.

Skill.

With the exception of the first year following the sudden demand for scripts, there has never been a time when so little good work is being done on scripts. It is all well enough to talk about the great advance made in the pictures, but it is not true. Some few persons assuredly have made great strides, but the rank and file have dropped behind. There are fewer people able to write a really competent script at the present moment than there were three or four years ago. This statement is not qualified by any "in proportion," or similar saving clause. Numerically there are not as many competent photoplay writers working to-day as there were in 1912. It is very true that the requirements of to-day are greater than the technical demands of three years ago, but the good writers of those days could be the good writers of to-day had they kept pace with the profession.

The synopsis only is responsible for a large part of the trouble. For the past three years there has been a growing tendency to insist upon the studio developed script. But there is also the fact that real writers will not do the increased work for the synopsis price, and so the trick of writing good continuities is becoming a lost art. But understand that by good continuity we mean a story so planned, scene by scene, as to tell the story in the clearest and most dramatic fashion. Good continuity writing does not consist in trick work. It gets its effect from the story and not from the camera. It is no uncommon thing to-day to see a story wholly spoiled through the immoderate use of cut-backs, the abuse of fades, an over supply of closeups and the rest. It would be almost a novelty—and a pleasant one—to see a story produced with an idea of telling the story most plainly and with the greatest clearness. It is not being done these days. Many readers will doubtless recall the astonishment with which the six-foot line was first received. Back in 1909 the so-called French stage was most often used. Edison, Biograph, Pathe, Vitagraph and the rest not only showed the players' feet but the foreground as well. Then came the Griffith Biographs with the figures so large that the top of the head and the players' knees were cut off. It was a novelty and attracted, and the French stage was almost a novelty again when adopted by the Famous Players. To a large extent the cut-back has replaced the need for six-foot line, but all it has given us has been a succession of crowded small stages in one set. It has not, in a majority of cases, put the close up where it belongs—as a means of additional emphasis.

It is going to pay some of the writers of to-day to study the old methods, for the public is sickening of effects as substitutes for story, and we must presently come to a return to old methods tempered by the good aspects of the later discoveries.

Perhaps Not You.

Speaking of her recent return to photoplay work, following a vacation on other matters, a correspondent suggested that her failure to keep in touch with the market had rendered her plays less available. This is true in part. Those who sold three or four years ago and dropped the work for other occupation find it difficult to get back into touch with the changes and advancements of story writing, but there is another side to the matter. In the past year the market has materially changed and few companies are really buying much. It may be that it is the small demand rather than lack of merit that prevents immediate sales, so cheer up—and watch for the change that is bound to come. Meanwhile, it is well to remember that unless you keep in touch with your work, no matter what the line of your endeavor, you will get out of fashion, and perhaps have no little trouble in finding yourself again. If for any reason you stop writing photoplays for three months or more, you must, to some extent, learn over again. You must get the "feel" of the thing again if you would find success.

See the Back Page.

Turn to the back page and look at the Power Cameragraph advertisement. Somewhere in the copy you will find the slogan "Sixteen years of knowing how." It sells a lot of projection machines. It will sell scripts, too. Know how, even if editors do tell you they will supply the technique.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progresive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Brooklyn Operators Notice.

At midnight, December 14th, there will be a meeting of all moving picture machine operators of the surrounding territory at St. Louis Hall, 443 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The meeting is held by Local Union 306 and admission thereto can only be gained by those holding a New York license card. All licensed operators, either union or non-union, are cordially invited to attend. Non-union operators will not incur any obligation by attending, though it is hoped we may be able to convince you of the advisability of joining with your fellows in organization in order to properly protect your interests.

Local Union 306 asks you to attend and this department and its editor advises you to do so. The editor will himself be there and address you. There will also be other thoroughly competent speakers.

Notice to Unions and Examining Boards.

During the past years a great many request have come to the editor asking him to set forth a list of questions for examination. This has been an impractical thing to do, for reasons which have been repeatedly explained.

I now, however, make this offer. During my tour of the country next spring I will be glad to, wherever time permits, appear before either official or union examining boards, and examine either a genuine candidate or one of the examiners himself, in order to show what, in my opinion, an examination ought to consist of, and the way in which it should be given.

I cannot promise to do this in all cities, because in some cases where the distances to be traveled are long I might not have the time, but where time and physical and mental strength will permit, I will be very glad to accommodate in this respect.

Question No. 168.

Suppose you were on the road and in a small town found yourself with only 50 ampere fuses and no other fuses available. The wires from the switchboard to your machine are found to be No 10, through which you are only allowed to put 25 amperes. What precautions say is there of taking care of such a situation? In other words the real question is, How can you reduce the carrying capacity of fuse wire by, say, one half, and do it with a reasonable degree of accuracy?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 158.

The Roll of Honor on Question No. 158 consists of C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; F. N. Irvin, Texas; M. M. Moon, Sherman, Texas; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; V. M. Kidd, Victoria, B. C.

Brother Linstruth has sent in what seems to be the best answer to question 158.

Reply to Question No. 158.

By C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.

The Question:

What slope should the balcony and the gallery floor have? How would you determine it?

The Answer

The slope of gallery and balcony is a very difficult proposition to [illegible] However the principal object in view is to make every seat a "real one," not have too many objectionable steps, but still secure maximum capacity. The slope should depend on the depth of the house, the height of and size of screen; also available depth of balcony and gallery. The longer the house and the higher the screen the less the slop in balcony, and vice versa. In making slope for balcony, care should be taken not to have a better arrangement than on the ground floor, since the public would soon learn of it, and the higher priced seats would suffer; also the house around the corner, which offered a better ground floor, would profit materially.

If the auditorium had a slope of 1 foot in 8 or 10, I would slope the balcony and gallery alike, and about 1 foot in 6. These measurements I believe to be in proportion, and would do nicely in a deep house. However in a house of but little depth the slope must be more abrupt. In this case I should build the floor in balcony and gallery stair-fashion, with not greater than a 6-inch step. Greater than a 6-inch step is rather trying for grandma and grandpa.

An Outrage.

Enclosed find clipping from Metro feature "The Wheel of the Law." The same was shipped to me directly from their exchange at Dallas, Texas. There were sixty punch marks in four reels of film, the attached sample being amputated from one of the reels. I am at a loss to find words which will express my opinion of such work. The only reason to which I can attribute the presence of such an incompetent in an operating room is that he has not physical strength sufficient to manipulate a number two shovel. All the reels ended in a short scene following a sub-title, and these scenes were unusually easy to remember. I shall trust to your good judgment and well-known ability to give him all that is coming to him. I am the proud possessor of the Handbook, second and third editions, as well as Hawkins' Electrical Guide. Also I certainly have some boss, being allowed to purchase such supplies as are needed without a kick, and to use my own judgment as to [illegible] of projection, and as I am a projection fiend, or rather a fiend on good projection, and a constant reader of the department, you can guess there are not many overspeeded films. If you use this kindly do not mention any names, as it might cause a considerable amount of unpleasantness. Please accept my best wishes for the department and kindest personal regards.

This particularly outrageous example caused me to take some other almost equally bad ones up and personally interview Mr. Atkinson, general manager of the Metro. I placed the matter of the necessity for a change-over sign before him very forcibly, and there was not much chance for Manager Atkinson to sidestep the issue while he looked at that chewed up film. He promised me faithfully that he would take the matter up with his studio people and see what could be done with regard to the change-over sign. I suggested the same sign the Universal agreed to adopt some time ago, but, so far as I know, have not done it.

As to the operator who would deliberately commit this sort of outrage, why I could not give him what is "coming to him," because the language of the country would break down under the strain. To say he ought to be kicked out of the operating room and out of the moving picture industry as well, is putting it mildly. I think the only really adequate punishment would be a revival of the old ducking stool. That and a public horse whipping seems to be the only things which would fill the bill in a case of this kind. The sample I had was about 8 feet long. If an equal amount was punched up in each of the other five reels that would be 40 feet of film ruined, which, at 10 cents per foot, would be $4.00 damage done by this particular meal ticket "operator." It does seem that even the most confirmed bonehead in the business would have too much sense of decency to go to such an extreme. Of course, I freely grant that the manufacturer ought to incorporate a change-over sign, but his failure so to do does not constitute an excuse for the utter ruining of 40 feet of film in a single feature. The damage this ignoramus did may have been perpetrated from a motive of spite against the exchange, but if so, it fails of its purpose, because it is not the exchange that is going to suffer so much as the next man, and the next man, and the next man, and so on, who is to run those films and have sixty punch marks slapped in the face of his audience. In other words, this ingrowing idiot has deliberately injured the work of every other operator who must run those films; also he has deliberately injured the show of every other manager who must run those films, and in so doing has lessened the enjoyment of many thousands of people who will look at the films he has punched up.

It seems to me that exhibitors are at fault in not [illegible] these matters out, finding out who is the guilty man, and meting out to the theater adequate punishment.

Double Shutter.

Mr. C. H. Brindle, Souris, Manitoba, Canada, sends in drawings and pattern of a revolving shutter, the same being a double shutter,one-half of which revolves in one direction, being attached to a hollow spindle, and in the center is a second spindle carrying the other half of the shutter, can be set at the dissolving point of the light ray. He asks for comments on this plan.

This particular scheme has been known for a long time, and is covered by letters patent held by the Bell-Howell Company, Chicago. The Motiograph inside double cone shutter is an adaptation of this particular scheme, which is valuable where the E. F. of the objective lens is so short or so long that the dissolving point of the light ray cannot be reached by the shutter. In all cases, however, where the revolving shutter can be set at the dissolving point of the light ray (see Fig. 63a, page 145, third edition of the Handbook, also text matter on page 146) it has no appreciable value—in fact no value at all. For inside shutters, of course, there is an advantage in this form of shutter, but the trouble lies in the fact that in order to obtain this advantage the adjustment of the shutter must be so very delicate that it is a difficult thing for the operator to keep it in proper adjustment and avoid travel ghost.

Appreciation.

From Local Union No. 171, Pittsburgh, Pa., comes the following letter which speaks for itself. It is a sample of many similar letters in our files. This letter comes from a large union in a large city. I recommend it to the careful consideration of locals who are considering the proposition of arranging for the lecture next winter.

Moving Picture World, 17 Madison Avenue, New York City, N. Y. Gentlemen: We, the Moving Picture Operators' Local Union 171 of Pittsburgh, Pa., wish to thank you for sending Brother F. H. Richardson here to lecture on Projection, but cannot find words to express our gratitude.

Brother Richardson did a world of good in Pittsburgh, and we think is one of the greatest benefactors we operators have particularly in securing a better understanding between the manager and the operator; also in the uplift of the industry and for better Projection.

We again thank you, as well as Brother Richardson, and hope that we may have the pleasure of his presence again. With best wishes to the World and its editors, we remain,

Very truly and fraternally yours,

J. P. Dean, secretary. Ralph Freeman, president.

From Nebraska.

T. C. Shipley, Lincoln, Neb., says:

Of late there has been a great deal of argument set forth in the projection department concerning the minimum age at which a person should be granted the privilege of operating projection machine apparatus. I read the replies to Question 148 with much interest, particularly as the question is stated in such a way that the logical conclusion is the editor was thinking of fire hazard alone when he brought up the question of age limit. I now wish to set forth an argument in favor of a license being granted to those, and only those who can successfully pass a proper examination given by an "efficient" and practical examining board, regardless of the fact that the applicant may be under 21 years of age.

First: I object to the 21 year age limit because it is not consistent. I believe a man, say, for example, 18 years of age, may be far more proficient in the operation of projection machine apparatus than the older man. He is just as well able to acquire technical knowledge as the older man. He may be as level minded as the older man; yes, even more so, and he has as much right to be considered as the older man. For example: I know of an 18-year-old operator in a small town who is doing some of the best work, under poor conditions, I have seen for some time. He is a High School graduate and has an excellent technical knowledge of projection, as well as a long term of practical experience. He is as cool-headed as the average operator, and I am sure he could pass an examination which many of the older men would stumble over. However this young fellow cannot join the union; he cannot get a better job with better conditions; he cannot work with older men, and he he has no voice whatever, simply because his age acts as a discrimination against him, regardless of his superior ability.

Now, on the other hand, take the older man. In a nearby city (of course there are none in Lincoln), I know of a self-satisfied individual who calls himself an operator. He has a good job, not through proficiency, but through "pull." His screen results do not come anywhere near those of the younger man. He has no technical knowledge, cares nothing for the artistry of his profession; will not listen to superior counsel, and above all has no desire whatever to progress. Yet this man, an operator by courtesy, is preferred as against the young, ambitious fellow who can and would deliver the goods because of his future, simply because he is the older man. And it must be admitted this is no isolated, rare instance.

Second: The holder of a license would be a capable man, for the object of the movement would not be to license a class of operators merely because of age, but to place the operating rooms of the country in the hands of men who by honest force of merit are best able to handle the work. It must be admitted the "merit man" is the only logical conclusion, even if we disregard the age proposition. To realize this we need only reflect that at the present time the really "big" and high salaried positions are held by the fellows who are conscientious, and are practically and technically trained.

Third: An efficient examination would determine accurately a man's capability, for no man could pass this examination if he were not proficient. Good men would be influenced to enter the operating business, because an honest competition would be established, and no preference could be shown. Furthermore those desiring such positions and possessing the required merit would be admitted without prejudice under this system. Therefore, since the object of my plan is efficiency, and to place the operating rooms in the hands of really efficient men, I contend with all sincerity that license to operate projection machine apparatus should be granted only to men of known ability and merit, regardless of whether or not they have attained a certain, definite age, and that the qualifications be that the applicant must pass successfully an examination designed to be a genuine test of ability.

After considerable hesitation I have concluded not to make any extended comment on this matter at this time, but to invite our readers to set forth their views. I am afraid Brother Shipley will find there will be those who will punch quite some few holes in his argument, and for the present I will just sit back and be the umpire in the matter of the hole punching.

Jacksonville Defended.

F. N. Irvin, Lufkin, Texas, says:

I would like to speak a word in behalf of the Jacksonville, Texas, man, see October 14th issue. The operator who proceeded me in my present position told me the service out of the Jacksonville house used to be rotten, but I get two features and one weekly from there each week and have absolutely no kick to offer. If all operators would work together as Friend Mullens does with me there would be a better feeling, and we would all give better service and make our work truly one of art, as it should be. He even puts a note in all the cans telling me the exact condition of each and every one of the films, and when he tells me it is O. K. I find it not necessary to inspect it. I am not personally acquainted with Brother Mullens, but intend to be some day before long, as it is only sixty miles from here to Jacksonville, and I believe it pays to know men of his type. He is really and truly a man in every sense of the word, and I believe the impression left by the Nacogdoches man should be removed. I feel, however, that Nacogdoches was mistaken, for I do not think that any one would deliberately do such a thing with malice aforethought, and I for one would like to hear from him on this subject. And now another thing, and that is "fading in," particularly with regard to the item from Galveston, Texas, in October 7th issue. I agree with you as to its not helping in the first show, and that some universal sign ought to be incorporated in the negative itself. But in the absence of a better method the one he uses is fine, and in this connection let me say that that "terrible operator" at Jacksonville, Texas, is sending me his key-sheet, so that I get the effect on the first show—thanks to him. Referring to Friend Martin's note in October 21st issue, I agree. I too wish you would draw up more questions, as I have received a very large amount of benefit from those which have already come, and I certainly would hate to see them stop. How about it, Old Top?

With regard to the questions, I shall probably keep them up until I leave on the big trip, but while away on the road they will, I think, be abandoned. It will keep me jumping sideways to lecture every night, travel by day and keep up with the work of the department, as well as write a lot of stuff with regard to the trip each day. I guess Mr. Mullens of Jacksonville may be considered as having been fully vindicated. It seems that instead of being a stem-winding son-of-a-gun he is really a pretty good scout, and a careful, painstaking operator. May his tribe increase.

Hard Spots in Carbons.

The question has often been asked: "Why is there a diminution in the illumination when the arc strikes a hard spot in the carbon?"

It will perhaps be of considerable general interest to have this apparently difficult, but really very simple point answered somewhat in detail, and I will therefore proceed to do it.

The intrinsic brilliancy of the crater of the electric arc is, according to Blondel (Page 564, "Optic Projection," by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage) about 130 candle-power per square millimeter for cored carbons, regardless of the amount of current used. This is equivalent to about 84,000 candle power per square inch of crater for cored carbons. "Optic Projection," page 564 says: "The increase in candle-power of the arc caused by an increase in current is due, not to an increase in the brightness of the crater, but to an increase in its area."

A moment's thought will convince even the most skeptical operator that this is an even and exact statement of fact, because it is just plain, ordinary common sense, when we come to reason the matter and in the light of known facts. The temperature of the crater of an electric arc cannot, in the very nature of things, be appreciably higher than the temperature necessary to volatilize carbon. The temperature of the positive crater has been estimated at 3427 degrees centigrade, which is equivalent to 6200 degrees Fahrenheit. Incidentally the temperature of the sun is estimated at 6477 degrees centigrade, that of acetylene at 2057 degrees centigrade and that of the gas flame at 1557 degrees centigrade. Now having once reached the point of volatilization you cannot go appreciably higher, conversely when the temperature necessary to volatilization is not reached the incandescent of the crater will not be so high, and that is the answer to the question asked.

Hard spots in carbon are spots which resist the temperature necessary to volatilize the original matter contained in the body of the carbon. It does not volatilize readily, therefore the temperature of the crater is lowered.

The total illumination given off by the crater of an electric arc will be approximately (cored carbons) 130 candle-power multiplied by the number of square millimeters contained in the carbon.

There are very many such things as this which form an interesting study, and aside from being interesting their study tends to strengthen the student's mentality, broaden his field of vision and make him in every way a better and more efficient workman, even though the knowledge may have, on the surface of things, no immediate bearing upon his practical work.

The Aperture Lens.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., contributes the following:

In the drawing an aperture lens is shown, which consists merely of a single uncorrected meniscus lens, placed about ¼-in. in front of the aperture, and used in connection with the regular form of objective. The aperture lens is fixed immovable in the position shown, and operates mainly in two ways. First, it concentrates the entire light beam, thus causing all the light to pass through the objective. Second, it converts the picture on the film at the aperture into a virtual image located very close to the aperture. This virtual image is of great importance, and is discussed as follows: It has been determined that the virtual image, as formed by the design of aperture lens shown, has a field which is curved, with its concave side toward the screen. Now it is also known that the type of objective shown will, when working under regular conditions without an aperture lens, produce a field at the screen which is curved, with its convex side toward the screen. It is therefore very evident that with the object (virtual image) curved an opposite direction to the image which the objective normally forms, the two curvatures must tend to counterbalance and produce a flat field at the screen; also it is quite apparent that since this correction to a flat screen image is made by means outside the objective, most probably no astigmatism would be incurred by this method. The obtaining of a flat anastigmatic field at the screen is much be desired, and is in direct line with modern tendencies, but at present it can only be secured by the use of very high priced anastigmat objectives, and if the aperture lens would secure practically the same results, its great comparative cheapness demands at least seriously considering the present claims. The amount of curvature of field at the virtual image can be varied within wide limits by altering the shape of the meniscus lens without changing its focus, so that there is ample means for properly making the correction just mentioned. The aperture lens is not corrected within itself for any of the ordinary aberrations, because its position so close to the object (aperture) prevents these aberrations from being produced to any extent. In this connection it occupies the same relative position (optically) as the eyepiece of an opera glass, which is always a single, uncorrected lens.

Now considering the relation between the action of the aperture lens and the objective: The aperture lens merely converts the film picture into a virtual image of fixed size and position, which now becomes substituted in every respect in place of the real film picture. There is no confusion whatever between the actions of the objective and aperture lens. The former works the same as it always did, except that the virtual image is a little larger than the real aperture, and this new measurement must be used in computing the working E. F. of the objective.

The design of aperture lens here shown would produce satisfactory result with objective working at E.F.'s of 6 inches or under, and would place the dissolving point of the beam sufficiently far ahead of the objective; but if the required E.F. becomes much longer the ideal shutter position would become located within the lens barrel, and this condition will require the use of an operture lens of longer focus to advance the shutter position, and will also require a larger diameter objective to intercept the entire beam.

Again, an increased distance from condensers to aperture would help secure the two latter conditions, without altering the action of the aperture lens.

I would respectfully refer the foregoing to our readers—particularly Brothers Solar and Griffiths. Personally, I don't pretend to be able to follow this particular matter through with any degree of certainty. I don't, however, see that the more fast of the ray passing through a meniscus lens before entering the objective would have any tendency to produce a flat field at the screen. Maybe I am wrong, but nevertheless I cannot see it.

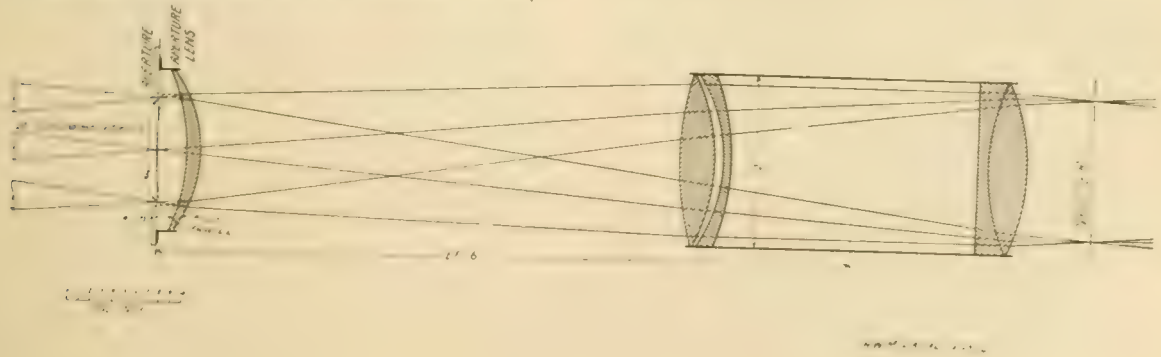
From Chicago.

Morris H. Thacker, Chicago, Ill., asks:

(A) At what heat does film ignite? (B) What is focal length and how is it determined? (C) What is the objective focus? (D) What is equivalent focus? (E) How is the size of the picture figured? For instance: equivalent focus 2 inches, distance screen to film 30 feet, size of picture 10.1 x 13.7. (F) How wide is a film? (G) How do you figure resistance in wire? For instance, copper wire: length 100 feet, size No. 8, voltage 110, amperes 5. (H) What is an inductor? (I) What is a rotary converter? (J) Draw a circuit showing where voltmeter should be located. (K) What is a voltmeter? (L) What is the width of film?

Evidently these questions are not asked by an operator. If answers in detail are wanted I would suggest the purchase and study of the Handbook. However, I am going to answer the questions briefly, because of whence they come.

(A) Don't know. Have never experimented. Don't know that it makes any particular difference to the operator. It is well known that the concentrated rays of any projection arc used in theatrical work will ignite the film in just about two ordinary shakes and a shiver—in other words, in from 2 to 5 seconds, according to amperage. (B) There are a good many different kinds of focal lengths, but presumably what you mean is the distance from the lens at which it will focus parallel rays of light. It is determined by focusing the light and measuring the distance from a point of focus to the optical center of the lens. (C) Never heard of it, unless you mean the focus of the objective lens. If so, the objective lens has two different kinds of focus, viz.: the equivalent focus, and back focus. (D) It would take too much space to explain this intelligently. See Handbook. (E) To find the width of picture a lens of given E. F. will produce multiply the throw, in feet, by the precise width of the aperture in fractions of an inch and divide the result by the width of the picture in feet. The result will be the E. F. of the required lens, as near as it can be figured. If you want to know the size picture a lens of given E. F. will project, then multiply the width of the aperture, in inches, or fractions of an inch, by the projection distance less the equivalent focus, and divide that product by the equivalent focus of the lens. The result will be the width of the picture the lens will produce, as nearly as it can be figured. (F) Measure it. (G) In figuring resistance in wire neither the voltage or amperage has anything to do with the matter. The rule is as follows: Multiply the length of the wire by the mill foot standard of resistance for the material the wire is made of, which in the case of copper is 10.5, and divide that product by its area in circular mills. In measuring the resistance of a circuit it is, however, customary to follow the above rule, but double the mill foot standard. The same result is, however, arrived at by doubling the length of the wire, there being two "legs" in a circuit. For the example, you quote the resistance would be (100 x 10.5) divided by 16,510, the latter being the area of a No. 8 wire in circular mills. This matter is explained in detail, pages 42 to 45 inclusive, of the Handbook. The result in the example cited would, of course, be a very small fraction of an ohm. (H) Trade name for a low voltage transformer. (I) A device for reducing the voltage of direct current by means of a revolving armature and field poles. (J) Not necessary. Can be located anywhere on the circuit, though its reading might be different at different points on the circuit under some conditions. (K) An instrument for measuring voltage or electro motive force. (L) Chicago seems to be very anxious about the width of the film. For Heaven sake, man, measure it! You can get a small piece of film at any exchange. To relieve your very evident anxiety on this point, however, the width of film is 1⅜ inches.



Nice Work.

The accompanying photograph is a map of the countenance and its supporting base of John J. Crowe assistant manager Garrick theater, San Francisco, Cal., who has sent in for inspection 22 hand-made slides, which are, by long odds, the most beautiful specimens of that kind of slide making this particular editor has ever looked at. It would be impossible to reproduce these slides in any adequate way, because of the fact that in most instances a part of the excellent work is carried by the back-ground itself, and in such manner that it would not show in a reproduction. However, this is not the case with all of them, and I am showing you four of the slides in miniature, though they are by no manner of means the best. You will, however, observe the more than ordinary excellence of the lettering, which is done on white or clear glass, the foundation apparently being bon ami or some similar composition.

Brother Crowe says he learned to make these slides while employed by one of San Francisco's largest picture houses, though in what capacity he does not set forth. Certainly the work, as I said in the first place, overtops anything of the kind we have looked at, and that is saying considerable, because this department has examined some very fine specimens of hand-made slides during the past years.

You will observe that one of the slides seems to be printed in either Palestine French or the stuff they fry potatoes in, I don't know which.

Difficult Problem.

Ever since visiting the Maritime Provinces I have been thinking over the situation from the organization point of view, and it seems to present a reasonably difficult problem, in so far as the operator be concerned.

Aside from Halifax and St. John there are no towns employing sufficient men to form a local. Moncton has three, four or maybe five operators—certainly not more—and that is the only town, outside of Halifax and St John, in which there are even that number.

There is no manner of question, however, but there should be some form of organization to which all the men can belong, and I am inclined to think the only practical method would be to form two locals, or perhaps three, viz.: one in Halifax, to which all Nova Scotia men can belong, and one in St. John, and one in Moncton, in which event all the men in southern New Brunswick can belong in the St. John local, and all in northern New Brunswick in Moncton. Of course there is Fredericton, but as I understand it there are only three or four operators in that city.

Let it be understood that this is merely a rough -a very rough—idea. The point is that the greater number of operators are scattered, one or two in a town, and if they are to reap the benefits of organization some plan of this kind will unquestionably have to be adopted. Just how the business of such a local would be conducted I cannot say, but some scheme might possibly be evolved which would fit the conditions at least reasonably well.

I would welcome discussion of this matter in the department, by Maritime Provinces operators. You men are better acquainted with the local situation and possibilities than I can possibly be. This article is by no means intended as an attempt to butt into your affairs, but merely to start discussion as to the best way the peculiar situation can be handled to best advantage.

I understand the Exhibitors' Organization has been perfected, and I am glad of it. I hope it will prosper and become a power for the good of the industry in that territory. I also believe the operators should try and perfect some method for building up an organization, because the benefits of organization are many, and, rightly handled, the detriments none.

After writing the above I referred it to one of the leading operators of the Maritime Provinces, asking him to look it over and make such comment as he thought proper. I now have his reply. It is decidedly interesting. He says:

> Your article entitled "Difficult Problem" is very fitting indeed, and the solving of the problem in question will, I think, be a task of extreme difficulty. Attempts to organize the Maritime Provinces operators were made as far back as 1909. In that year I was in Halifax when an organizer came from Boston to talk the question over. I have forgotten just what the result was, other than he did not succeed in forming an organization. Again in 1911, and I think in 1913, the men of St. John talked over the matter of organizing the operators and stage hands. We went so far as to wire International President Shay, who just at that time was in Montreal in connection with a strike. No reply was received, however, and we let the matter drop.
> There are, all told, about eighty operators in the Maritime Provinces. Of this number eight work in St. John and the same number in Halifax. The rest of the men are scattered throughout the territory in the smaller towns, of which about six have as many as three or four operators working. Now with the men thus scattered, and the distances between by no means short, the man wishing to attend a meeting would have to, in addition to his dues, pay railway fare and perhaps lose a day or two from work; also he would be obliged to pay his expenses while going to and from, and while at the meeting, therefore you see it would be absurd to expect out of town men to attend meetings, and you know when members cannot attend the meetings they soon lose interest.
>
> In addition to all this the present system of licensing is very bad, particularly in New Brunswick. In a number of instances men who know practically nothing about projection have been given license to operate. In fact, I don't believe a single application for license has thus far been turned down, and since "birds of a feather flock together," where such conditions exist, other conditions are also found, such as small salaries and lack of study on the part of operators, with its natural sequence of poor projection.
> Now, Brother Richardson, until these conditions change, which I sincerely hope and trust they will before very long, you can readily see how useless it would be to attempt to organize a body of men, keep them interested enough to pay the necessary dues, and, most important of all, study their profession. I believe that at least the majority of the men would consider it as a mere throwing away of money to join a union unless they could be assured that their salary would be doubled in say thirty days, after they became members. Of course if they could be convinced that their salaries could be largely increased if they would study and improve their knowledge of projection they probably would do it, but ? ? ? ? ? ?
>
> Now, Friend Richardson, don't get me wrong. We have some real operators in the Provinces—men who do study their profession and who realize the importance of their work to the success of the theater and the moving picture industry. These men get good salaries, as salaries go in this neck of the woods.
>
> Then again, suppose the above conditions were changed, there are other conditions existing here which would be against our affiliation with the I. A. T. S. E. For instance, there are small town theaters which use one act of vaudeville each show, and even play legitimate shows, in which case the operator has to be the stage manager and electrician, with a helper—sometimes. This is very much against the I. A. T. S. E. laws, and against your teaching as well, but it is utterly impossible for the managers of the small town theaters in this country to comply with I. A. rules, employ a stage manager, electrician, etc., and have the operator attend to the operating room only. This is because there is absolutely not enough business in the small towns to enable a theater manager to pay the extra help. As it now is, even the operator does not receive the salary he should for the work he has to do, and up to date I have not observed any of the small town theater owners getting wealthy. I do not believe many of them, and I am absolutely sure a large proportion of them just simply could not stand for the additional expense organization and affiliation with the I. A. would bring about. It would literally put them out of business, and thus deprive the people of any show at all. You, therefore, see that if an organization were attempted at all it would, under present conditions, literally have to be purely a Maritime Province one, and I do not think we could hope to be recognized by the Trades and Labor Councils of Canada unless we were affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E., which is another spoke in the wheel of the proposition. Under such conditions the necessary fees would be altogether out of proportion to any benefit that could possibly be derived; also where members could not attend meetings I am afraid the most important, and too often the most difficult work of an organization, would be the collecting of the dues.
> Now, I trust I shall not be misjudged in this matter, because I have set forth conditions that I (and I am not alone in this) firmly believe are against organization in the Maritime Provinces at this time, but I assure you I am, and always have been, in favor of organization, and would be very thankful, indeed, if it were practically possible to bring about a successful organization of the men in this section. On that proposition I am, however, "from Missouri."

And there you are! I have been up there and looked things over. I believe what the brother says is very largely an even and exact state-

[illegible]

A Stupid Blunder.

From a western city comes the following letter:

Mr. F. H. Richardson, Projection Department Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir: We are now building, and have almost completed the [illegible] theater in this city and the question has been raised as to whether or not it will be necessary to tilt the screen in order to obtain a good picture.

As we think your advice would be valuable, we are taking the liberty of sending you blue print of building showing position of machine-room and screen. Your opinion will be greatly appreciated. Thanking you in advance for an early reply, we remain,

Yours very truly,

I have withheld the name of the city, the name of the theater, and the name of the company because I feel compelled to make some very caustic criticisms on this particular proposition, and in so doing I don't wish the owners of this theater to feel that I am directing the criticism toward them, because they apparently are not theatrical people, but merely men who have built a theater, presumably to rent.

You will observe, in the first place, that whereas they conclude that my advice would be valuable it has not been asked for until the theater is almost completed and it is probably practically impossible to correct the error, as all blame the architect has made in the designing of the house. In this particular instance the elevation of the auditorium shows an approximate 35-foot drop in a 116-foot throw, the operating room being, as is almost invariably the case where this detail is left in the hands of an architect, stuck away back up immediately under the roof at the very top of a high balcony.

Now this is particularly and peculiarly reprehensible in this instance, because the front fifteen feet of the balcony is carried by projecting steel cantilevers supported at their back end by heavy steel girders and it would have been no difficult matter to have spaced the two central cantilever 12 feet apart and have placed a 12 x 8 foot operating room, having a 7 to 8 foot setback 7 in front and about 8 in rears between these two cantilever where it would have been almost exactly centered with the center of the screen, with a throw of 61 feet. This would have produced almost ideal conditions for projection. The operating room in this location would have projected down about 2½ feet below the bottom of the steel girders, but not sufficiently to have interferred with the view of the picture from any seat in the house.

Had the room been thus placed in the first instance its bottom could have been rounded off, and while it might have detracted from the symmetrical appearance of the underside of the balcony, still this could have been so worked out that it would not have been at all serious, whereas by the present arrangement it will forever be impossible to secure perfect projection in that theater. With the operating room between the steel cantilevers its ventilation would have been a simple matter, and while the room would not have been an ideal one, still it could have been made a very fairly good one. Also the entrance could have been arranged so as not to interfere with anything to any serious degree.

When [illegible] WHEN [illegible] comes to an understanding of the fact that THE AVERAGE ARCHITECT IS UTTERLY INCOMPETENT TO PLAN OR LOCATE THE OPERATING ROOM OF THEATERS, BECAUSE HE DOES NOT UNDERSTAND THE REQUIREMENTS OF PRACTICAL PROJECTION. In this particular case the blunder of the architect constitutes an outrage because it was absolutely and entirely uncalled for. Possibly the mistake could still be remedied, but it is unlikely since one of the steel cantilevers is very probably located at the center of the balcony, and even if it is not it would entail heavy expense to tear down the underside of the balcony and build in the operating room at this late day. Moreover, it is quite possible that it would now be impractical to locate an entrance to the room.

And now as to the practical effects. While I have not the time to figure it out exactly, approximately here is what will happen to the picture. The drop is 35 feet in 116 feet. With the screen flat against the wall and a 12 x 16-foot picture it will be 112 feet from the lens to the top of the picture, and 119 feet from the lens to the bottom of the picture. With a 12 x 16-foot picture the spread of the light ray will be 1.6552 inches to each foot of throw, therefore it figures out a difference of about 11½ inches in the width of the picture at the top and at the bottom. In order to overcome this by tilting the screen it would be necessary to bring the bottom of the screen out about 4 feet from the wall, and this, of course, is utterly impossible. It would, however, be practical to tilt the screen perhaps as much as 18 inches without seriously injuring the effect, and thus overcome a part of the distortion, provided a proper setting could be arranged to hide the tilting, but I hardly see how this could be done with the "stage" arranged the way the architect has planned it, it being level with the auditorium floor, presumably with the idea of the musicians sitting immediately underneath the screen. However, even with the present arrangement it will be possible to tilt the screen perhaps as much as one foot without the same being very noticeable, provided it be rightly done.

The keystone effect could of course be remedied by filling in the aperture of the machine, an operation which any competent operator can perform. This, however, results in the elimination of part of the bottom of the picture, and makes anything at the bottom of the screen [illegible] in proportion to objects at the top. The [illegible] distortion, however, does not constitute the worst fault. The biggest trouble with this proposition lies in the fact that the distortion is up and down as well as sidewise, and the picture instead of having a height three-fourths of its length will be not very far from square, and if the keystone effect is eliminated by filling in the aperture the picture will, as a matter of fact, be very nearly square if the screen lay flat against the wall. This has the effect of making all objects in the picture taller than they really are, and imparts an appearance of thinness which is particularly noticeable with figures in the foreground. For instance: When a man appears on the screen at just life size, if that man is actually six feet tall he will appear to be probably about six feet six inches tall, without corresponding increase in width except at the extreme bottom of the picture.

Now, of course, all this does not mean that it will be impossible to project a fairly good picture in this theater, but it does mean that whereas the picture will be fairly good, it will by no manner of means be what it ought to be, though this cannot be so well realized unless one sees a picture in perfect proportion projected along side of it.

I would recommend that the screen be tilted as much as it can be tilted without the fact being plainly discernible to the audience, but distortion is preferable to excessive tilting of the screen. But ABOVE ALL THINGS I WOULD MOST EARNESTLY RECOMMEND TO THOSE CONTEMPLATING THE ERECTION OF A MOTION PICTURE THEATER THAT THE ARCHITECT BE COMPELLED TO CALL INTO CONSULTATION A RELIABLE, COMPETENT PROJECTION ENGINEER, to the end that beautiful houses, such as this house evidently will be, be not handicapped by conditions which render perfect projection utterly impossible.

From Australia.

F. W. Luttgens, Melbourne, Australia, writes:

> Enclosed find money order for latest edition of the Handbook. I heard at one yesterday and am sending for it today. I think it [illegible] some book. I am working at a exhibition show here in Melbourne, six-hour shift, taking current from a motor generator [illegible] supplying 70 amperes at 80 volts. We only use one projector, a Gaumont, which works twelve hours per day. We have a 60-foot throw, and a 19-foot picture. The picture business is booming at the present time. "The Battle Cry of Peace" is being screened. I saw it, and it is a great photoplay. Am writing again shortly to Mike Langely, who is [illegible] the Triangle House. He was the first to show me the Handbook, and believe me, I lost no time in sending for one of my own.

The Handbook has gone forward. The letter is of interest as showing two things: first, the high D. C. amperage used; second, the large picture they project in Australia. I have been told that they run to extremes in this particular respect, projecting even as high as a 22-foot picture. I would be glad to have a letter from Luttgens, or any other Australia operator, for that matter, giving us the dope on things pertaining to projection in the Land of the Kangaroo.

Coating Plaster Screens.

G. S. Kinzer, Wayland, Ky., asks:

> What is the best material to use on plastered wall for picture screen? I have been using the white wall, and am now trying an aluminum paint. It seems to soften the picture and improve it considerably.

If you use aluminum you are more than likely to get a hazy effect, unless you use aluminum powder very carefully pounced on it, and I don't believe you can make a good job of it. The making of a metallic projection surface is in itself a trade which requires long study and considerable practice. For myself, I would simply calcimine the plaster, using one of the patent calcimines, such as muralite or alabastine, possibly adding just a little ultra-marine blue to it. I would then surround the screen with a border of flat black not less than two feet wide, using ordinary lamp black mixed one-third boiled linseed oil and two-thirds turpentine, applying the same directly to the plaster. Project the white light to the screen and draw a line one inch inside the light all around, and then paint black right up to that line. This will give you a very excellent picture, though it will require somewhat more amperage to secure equal brilliancy than will a metallic surface screen.

New Educationals

An Industrial, A Sanitary Lesson and Four Travel Pictures of Interest.

"Prunes."

REEL LIFE NO. 31 contains as its opening subject a nicely illustrated treatise on the growth and preparation of the prune for the market. Views of beautiful blossom covered orchards with explanatory notes regarding the treatment of the trees and the soil upon which they are grown, are followed by scenes showing the picking of the fruit, and the irrigation of the orchards for the purpose starting the sap in the trees. Then comes the dipping of the fruit in alkaline water to crack the skin, after which the prunes are laid out on trays in the sun to dry. Finally they are steamed and carefully packed in layers in boxes for shipping.

"The Diary of a Murderer."

While this subject is a little late in the season to be of practical use, still it is none the less important in the sanitary information it provides. The "murderer" referred to is the common house fly, and the pages from the diary of this "murderer" are cleverly presented by Harry Palmer in an animated cartoon, with unusually effective subtitles. First we see the fly emerging from a night in the garbage barrel, after which he breakfasts from a nearby fruit stand. He then takes a drink from a pool in the gutter, and flies through a window of a nice home to where a nice dinner is set. He also takes a sip from an open milk bottle, and after worrying a half starved cat which is gorging itself on a piece of decayed meat, finds a sweet baby asleep, and kisses it on cheeks, and eyes and mouth. A few days later it passes the door of the same house and sees a while streamer hanging to it.

This is a wonderfully effective bit of cartoon work, and appears also in Reel Life No. 31.

"The New River, West Virginia."

The scenes in the Appalachian mountains presented in this picture which constitutes No. 65 of the "See America First" series, are very beautiful. Various mountain towns are shown including Hinton, Belfourt and Thurmond. Other scenes of unusual beauty are found in the vicinity of Sandstone Falls and the New River Canyon.

"Through Venice in a Gondola."

This nicely illustrated subject appears in No. 5 of the "Mutual Tours Around the World," and first shows the unique location of Venice on its islands and lagoons on the northwestern shores of the Adriatic. We are then taken on a delightful trip along the Grand Canal as it runs in the shape of the letter S through the city, and some of the many smaller canals that at intervals cross the Grand Canal. Various points of interest in Venice are visited, among them the Piazetta, ancient columns placed in Venice about 1126 A. D., the Cathedral Santa Maria della Salute, the quays of Venice, the solid marble Bridge of the Rialto, which for centuries was the only bridge across the Grand Canal and the Isle of the Dead, a burial place of great beauty.

"Jersey, the Largest of the Channel Islands."

This is another subject of interest which appears in the fifth issue of the "Mutual Tours Around the World." After crossing from St. Malo, France, we visit the town of St. Helier and its harbor, after which we are taken to the various points of interest on the island, including Dog's Hole, the Devil's Jump, the Plemont Grottoes, the Castle of Mont Orguil, believed to be an old Roman stronghold, and Elizabeth Castle, where many historic events in the past took place.

"Life in Senegal."

In No. 5 of the "Mutual Tours Around the World" appears also the above-named subject which gives us an excellent idea of the inhabitants of Senegal, their daily life and occupations. We see them occupied in fishing, with close views of the pulling in of the nets with their load of fish. We also see them pounding millet with huge tall sticks, and children performing an apparently difficult dance in the streets. A celebration when the Governor General comes on a visit of inspection to Dakar, Senegal's seaport and capital, is also interesting.

Educational Color Films

Charles Urban About to Enter Market with an Extensive Educational Library.

IT IS more or less generally known that Charles Urban has been active in the moving picture field for the past eighteen to twenty years, that he was instrumental in gathering together a larger number of valuable educational films than any other man in the business, and also that in a period of that time he was associated with the development of a remarkable color process. In fact who of us can forget with what astonishment and admiration we viewed the first exhibitions of Urban colorfilms. And now at a time when the market seems best prepared to handle the educational benefits of the moving picture camera, Mr. Urban is bringing to America more than a million feet of the Urban colorfilm in addition to a library of some eight thousand educational negatives made after the usual photographic methods, to which others will be added as occasion demands.

Mr. Urban's determination to transfer his business interests from Europe to America was born of the conditions prevailing abroad since the commencement of the present war. And while his plans are not yet definitely outlined, February of the coming year is expected to witness the first release of the Urban educationals through syndicated organizations throughout the country.

This library of educational films has been gathered together at an outlay of in the neighborhood of $450,000, including the employment of scientists, naturalists, and others whose services were utilized in their making. A careful survey of these subjects, which, by the way, actually exist in negative, has been made by Mr. Urban, after which they have been reedited and sub-titled in entertaining and popular style.

Mr. Urban's determination to enter into an enterprise of substantial dimensions in an issue of the business that has received little encouragement, is backed not only by a belief that the time is ripe for such an undertaking, but by a sentiment highly complimentary to the American people. This sentiment embodies the idea that of all the peoples of the world the American public is most anxious for knowledge, and ready to absorb by means of the entertaining method which the screen provides, all the useful knowledge that can be supplied to them. He is firm in his belief that the failure of the educational film as a commercial asset has been largely due to the stupidity of exhibitors and exchangemen, who, in supplying programs according to their own ideas, have failed to reflect public taste, thereby leading the manufacturer to believe that the demand for the educational film was too slight to deserve attention. Mr. Urban also believes that a solvent of the present Sunday show question might be found in the reservation of Sunday for high class educational programs.

While in the preparation of this library of films, or in its proposed presentation in America, little inspiration has been gained from the idea of supplying schools, still, a glance over the vast and varied list of films laid before the writer for inspection revealed the fact that, should the occasion arise when the moving picture film shall be put in practical use in the class room, the Urban library will be in a position to thoroughly cover more than one important subject.

EDUCATIONAL POINTERS.

It is anticipated by school authorities that teaching by pictures will increase the attendance at high schools. One of the great difficulties of the present time is the fact that a large proportion of young people leave school upon graduating from the grammar grade in spite of all efforts to keep them for the higher courses. There are many schools in which the attendance in the grammar grade may reach one thousand, while the high school seldom reaches one hundred, less than ten per cent. of these continue to graduation. Education by picture is estimated to decrease the required time for many courses besides increasing the interest and making more attractive the school course, which also may be broadened with vocational studies; a series of studies much required in the high school and which until the coming of the picture course was deemed impossible. The proportion of these conditions keep about the same in all schools, no matter what size they may be, and boards of education see here, as in many other circumstances, where the outlay for a picture equipment will more than repay for itself in increased scholars, with the resultant increase of financial support. The benefit to the scholars will be of untold value and importance, how to induce the continued attendance at school from the fourteenth to the eighteenth years has always been a profound problem in which the lack of a solution has been equally injurious to the school as to the scholar, should it be proved that the educational courses capable of development by the moving pictures have solved the problem—as now seems likely—that which is of supreme importance to all concerned will result. To many this matter is already under consideration, to those to whom it has not yet come, may it be hoped that this notice of so important a matter may cause a wide knowledge and a consequently wider interest; will not all the readers of this important fact pass the substance of it on to those to whom it is a matter of profound interest and so benefit all concerned.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

A letter from Mr. Warren H. Booker, C. E., Chief of Bureau of the North Carolina State Board of Health, tells how in that State they have been carrying on an Educational Health Work by means of moving pictures in all the rural districts. A large delivery truck equipped with an electric generator set, and a Power's Road Equipment proved equal to the occasion. Mr. Booker is now seeking more "Health Films" and will be glad to hear from anyone who can aid him in this admirable propaganda, his address is Raleigh, N. C. This is a most commendable work which other States may well follow.

A large Rochester clothing manufacturing establishment is having motion pictures of the whole establishment is preparation for the next Spring trade. In addition to the general views, "close ups" were taken to show in detail the method of making hand-padded coat fronts, coat collars, fitting the sleeve, button-hole, pocket making etc. Experts from Chicago with lighting and camera equipment made a thorough series of pictures from the cloth in the bolt to the shipping of the finished garments. Not only will these pictures be used for trade purposes whereby the kinematograph becomes a salesman, but they will be used for educational purposes by the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C.

The last "Topical" centers its interest upon the late Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, the aged Monarch is seen walking in a manner that in no way indicates any feebleness or evidence of his great age; a picture of his successor, Charles First, as he appeared on the battlefield is also shown.

The Yale-Harvard and the Army and Navy football games are screened most successfully, in the one the great Stadium with upwards of 70,000 people is perhaps the greatest assemblage of people ever pictured at one time; the points of the game are now given with more intelligence, evidently the camera men know what the fans want and are triyng to give it to them.

The "Living Book of Nature" this week deals with the American deer, the young of the species are given special attention concerning their growth and development. The elk, graceful and majestic, is always admired, and the animals photographed must certainly be among the best possible specimens to be found.

Another series of war pictures show the British and Canadian troops in the trenches at the very front of the fight, at times being only seventy feet from the enemies first line of trenches. This series is an advance on others in that it shows closer details of work in the fighting lines. The trenches are inches deep in water, the sides often caving in from the heavy rains so that it is easy to appreciate the great difficulties and hardships which all have to undergo. The changing of troops is seen, those going into the thick of the fight passing those coming out for a well earned rest. Methods of advance are seen at close range, bombs are discharged a little ahead of the Infantry, which create clouds of non-poisonous smoke under protection of which the men rush forward unseen; the repetition of this method is their only means of making quick and unseen advances. The use of machine guns from the trenches in which they are fired, as also from the open, are clearly shown, thus, the battle is seen in actual progress at a safe and sane distance. A panorama of the enemy lines is also shown. W. H. J.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE.

Another chapter of the Living Book of Nature is published this week. The first part deals with the elephant for the purpose of showing the difference between the Indian and African specimens. The African species is distinguished by very large ears, a more corrugated trunk and the fact that both the males and the females have tusks. The Indian species has the smaller ears, the smoother trunk and the male alone develops the tusks. Thus instantly is this lesson in natural history so clearly taught as pictures from life of most worthy specimens are thrown upon the screen.

The rhinoceros is next studied. Like the elephant the Indian and African species follow similar characteristics. The Indian specimen with its one horn-like growth above the nose, its skin-like shields of armor an inch thick give a living fort-like appearance as its two-ton ponderous bulk moves with the ease of any other animal. The African representative is proud of his two-horn powers, as with the larger of the two, and the one nearest to the nose, he toys and plays with whatsoever comes in his way, and, if necessary, can demonstrate his strength by pulling up an iron stake sledge driven into the ground with comparative ease. As the larger of these latter species seems destined to become extinct it is well to have these living representatives filmed from life and so give to future generations a realization of that which the still picture can never give.

TOPICALLY TAUGHT.

Continuing the "Topically Taught" series it must be said that they are growing in interest and value. The latest additions are from the Bulgarian battle fields. It is probably correct to say that this is the first time we have had pictures of the Bulgars "somewhere in Europe"; of a distinct type we are able to see their equipment as they cross mountain roads, evidencing a rugged vigor peculiar to the Balkan States. The athletic and even the sporting world will be drawn to see the great football games which come at this season of the year.

Experience in photographing these field games is shown by the great improvement to be found both in distant and "close up" scenes, in that the generalities of the "Field" and the details of the "Game" are well depicted; no doubt many clubs will be able now to get pointers from these fuller pictures.

MARY PICKFORD'S MOTHER IN HOSPITAL.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of Mary Pickford, the famous star of motion pictures, has been successfully operated on at the Sloan Hospital, Fifty-ninth street and Tenth avenue. The operating surgeon was Dr. Edwin B. Cragen. On account of this illness and the nervous strain and suspense on Mary Pickford all studio work on her next picture, "The Pride of the Clan," was postponed until this week, so that the daughter could be with the mother throughout the operation. Mrs. Pickford is recovering rapidly, but will be confined to the hospital for several weeks.

The Exhibitors of Yonkers

By Hanford C. Judson

Suburban City on the Hudson, Near New York, Has Eleven Picture Houses—Some Fine Types of Show Men

THE picture house problems in Yonkers, New York, are not peculiar, but they are interesting. It is no longer true in Yonkers that any one who puts pictures on the screen can make money and yet the people there are willing to pay for pictures and are proving it. One will find there big houses getting good prices from good audiences and little five cent houses crowded to the last seat. Here is a little house struggling between three big neighbors with the skimpiest kind of audiences at five cents, and a block or two away, a house that by a good business arrangement is more than holding its own. Here is a neighborhood house as pretty as it can be and doing splendidly under management that has doubled its business in two months, and in the other direction across town a neighborhood house that, doing very well, could be turned into a fortune. In the city pictures are in competition with the best vaudeville combined with seven or eight reels of film, a half day's show at ten to twenty-five cents in the afternoon and ten to fifty cents at night. What other exhibitors know is known to these men. The city has about 90,000 inhabitants and is about fourteen miles from the City Hall, New York. On Broadway there's a sign up that tells one where New York ends and Yonkers begins. It costs ten cents to ride between the two city halls on the street cars, and if one uses the subway it takes an hour to make the trip. The exhibitor who makes good in Yonkers is a good showman.

The theater that should be mentioned first in writing up Yonkers picture activities is the Hamilton. It is a beautiful house on Main street close to the city's central square and seats 850. The other big theaters, Proctor's, with vaudeville, seats 2,250, and the Orpheum, a picture house, seats 1,500. The proprietor, A. E. Hamilton, is a believer in advertising; he uses weekly papers in the nearby villages as well as the city dailies, and mails to a large list his interesting four page folder describing the week's show. He also uses billboards. He is still a young man and one talking with him will find no lack of decision in him. He looks at his problems with open eyes and plainly knows what he is about. His present policy is to get the best pictures obtainable regardless of their pulling power and to add strong pulling features. He finds the money in long runs of big features and would use nothing else if he could get enough of them. He has run serials, but will take no more of them. He believes good music is needed and that solos are desirable as an added attraction. His present prices are ten and fifteen cents. There has been a long and distressing strike in the city and the people have got out of the habit of coming downtown at night. This is one of his present problems. If the patrons will only come down to the shopping district in the evening he can get them into the Hamilton.

Another leading exhibitor in the city is George Martin, and he is a gentleman whom it is good to meet. He is not a man whom problems will daunt either and, with two houses, the Riverdale, on Riverdale avenue, placed not far from the Hamilton and Proctors, and the Model, on Elm street, a more fortunately placed house, he is making distinctly good. I found a better than fair audience in the Riverdale and at the Model the S. O. R. was hard at work. His forte is the picture on the screen. It would do Richardson's heart good to see that projection. It is clear, soft, natural and as pleasant to watch as can be. He is an old Mirroroid screen man, so his good picture is not to be wondered at. The Riverdale seats 318 and the Model seats 322. The former caters to many transients; while the latter is a neighborhood house. The former is, of the two, the more doubtful, and Mr. Martin is on the job there himself. For the Model, he has James Mumblo, who has a pleasant smile and a courteous way that is pleasing. It is at this house where, more especially, the A No. 1 projection is found. I was glad of a chance to shake hands with Operator J. M. Hoan, a man who knows his business. The same shows are booked for both houses—Fox, Metro, Triangle, Bluebird and Mutual Masterpictures with Fox as the favorite.

On Getty Square, and just about midway between two big houses, the Hamilton and Proctor's, is a 450 seat house owned by M. Samuels. At 5 o'clock recently I found hardly a half dozen patrons in the house. The owner is somewhat discouraged and wants to sell. The ground rent on that site is high; but it is the best site in the whole city and I earnestly believe it could be made into a good paying proposition. It was at once clear to me as I entered that the place looked unattractive. It was poorly lighted—small theaters are apt to be—and seemed dingy and this impression was heightened by the poor ventilation. The ceiling is high enough but there is a restaurant on both sides of the Getty Square Theater and it will take some money to make good ventilation there—it can be made as good as any house in the city. Then the ceiling and the floor ought to be made rich in appearance. There should be a system of indirect lighting with fancy and pretty chandeliers. The lights ought to be turned on full blast between pictures and the beauty of the house made clear to its patrons, then people would take pleasure in dropping in. Music better than the average would help. Ten cents admission and real showmanship would make a go on Getty Square. Mr. Samuels told me that he really had too little time from his other business to attend to the show.

On Broadway, far down near the city limits is perhaps the prettiest house in Yonkers, the Broadway, owned by C. E. Coles, and under the direct management of H. J. Coles. It is wonderful how much a beautiful organ with its pipes grouped around a picture frame gives distinction to a theater and when the walls, the chairs, the floor and general decorations are in keeping, one finds a house like the Broadway. It has 475 seats and has increased its business 100 per cent. in two months. It is a neighborhood theater and mails out 500 programs each week, besides distributing 2,000 heralds. The organ has not been in long; but has already proved its value. It is almost needless to say that the organist is a true musician and that the music is a real attraction. In this house the audience isn't killed with pipe music. The instrument is an American Master organ and the piano attachment is used as much as any other part of it. The overture is advertised as a big attraction in itself.

On Riverdale avenue, five or six blocks south of the Riverdale Theater is the American, owned by A. Weiss and seating 300, using Triangle, Paramount and General. We talked with the young lady in charge; for the proprietor was out and found that the house is doing a fair business at five cents a seat.

In the upper part of the city, on Ashburton avenue, are two houses, the Empire and the St. Joseph. These are both five cent houses, they are about five blocks apart and cater to the neighborhood with few transients. The Empire is owned by A. Brown, has 350 seats, runs General, V. L. S. E., Fox and Pathe. Business is fair, three serials a week are being run but they don't take as formerly. "A Soldier's Oath" and "The Two Orphans," both Fox pictures, have made hits at the Empire recently. The other house, St. Joseph's, seems to be under the wing of the church close by and of the same name. The house seats 800 and had an excellent audience at five cents. Its two proprietors are young men, William Walker and J. F. McClean. Their patrons are mostly church people whom they know well enough to permit the question, "We haven't seen you around lately. What's the matter? Isn't the show good?" Such a house as this can go its own way content. The show is good; but it might be improved much by brightening and above all by a good screen. The curtain eats up too much of the light and the picture, though certainly well projected, it not bright enough at all times. This show house could make a fortune with an aggressive policy behind it. Yet these two exhibitors are fortunate. With a good screen they would do better.

The biggest picture theater in Yonkers is the Orpheum with 1,500 seats and owned by the Neighborhood Amusement Company of New York. It asks ten cents with twenty-five cent box seats and plays Paramount, Triangle Fox and many of the big features like "The Fall of a Nation." It is under the care of Thomas Lally, who greeted the World man affably and talked pleasantly for a few minutes then showed him the show. He finds business good. This house is not far from the Model and the Center and is in a neighborhood district which seems to patronize its three houses very well.

The Center is owned by Angelo Mescolo, who is helped by his son, Edward Mescolo, whom we also took pleasure in meeting. The Center seats 290 and charges five cents.

Serials are liked in this house and with a program of Universal Ruby and Mutual it is running at present or has recently run, "Peg o' the Ring," "Who Is Guilty?" and "Iron Claw."

The new Proctor's house in Yonkers is on lower Broadway and is of course a beauty outside and in. It is pretty solid competition for the smaller exhibitors to face. But one big house isn't all the business, not by considerable, and many of them are doing splendidly. Legitimate business used to be more than fair in Yonkers, but seems just at present, to be practically out, if reports of attendance are accurate.

Soriero Winning at Boston's Park

Manager of Hub's Old-Time House a Firm Believer in Advertising—and a Good Show.

ONE of the best types of the up-to-date, energetic director of a motion picture theater is Thomas D. Soriero, who for the past year has guided the affairs of the Park theater, in Washington street, Boston. A World man dropped in at the Park one afternoon recently to look at the show and incidentally to shake hands with the manager. It was 6 o'clock, just the hour that in most houses is "dead." He was surprised to find the orchestra practically filled—and that on a day that was average; it was not a holiday nor was there anything especialy doing in town. He found the ushers at their stations, no two together. There was attention aplenty, and it was of the alert, military sort.

Thomas D. Soriero.

Mr Soriero was found upstairs in his den at work over his advertising. The Park's manager is strong on the advertising question, and is an expert on the kind known as descriptive. In fact, he brought that striking kind of publicity into use for motion picture theaters in the Hub. He indicates in pencil the particular design he wants to use for his current ad, and this is worked out by an artist on one of the newspapers. Mr. Soriero makes the time in which to do his own publicity work, and the many minutes he has to devote to this each day may be estimated when it is kept in mind that he employs forty-two out-of-town newspapers in which to tell the people of New England what is going on at the Park. In the local Boston press one of his regulation announcements is a hundred lines deep and three coumns wide. The total expenditure for publicity for the Park averages a thousand dollars a week.

It came out in the course of the conversation that at the Park there is always some one definitely in charge of the house. If Mr. Soriero is not within the walls the assistant manager has knowledge of the fact, and is "on the job." While we were talking Thad Barrows, chief operator of the house, dropped in for a moment's consultation. Mr. Barrows is a fine type of an American. He will pass in any crowd for a progressive business man—a credit to his house and his craft.

Mr. Soriero is not a new-comer to the ranks of picture theater managers. Twelve years ago he opened the first picture theater in Providence. He has had wide experience in the amusement line, and at the present time has outside interests. When he took charge of the Park conditions were not satisfactory to the owners. Mr. Soriero started building. Today he is doing one of the largest businesses in New England. He is filling his house, and it contains 1,300 seats. The afternoon prices are 15 and 25 cents and in the evening 25 and 35. As a matter of fact, with the exception of 200 seats the maximum price governs. Service is first-run Metro and World Film. In the week of the World man's visit Mr. Soriero was installing the Drew comedies for a regular attraction.

The Park is showing continuously from 10 in the morning until 10.30 at night. The pictures are shown six days, on Sundays the program changing to one of a musical description. On these occasions opportunities are given ambitious singers, and frequently good voices are brought to the front. Mr. Soriero is keen on the musical side of his entertainment. The Park has an orchestra of ten pieces, under the competent leadership of William Krauth. The musicians play three hours in the afternoon and three in the evening.

When we strolled down into the auditorium one of the first things to strike the attention of the visitor was the projection. Inquiry developed the fact that in Boston the limit is 50 amperes. In back of the curtain the reason for the softness and the clarity was apparent. Running behind the screen in a semi-circle was a great blanket of canvas. At the top of the back were many lamps, the globes of which were tinted an amber color. Some of the rays from these struck across the front of the box containing the screen in such a manner as to neutralize, to kill, the white rays from the projection booth, as they hit the proscenium arch. The result was a soft amber hue upon the screen, plainly visible upon the deep blacks in the picture; to enhance the picture, to soften the effect upon the eye and sharply bring out the photographic qualities.

There are four shows at the Park each day, of four hours each. The pictures are supplemented by two singers. All of the program is timed to the minute. One of the factors making for success in the theater is the apportionment of authority—and of responsibility. The manager deals with his department heads and each of these in turn with his subordinates. Altogether the Park is a pleasant place to visit.

Pete Montebello "Bally-Hooing"

IN conjunction with the engagement of "The Masque of Life" at the La Salle theater in Chicago, the appearance as a "bally-hoo" of Pete Montebello, the remarkably trained chimpanzee who takes a prominent part in the action of the picture, is attracting considerable attention. The little "chimp," with arms entwined around the neck of his trainer and handler, is to be found in the lobby and foyer of the theater at each performance.

Rita Jolivet and Pete Montebello.

"The Masque of Life," which is being "state-righted" in this country by Signet Films, under the direction of J. L. Kempner, was brought from the other side some months ago, and after it had been prepared for an introduction to the American market through a four weeks' engagement at the Park theater, New York, it occurred to the American owners of the film that it would be interesting to exhibit to the public the little chimpanzee which had provided the big thrills in the picture. Pete Montebello and his trainer accordingly sailed from Genoa as per cabled instructions from New York City and arrived in time for the opening at the Park theater after a trip that had proved long and costly. During his stay in New York and Chicago the little simian has seemed perfectly at home and quite evidently delights in the attention he is attracting.

Rita Jolivet, who, with Hamilton Revelle, has contributed some novel pantomimic effects for the picture, has taken a great fancy to the little monkey actor and has been photographed with him in a score of poses.

UNITY OPENS BRANCH OFFICE IN SYRACUSE.

The Unity Service Corporation, under the direction of Messrs. Merrill & Harwell, have found it necessary to open a branch office in Syracuse, N. Y., to take care of the bookings on "The Yellow Menace" and the other features which this rapidly developing exchange are handling. At the present time the films are being distributed out of Rochester for the western part of the state and the establishment of the new office in Syracuse will give added facilities for distribution throughout the central and eastern part of New York.

Burton Rice Going Abroad

Creator of Bluebird Art Advertising Will Join the Ambulance Corps in France.

BURTON RICE is going away from here—but our readers will not be denied their weekly art treat because of the wanderlust that has stricken this clever craftsman with an irresistable impulse. Shortly after the Bluebird program was established there began to appear in the advertising section of the Moving Picture World some of the most beautiful examples of eccentric poster art that has ever been used in a trade or class newspaper.

Sometimes the name of Burton Rice appeared in an obscure corner and there were instances when the modest young man forgot altogether to attach his signature to the original. But always the advertising of Bluebird was distinctive, strikingly attractive and continually representative of the highest type of eccentric art. It has been said, and with small reason to contravert the statement, that Burton Rice has done more in his sketches for Bluebird advertising, to demonstrate the advance the moving picture industry has made than any one other individual craftsman in the publicity line.

Mr. Rice was commercially wise in selecting his forebears; for the fortune that was left him by the earlier Rices would be enough to send many less sensible and manly young chaps to the center of Times Square with his pockets ladened with coin-feed to scatter to the chickens—but Bluebird's artist is wise. He invested the fortune in such manner that he can only derive the income throughout his remaining days, and must work, like the most of us, to keep the wolf from the door.

Because of his choice of ancestors his distant cousin, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, British Ambassador to the United States, has supplied Mr. Rice with all sorts of passports and "open sesames" to foreign countries and on Nov. 25, the young artist sailed for Bordeaux, to later arrive in Paris for a season of study at the Ecole de Beaux Arts, under the famous masters not at present actively engaged in the world-war.

While studying Mr. Rice will send back war sketches to a syndicate of American newspapers and will, also supply Bluebird with their advertising inserts. He believes that the influence of the ancient art centers, and his closer commune with the newer ideas, will be noticed in the future style of his drawings for Bluebird. Later he will visit London to study his art, and also to carry on work for the British War Relief Association, of which he is a member.

Between the period of his studies in Paris and his visit to London, Mr. Rice will enter the war zone to drive an ambulance for the American Volunteer Ambulance Corps and will also see service in the American Aviation Corps. The picture presented herewith is a striking likeness of this fine type of American manhood, as he is seated in the Bluebird advertising office working out sketches for his beautiful inserts.

HORSLEY TO SELL BAYONNE PLANT.

With the idea of concentrating his attention upon one point, David Horsley has decided to center his picture-making activities upon his Los Angeles plant, and to that end has about completed arrangements to dispose of his Bayonne, N. J., studio and factory, according to an announcement coming from his Los Angeles office. Bayonne has always been his headquarters and his studio and factory there is as complete as may be found anywhere in the world. A transfer of the property will likely be made shortly.

Marie Empress

MARIE EMPRESS, who has the stellar role in "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," the December release of the B. S. Moss Picture Corporation, is the great grand niece of Edmund Keene, one of the most celebrated actors that ever trod the English-speaking stage. That she has inherited dramatic talent from her illustrious forbear is proved by the notable engagements she has filled on both sides of the Atlantic.

Miss Empress's real name is Marie Keene. She changed it when she first went on the stage, believing it would be well to strike out for herself since a big name is often a handicap to the beginner. At the suggestion of a friend, who called her "Little Empress," she adopted that as an unusual cognomen. Now, that she has arrived, Miss Empress wishes she had never switched.

Marie Empress.

Like most European artists, Miss Empress's experience before the public has been varied. She has done all sorts of roles in comedy, drama and opera. As a member of some of the most famous British theatrical organizations, she was a London favorite before coming to America under the auspices of Klaw and Erlanger. Since going into pictures, a short while ago, Miss Empress has appeared with Lew Fields in "Old Dutch." Under the banner of the Famous Players, she played in "When We were Twenty-one" and "The Firefly." Recently she was starred in an Equitable production entitled "Love's Crossroads."

Miss Empress possesses a striking personality. She can endure a role with sympathy. Emotional work is her specialty. She'd rather act than eat—which describes the height of artistic aptitude, if you know anything about player-folk.

BESSIE BARRISCALE CAST FOR PSYCHOLOGICAL DRAMA.

Bessie Barriscale will make her next appearance on the Triangle program in a psychological story by Leona Hutton, prepared for the screen by Lambert Hillyer. Miss Barriscale will have the difficult task of portraying a dual role, something she has never before done before in the films. After the rollicking, outdoor parts that she had in "A Corner in Colleens" and "Bawbs o' Blue Ridge" during the summer months, she doubtless believes that it will prove an interesting novelty to do some serious work with a dash of Ibsenism, instead of romping about in the costume of a care-free child of nature. Howard Hickman, Charles Gunn, J. Barney Sherry and Jerome Storm will appear in her support. The direction of the play will be in the hands of Raymond B. West.

WERNICK TO HANDLE STATE RIGHTS.

Richard Wernick, who, for the past eighteen months has been branch manager of the Fox Film Corporation at New Haven, Conn., has resigned from that company to enter the state right field. Mr. Wernick is of English birth and although only twenty-seven years of age, has had many years' experience in the motion picture field, both in the United States and England. He has several times crossed the Atlantic on buying and selling propositions, and for five years was president of the Manhattan Feature Film Company, with offices in New York and Syracuse. Mr. Wernick thus has a thorough knowledge of the commercial end of the motion picture business, which well qualifies him for his new enterprise.

Mr. Wernick is about to make some important affiliations in the business, the details of which will be announced later in these columns.

Mary Peck Ends Tour

Better Film Advocate Believes That Children Attending Adult Shows Is What Starts Demand for Censorship.

NOVEMBER 29 saw the close in Pittsburgh of the speaking tour of Mary Gray Peck, who has been working in the interests of the Better Film Movement in co-operation with the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and the National Committee on Films for Young People. Miss Peck has during the past three months covered important territory in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Kentucky, addressing meetings of officials and social bodies interested in the problem of the moving picture. She has emphasized everywhere the importance of adopting a constructive program such as that of special performances of selected films, as a means of combatting the idea of legalized censorship. From Pittsburgh Miss Peck went to her home in Cleveland, where she will remain for a short vacation, after which she will resume her work for another three months over a route that has not yet been decided on.

Mary Gray Peck.

The following report on her trip written by Miss Peck should be of interest to the industry at large:

My eight weeks' tour of the East Central States has demonstrated beyond doubt the contention of the National Board of Review that the great first cause of the repeated demands for state and federal censorship is that children all over the country are going to adult shows. Popular discontent with this state of affairs has reached a pitch and volume that command attention from the film industry. Exhibitor and exchange man realize that the young folks have got to be attended to. The really discerning exhibitor and exchange man realize a good deal more—namely, that in providing for these clamorous young spirits they are opening up for themselves a hitherto untouched audience the audience that up to now has gathered its robes about it and said grimly "I never go to moving pictures."

The movies aint be respecters of persons. Because they began with the roughnecks is no reason why they should not top off with the Puritans. The Puritans have just as much right to Puritan pictures as the "tired business man" has to a vampire picture. The Puritan is a human being, as well as a family head, and he is easily pleased. All he wants is a show guaranteed not to offend the sensibilities to too great an extent. He says he doesn't watch people bathing in real life and he doesn't want to do it in the theater.

Men and brethren of the film industry, we who would have friends must show ourselves friendly. The reason there is a hue and cry for censorship is because a very large and powerful element of the public, unaware of the efforts being made to present films entertaining to all, feels that it has been left out of the calculations of the moving picture industry. It is not that good, clean plays are not produced, but that the Puritans never know beforehand when they go into the theater whether the actors are going to offend the canons of good taste or not! That is what rouses their animosity. It turns their minds toward the young people.

The obvious remedy for this quite unnecessary mutual distrust and dislike is special performances on regular days of selected films about whose character there is no doubt. In providing a regular program, and arranging central exchange facilities, whereby all good features of this character are available to all theaters which would like to offer a young people's program you are providing a comfortable grave for the local censorship idea. And it is the only grave you ever will succeed in burying that idea in, despite the fact that legalized censorship where established has not made pictures any better in quality than those seen elsewhere. Cleveland, the hot-bed of censorship agitation, has found it necessary, notwithstanding local censorship in Ohio, in order to secure the desired results, to take up the better film movement in co-operation with the exhibitor.

There is a nation-wide desire for the young people's program. I have not found a single town where the leaders of the community were not eager for it and taking steps to secure it. Usually it is frankly regarded as the alternative of some form of censorship. Where an enlightened exhibitor is trying to meet the wishes of his community, friendly co-operation is established. There is mutual regard and understanding.

But in every instance where children's plays had been running for a year, there was the same complaint that the supply of films was exhausted. Some were out of print, some were not available on account of closed booking, some had been promised and something else substituted; some couldn't be located, etc.

It is nothing less than a calamity that at the very time the General Federation of Women's Clubs in co-operation with the National Committee on Better Films for Young People is organizing a nation wide movement in support of the standardized Young People's Program, there should be this paralysis of exchange facilities. It is analagous to the [illegible] on the railroads.

But in Chicago, Kansas City and St. Louis, I heard golden rumors of a better time coming. Women were organizing circuits of theaters, not only city circuits, but state circuits; film men were in cogitation over the booking problem—and, meantime, the children and the Puritans are waiting—not very patiently.

What kind of a board would it take in each community to wake the film men up to the adoption of a remedy, that lies in their own hands.

Cohan to Produce "Broadway Jones"

It Will Be the First Screen Offering of the Cohan Feature Film Company—Artcraft Will Release It.

GEORGE M. COHAN announces that the first production to be put out by the Cohan Feature Film Company will be his popular comedy, "Broadway Jones," written and produced by him at the Cohan theatre some time ago. Work on the screen production has already been commenced and it is promised that the picture will be ready for distribution sometime in February through Artcraft. Speaking of his decision to make "Broadway Jones" his initial offering for the screen.

"Everyone to whom I have told my decision to appear in 'Broadway Jones' for my debut in motion pictures has told me that the selection could not have been better," said Mr. Cohan while discussing his plans, "so I guess it's the right play at the right time. We are starting in to work immediately. Personally, I think 'Broadway Jones' ought to make a fine photoplay as there is a lot of action, and the scope of the story extends over a period of time just long enough to be told in the allotted space of time."

Evelyn Greeley

EVELYN GREELEY, who recently completed her first feature vehicle, "Sunshine and Tempest," which is so gratifyingly fulfilling all expectations—will finish her work in the second Dixie Film release, this week, and which will be a filmization of the famous sentimental ballad, "Just a Song at Twilight." The Dixie Film Corporation, with headquarters at Chicago and studio facilities in Florida, sponsored both productions.

Evelyn Greeley.

Evelyn Greeley—granddaughter of Horace Greeley and part heir to the great Greeley estate, sought film fame in a somewhat different manner. She came to New York over a year ago and accepted parts as an extra girl at the Equitable and World Film studio. Without making her identity known, she worked along at two and three dollars a day. She studied the various angles of screen work and would then go to see the finished product on the screen. She followed the director's moves at the studio, then watched and weighed the result on the screen. And within six months was selected as the featured player by the Dixie Film Corporation.

Within the past week Miss Greeley has been chosen by a well-known program head to play opposite one of the principal male stars. "Tempest and Sunshine" and "Just a Song at Twilight" will both reach the trade within the month.

SURATT BEGINS NEW FILM—HILLIARD IN CAST.

Valeska Suratt has begun work on her sixth production for William Fox. Kenean Buel is directing Miss Suratt's new photoplay. Harry Hilliard, who was the Romeo of William Fox's "Romeo and Juliet," and who has been in many other feature productions, has been selected to appear opposite Miss Suratt. Claire Whitney is also among the players. Alice Gale, long a stage favorite, is cast for an important role in the production. Miss Gale was in "Sins of Men," and was the nurse in "Romeo and Juliet."

Brady Finds Encouragement

Steadily Increasing Number of Theaters Showing Pictures for More Than One Day Is Great Help, World Film Manager Says.

IT IS a highly encouraging sign of the times," said William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, "that the list of theaters which run pictures for more than a single day is being constantly and steadily added to. For example, in several of these, 'Bought and Paid For' has been shown recently for a week at a time, with results so satisfactory that the full week policy has been permanently adopted.

"Previously several of our plays, like 'La Vie De Boheme,' 'Husband and Wife,' 'The Velvet Paw,' 'Friday the 13th,' 'The Gilded Cage' and others, had been put on for two and three days in theaters where one had been the inviolable rule, always with the most gratifying outcome. There is every indication that the day is coming when full week engagements will be the rule in the best theaters of all the large cities, and there will be at least an extension of time for good pictures in the smaller places.

"This will be of distinct advantage to the manufacturer and exhibitor alike. It will relieve the latter of the helter skelter rush of changing his bill daily and enable him to discriminate in his choice of pictures to an extent entirely impossible hitherto. Incidentally it will help to eliminate second and third rate productions for which the necessity for keeping theaters open under the present plan creates a market.

"The manufacturer of really good plays will benefit by the knowledge that his productions have a chance to reap the reward of merit. That is, if he produces a picture drama that the audiences appreciate, everybody will be able to see it in the knowledge that it is not going to be whisked into the theaters and out again before the public has time to find out what it is like.

"The objection that only very exceptional circumstances make it possible to run a meritorious picture more than one day will not hold water. In West Philadelphia, where no extraordinary conditions exist, the Belmont theater, operated by the Felt Brothers, is conducted at present on the full week principle. Going back to 'Bought and Paid For,' the play did a fine business there, and I understand that such is the rule, not the exception.

"The managers told our representative that their patrons were delighted with the system. They used to complain that before they could learn whether a picture was good, bad or indifferent, it was gone. At present the thing works out precisely the same as with a stage play—if the pictures make a hit the house is crowded all week. A failure goes the other way, of course, but the exhibitor can avoid failures with reasonable certainty by the exercise of deliberation and care in the selection of his material, not being in the eternal rush of changing his attraction every morning.

"It does seem to be no more than reasonable to suppose that if the Felt Brothers can make a week stand of West Philadelphia it can be done in all the cities of large size. At this moment, 'Bought and Paid For' (which is particularized because it happened to supply a current illustration) has been booked for all of next week at the Alhambra, Cincinnati, and a similar state of things is developing in a number of other places.

"Naturally it is very gratifying to have one of our photoplays in such demand, but far over and above this phase of the situation is the satisfaction of knowing that the production is doing powerful all-around missionary service in the cause of longer engagements for motion pictures."

GOVERNMENT CAMERAMAN.

Herbert T. Cowling, chief photographer for the U. S. Reclamation Service, spent a few days in New York last week and visited the office of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Cowling spent a good part of the past summer among the Pueblo and Papago Indians securing historical data. A part of the summer was also spent in the Sierra and Cascade Mountains, securing films showing the recreational uses of our national forests. These films will be used especially by the U. S. Forest Service to develop greater use of our national forests as public playgrounds. Altogether sixty-five thousand feet were secured, which will be assembled this winter by him in the laboratory at Washington, D. C. These films will be used by the Government lecturers only and at various expositions, where the Government may make exhibits. Mr. Cowling covered in all about thirty-seven thousand miles and will be busy in the laboratories until next summer.

Shift in Bluebird Titles

Several Release Dates Will Also be Changed to Meet Conditions.

SEVERAL changes, deemed advisable by Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., have been made in the titles and release dates of these attractive features for the weeks remaining to conclude the first year of the program. While the subjects previously announced will remain on the list, there have been switches of names and date that will be important to the exhibitor of Bluebirds.

Violet Mersereau's return to the program, after an absence of several months, will occur on Dec. 18 when "The Honor of Mary Blake" will be the title used for what had previously announced would be a feature to be called "The Greatest of These." Edwin Stevens directed Miss Mersereau in "The Honor of Mary Blake," a story of the stage and theatrical life.

Rupert Julian's screen version of the Dickens classic, "A Christmas Carol," was originally set for Dec. 18, but it will now be shown Dec. 25, as a feature of exact timeliness. "The Right to be Happy" will be used as the title for "A Christmas Carol" and Mr. Julian will be the star, with Francelia Billington, Agnes Vernon and Harry Carter featured. The screen version was made by E. J. Clawson for Mr. Julian's use as director of the production.

Cleo Madison in "Black Orchids," a Rex Ingram production, will be the New Year's week attraction, a production which the usually cautious Bluebird Publicity department declares to be one of the most photographically beautiful creations ever made for that program. Wedgewood Nowell, who was Miss Madison's leading man in "The Chalice of Sorrow," will be featured in the New Year's Bluebird.

There is likelihood that "The Shriveled Soul" will not remain the release title for Bluebird's Jan. 8 feature in which George Hernandez will be the star. Lynn Reynolds wrote and directed the story, and Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzalez, who have previously been the Reynolds stars, will be chief supporters of Mr. Hernandez in the new feature. Exhibitors who have learned to depend upon a Lynn Reynolds Bluebird as "sure fire" will be glad to have this successor to "The Girl of Lost Lake," "The Secret of the Swamp" and "The End of the Rainbow."

Dorothy Phillips, who is featured in the Bluebird current for Dec. 11, will reappear after just four weeks to be the star of Bluebird No. 52 on Jan. 15. "The Piper's Price" will be the title and Joseph De Grasse will direct Miss Phillips in Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's story.

Maud George, who has won favor as Bluebird's principal adventuress, will have a role of importance, and Wm. Stowell, Lon Chaney and Clara Du Brey will also be prominent in the supporting company.

"The Eagle's Wings," a Bluebird special, released independent of the program, gets under way Dec. 4, distributed along State right lines by Bluebird branches throughout the country. This is Rufus Steele's industrial preparedness feature, created to arouse public interest in the Government's plan to interest the captains of industry in the work of aiding Uncle Sam's Army and Navy in time of sudden stress or unexpected attack. Scenes taken in munition plants now busy on European war orders are used to illustrate what can be done along these lines, in mills and factories originally built for peaceful pursuits.

"INTOLERANCE" IN AUSTRALIA.

On Wednesday, November 29, Albert Grey, who first had charge of "The Birth of a Nation" engagements in England, sailed for Australia, to arrange, in connection with the J. E. Williamson management, for the presentation of "Intolerance" throughout the Antipodes. As now scheduled, Mr. Griffith's latest spectacle will open in Sidney about the first week of the new year.

THIS IS GOING SOME.

Just as an evidence of the flying start that Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay has obtained, the New York Exchange, under management of W. E. Raynor, calls attention to the fact that on Wednesday, Nov. 29th, his office records show that he had supplied 250 theaters in his territory with special holiday programs for Thanksgiving Day.

IRVING CUMMINGS JOINS FOX.

Irving Cummings, hero of dozens of stage and photoplay productions, is now a member of the William Fox forces. Motion picture fans will remember his fine work in "A Diamond from the Sky." Mr. Cummings will play in the new feature which Virginia Pearson begins this week. Walter Law is in the cast also.

Reichenbach Becomes Free Lance

Opens Offices in Mecca Building, New York—Made Good Record as Publicity Director for Several Concerns.

HARRY L. REICHENBACH, perhaps one of the best known publicity promoters has opened a general exploitation office at 1600 Broadway, and will give his attention in the future to the publicizing of various individuals and corporations.

Among the first contracts signed by Mr. Reichenbach after opening his office, was with the World Film Corporation, for which he will syndicate a series of highly interesting articles in four hundred newspapers.

Harry Reichenbach's work with the Jessy L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Motion Pictures Corporation, Broadway, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, and the World Film, firmly established him as a successful publicity agent, and his present work will give him a wider latitude, a greater opportunity, because of the diversity of his subjects, and because, as he says, he will be foot free to use his energies as he sees fit. Big things can be looked for from him.

His first film affiliations will be the handling of a big serial, a special release from one of the big program concerns, and the exploitation of the products of one of the big state rights producers. The advertising and exploitation of these enterprises will be under the personal control of Mr. Reichenbach.

Some of Harry Reichenbach's most notable achievements in the film field include the exploitation of the Lasky products during the first fourteen months of that concern's existence. His work was so generally attractive as to elicit a cable message from Mr. Goldfish, who was in Europe in the interests of the concern.

In the handling of Bosworth's "Hypocrites," Frank W. Garbutt, head of that concern, wired him from Los Angeles, saying [illegible] upon the success of "Hypocrites." "Mr. Sherry wired me giving all credit to you for its triumph."

A huge banner stretched across Broadway announcing "Hypocrites" at the New York Theatre, attracted widespread attention, and in his handling of the Metro products his sensational exploitation of that concern, and his remarkable accomplishments at San Francisco during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, when he pulled a "Bushman Day," brought him more laurels.

At Chicago he secured fifty-five columns of reading matter for William A. Brady and Alice Brady, and when he left the World Film Corporation, he was the recipient of a magnificent gold desk set, a token of the esteem in which the officers of that company held him.

Mr. Reichenbach is a firm believer in advertising, and in his announcement states that he will not handle the affairs of any concern which does not believe in display space as well as text matter.

Arthur H. Battey, who was associated with Mr. Reichenbach in the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and World Film offices, will be with him again as office manager of the new enterprise.

LASKY PLAYERS FORM NOVEL ORGANIZATION.

The [illegible] stage [illegible] are now at work in the Lasky studios [illegible] have formed a [illegible] organization—the first of its kind—called the Lasky Players. The object of the organization is the occasional presentation of one act plays and scenes from established dramas for charitable purposes.

The first performance of the new organization was given on December 8, at the Glendale Elks Lodge, the services of the Players having been secured through director George Melford, who is a member of the Lodge. The celebrated rehearsal scenes from Sheridan's "The Critic" were chosen as the vehicle of the Players' debut. Following the performance of "The Critic" for the Glendale Lodge, the organization will appear for the benefit of the Hollywood Company of Coast Artillery Federal Reserve, most of the members of which belong to the Lasky organization, and will repeat "The Critic" during the holidays. They will also appear in another one act play for the benefit of the Hollywood Studio Club, a social and philanthropic organization composed of the young girls of the different motion picture studios.

The leading factors in the movement for the formation of [illegible] Lasky Players are Mary [illegible] E. [illegible] Frank Reicher, Theodore Roberts, Tully Marshall and Fannie Ward. [illegible] Horace B. Carpenter, James Neill, Mae Murray, Jane Wolff, Anita King, Florence Smythe, Edward J. Le Saint, George Melford, [illegible] Reid, [illegible] Fox, [illegible] Leonard and Sam De Val.

Essanay Has Small Fire

Crossed Wires Caused Blaze in Warehouse—Extinguished at Small Loss.

ESSANAY'S thorough system of fire protection saved the big Chicago plant from utter destruction, perhaps, or at least severe loss on December 4 when crossed wires caused a blaze in one of the smaller film storage warehouses. As it stands, the loss consisted only of ten million feet of old film.

The fire was discovered just as the plant was closing for the day at 5 o'clock. The extensive system of fire bells and telephones immediately warned the several hundred employes and the buildings were cleared. The fire fighting crew, organized among the employes, in one minute had connected up all factory hose and had it playing on the blaze which at times shot up to the height of one hundred feet.

The bulk of the apparatus was centered about the laboratory and a large crew, trained in their duties, stood ready to save this building at all costs. When the city fire fighters arrived they speedily subdued the blaze, saving the other buildings from hardly being scorched.

It was the first test of Essanay's volunteer fire crew and they demonstrated their ability admirably. Their fire fighting was done under the direction of Robert E. Spoor, technical superintendent, who lost his prized hunting dog in the blaze.

During the fire Max Linder, the Essanay comedian, who had just completed his first work in the studio, was being interviewed in his dressing room by newspaper representatives. His first concern was for his picture, and he hurried his valet out of the plant with the clothes which had already registered in scenes and then calmly continued his interview.

Helen Ware

MISS HELEN WARE, the well known star, enacts the leading feminine role in the Selig production, "The Garden of Allah," soon to be released. In a recent interview, Miss Ware said: "I have always been an ardent admirer of Robert Hichens' wonderful character, 'Domini Enfilden,' and I was pleased with the opportunity offered by Mr. Selig to visualize her on the screen. There are many opportunities for emotional work during the action of the absorbing story."

Helen Ware.

Those who have been fortunate enough to be present at private showings of "The Garden of Allah" are loud in their praises of Miss Ware's work. In her scenes with Tom Santschi, who enacts the role of "Boris Androvsky," she is particularly appealing and reaches artistic heights rarely attained by motion picture actresses.

"The Garden of Allah," screened by the Selig Company in ten spectacular reels, will be one of the feature films of the near future. Colin Campbell has pronounced the drama as his best and most artistic effort. Mr. Selig, it is stated, has given more of his personal attention to the artistic details of "The Garden of Allah" than he has given to any of the other feature films released under the Diamond S trade mark.

In the latest Selig feature drama, thousands of men and women are employed besides caravans of camels, Arabian horses, etc. Many beautiful scenes of Oriental cities are presented. The photography is said to be all that could be desired, and the story moves swiftly and intensely to an unusual and gripping conclusion.

It is only that which is false and misleading, and is intended to be so that cannot stand the light of day. Keep it dark, "boys."

"King Lear"

Five-Reel Version of the Shakespearian Tragedy Produced by Thanhouser with Frederick Warde as the Aged Monarch a Well Acted and Scenically Effective Screenplay.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

THE latest Shakespearian drama prepared for screen exhibition is a five-reel version of "King Lear," made by the Thanhouser Company, with Frederick Warde as the ruler of ancient Britain. While it is unquestioned that the Bard of Avon was a much greater poet than dramatist, it is also obvious that, in reviewing a screen version of one of his works, the writer must confine his criticism almost exclusively to the achievement of Shakespeare the playwright, since the actors on the screen are forced to limit themselves to "dumb show" and may not give utterance to his wonderful lines. The brief quotations that serve as subtitles to the different scenes, while necessary to an understanding of the play, give but slight indication of the beauty, strength and profound philosophy of the poet's lines in their entirety.

Scene from "King Lear" (Thanhouser).

The plot of "King Lear," when stripped of its wealth of marvelous verse, is a sordid story in which evil passion in many different forms is contrasted with the affection of the old king for his daughter, Cordelia, and her love for him. It is also worthy of note that, practically, the only physically revolting scene in all Shakespeare is found in this play—the scene where Gloster's eyes are torn out—a scene, by the way, that is handled with becoming restraint in the version under discussion.

In view of the conditions imposed upon the producer and his associates, it is only just to them to regard their efforts in but one light, to what degree have they succeeded in taking the bare plot of "King Lear" and clothing it with some of the poetry of thought and feeling that was given it by its creator. All of the outward accessories required by the undertaking have been provided. Correct costuming, impressive settings, an adequate cast of principals, well trained supernumeraries and a thorough knowledge of the traditional "business" of the scenes are all in evidence. It remains for the art of the actor —the technic of the silent drama—to make the poetry of the play speak to the heart of the spectator. This it does, to a praiseworthy degree.

Aided by a clear and concise scenario, Mr. Warde and his fellow players throw many pictures upon the screen by which the soul of the tragedy, as well as its physical action, finds expression. In this day and age when utility is the watchword and sudden riches the goal of man, and Shakespeare is seldom read and less seldom acted, the Thanhouser version is an achievement to be thankful for; it may serve as a lamp to many who would otherwise never have their paths cheered and made radiant by the genius of the great Elizabethan. If such an experience leads them to a study of the poet's works, the picture will have vindicated its creation, upon this ground alone. To the student of Shakespeare and those familiar with Lear on the spoken stage, the screen version offers a novel and interesting means of visualizing the poignant scenes of the greatest of human tragedies.

Frederick Warde is not new to the character of Lear. He has often played it on the stage, and is fitted by temperament and training for its impersonation. He has the grand manner necessary to the aged monarch, and indicates to the life "the choleric old king, jealous of his dignity, brooking no insult, rash and impetuous, blind to everything but momentary feeling, and heedless of all results until, as Schlegel observes, "all that remains to him is the capability of loving and suffering beyond measure." Ernest Warde, who directed the play, is excellent as the fool, and the other principals of this goodly company are J. H. Gilmour, Hector Dion, Edwin Stanley, Wayne Arey, Charles Brooks, Boyd Marshall, Robt. Whitter, Lorraine Nuling, Ina Hammer, and Edith Diestal. The picture is released on the Pathe program.

"The Rise of Susan"

Clara Kimball Young in a Five-Reel Peerless Photoplay With a Strong Melodramatic Finish—Released by the World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE RISE OF SUSAN," the five-reel Peerless photoplay starring Clara Kimball Young, is compounded of several grades of material. In following the career of a beautiful young working girl who is persuaded to pass herself off as a countess, the picture reveals phases of the social world that are amusing, takes an unexpected plunge into the realms of melodrama, and embraces a series of incidents that demand strenuous acting on the part of the star and several members of the cast.

The meteoric flight of the shopgirl is occasioned by the failure of a real countess to appear at a reception given by a social climber. The hostess, a woman of resources, gets Susan to assume the titled lady's name. The inevitable follows. A wealthy young chap falls in love with the pseudo countess, and the ensuing complications include a dramatic scene at the altar, an attempt at murder, and the suicide of the woman who stands between Susan and the hero of the story.

Several of the situations will not square with a high idea of personal conduct on the part of the hero and the heroine. Susan's act in allowing young Gordon to court her under the delusion that he is to marry a lady of noble birth, and Gordon's calm acceptance of Mrs. Luckett's advice not to see Susan and demand an explanation when she deserts him just as the wedding ceremony is about to begin, lower the tone of the drama, but have decided effect in giving it varied action and theatric vigor.

Scene from "The Rise of Susan" (World).

Those who relish a middle grade screenplay of fair quality will find "The Rise of Susan" to their taste. It has been lavishly and artistically produced under the direction of S. E. V. Taylor, and the acting by Clara Kimball Young, Jenny Dickerson, Warner Oland, Marguerite Skirwin and Eugene O'Brien brings out all the dramatic possibilities of the story.

The plot of the comedy, what there is of it, concerns the unborn present of the Willie Loosem in whose family a box of envied treasure had remained for centuries, by Count de Strychnine, a direct descendant of arch enemies of the Loosem family. The plan of the count to destroy Willie Loosem and his sweetheart by means of a bomb which was to be exploded at six o'clock goes awry, and the count and his associates become the victims instead. Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns, and Eddie Barrie constitute the remainder of the cast. A few eliminations including a couple of statues which are used in rather a suggestive manner would improve the picture.

"His Model Wife."

There is a distinct objection to this comedy as an offering before refined audiences, because of the fact that too much is made of a model posing in the nude. At least twice this feminine model appears in nude profile, standing erect; another couple of times she appears lying on her face on a couch, still nude; a third time a quick flash of a portion of her back and limbs as she lies on the couch as seen through the keyhole by a couple of men, forms a disgusting closeup. A painting of the nude woman, which even though it may be exceedingly artistic, becomes suggestive in its use in the comedy, is made much of. The plot of the comedy concerns the mistake made by a husband, misled by a pillar of the church, in believing that his wife is posing for an artist.

"Out for the Coin."

The third of these comedies is one that will win considerable laughter from the average audience. It is of a purely farce comedy style, and shows how a hypocrite, and manufacturer of counterfeit bills, is caught in his own trap. In threatening to foreclose a mortgage which he holds over the Helpusout Junk Co., circumstances so arrange themselves that the manager of the company becomes the possessor of a multitude of these bills, some of which he joyfully hands to his persecutor. A detective happens nearby to arrest the counterfeiter, and the Helpusout Junk Co. continues on its way rejoicing.

TO begin with, "The Challenge" has no cause to blush for having been created. The Edward Childs Carpenter stageplay provides the material for a live, picturesque and sufficiently novel scenario, and the Astra Company has furnished the proper grade of actors and a becoming scenic environment for its locations. Starting in the East, it develops a story of modern life that is vital, quick in action and teaches the fine moral that no man need give up the fight for an honorable career because he has committed one fault and worn the stripes of a prison. Shifting to the West and giving glimpses of life on a ranch and of the wonders of engineering that are being accomplished in the waste places of this land of the free and home of the middleman, it unfolds a love interest such as all self-respecting dramas should insist upon owning. The fact that the heroine wears "chaps" and sports a six-shooter doesn't interfere in the slightest when the right man comes along. shot or two at him from her revolver, but, when she does realize his importance, she stows her gun and puts her arms around his neck, like any other sensible little woman.

We are often asked by the stage and the screen to believe that a pair of leather breeches or other styles of male garments can disguise a woman's sex. This is often open to question; but one thing we are certain of—such articles haven't the slightest power to change her womanly feelings. Helene Chadwick, who plays the heroine that wears the "chaps" in "The Challenge," indicates this very clearly, and, although she dons a ballgown for a brief spell and also appears in a smart tailor-made suit, the writer is positive that when the young Easterner first saw her in her unconventional rig he was harder hit than if she had been wearing a creation from a Fifth Avenue shop. An interesting fact in connection with Miss Helene Chadwick is the statement made by the Pathe people that she has never before acted for the screen or the spoken stage. Nature has been kind to her in many ways. She has charm of person, intelligence, great natural gifts, and succeeds in completely concealing the fact that she is a beginner, with her foot on the first rung of the ladder. Charles Rotthold and Montagu Love have parts in the drama that call for exceptional ability; they satisfy the demand.

Mention should again be made to the Western scenes. They are all well chosen and many of them are of picturesque beauty.

"The Eyes That Hold."

THIS episode, which is unusually thrilling, encompasses an attempt on the part of the Vampires to rob an American who has stolen a large amount of money from a bank in which he had been cashier. An interesting part of the episode is the illustration of the story of his grandfather read by the grand vampire to the guests of the hotel, while Irma Vep goes above to execute the robbery. This story brings into play three vicious bulls, which pursue a horseman, who shoots the first two, and kills the third with his sword. Following this the horse lurches backward, throwing his master, all of which makes rather a remarkable spectacle. Moreno, the bandit, interfering with the plans of the vampires, captures Irma Vep and places a hypnotized girl as a substitute. Moreno also hypnotizes Irma Vep, bringing as the climax of this episode the shooting of the grand vampire as he enters the room to pay a ransom for the return of his most valuable helper.

"Satanas."

The sixth episode introduces the new head of the vampires, Satanas. It also introduces an interesting situation where Moreno falls in love with his captive, Irma Vep. The chief spectacle of this episode occurs when Satanas with his wonderful pneumatic cannon destroys the cafe where Morena and Irma Vep are dining. Normandin, the comedy character of the serial, has a narrow escape from death by a group of vampires, and Moreno, under threat of death if he refuses, joins the vampire band.

"War As It Really Is"

Remarkable Pictures Taken by Captain Donald C. Thompson on the Front Line in France.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE impression gained from a private exhibition of the seven thousand feet of war films taken on the French front line by Captain Donald C. Thompson in co-operation with Leslie's Weekly, and which are being presented as a states rights proposition by Edwin Bower Hesser, is that they are equal if not superio. to any that have thus far been shown.

These pictures, which have been subtitled with care and efficiency, are thoroughly explanatory of existing conditions, and give an excellent general idea not alone of what war really means, but of the terrible efficiency of modern methods of warfare. Opening with an animated picture of Captain Thompson with the steel helmet and gas mask which he used while photographing these films, we pass on to the land and sea base of the Allies at Salonica. Here we see a hydroplane released from its moorings in its armored home, dropped by a pulley line to the sea, and started on its ascent of several thousand feet above the city and harbor of Salonica. Here we learn as from actual experience how difficult it must be to make a successful drop of a bomb on any given object from an aeroplane, especially if the object is also in motion.

While it is impossible for want of space to enumerate the many interesting sights which 300 scenes present, we will endeavor to give an idea of the most startling portion of the picture. At Verdun we learn what the ramparts eighty feet thick must have meant to the city in time of bombardment. Some scenes from the great Somme offensive are shown, and also the deadly work of the French 75 in action, with scenes of desolation and terrible havoc, deserted German trenches, and weatherbeaten heaps of dead. One of the most striking scenes of the picture is contained in a German surrender, showing the anxious survivors running, hands up, to the French trenches, crying "Kamerad! Kamerad!" What is termed the steel wall of France, consisting of 50,000 troops of French soldiers with fixed bayonets, reviewing before entering the front line, is an impressive sight. Other scenes show the Russian troops which landed at Marseilles, dressed in French uniform and ready for the front, and also the Algerian soldiery at the western front. A trip with Captain Thompson 10,000 feet in the clouds allows us to witness a battle between a French and a German aeroplane, when the German aeroplane is driven to earth. We learn by means of these pictures that France has 20,000 aeroplanes ready for action, also we are given several views of the armored river boats which have been brought into service on the Yser River. Heavy guns in action, and fighting in the trenches at a distance apart of only twenty yards are thrilling spectacles. Moving fortresses in the shape of armored trains, showing the rapidity with which the guns can be loaded and placed in action, German prisoners being escorted to the rear, where they are relieved of their buttons as a precaution against their running away, vast armies of ammunition automobiles on transport roads under shell fire, are also among the many interesting sights. The closing scenes of the film consist of views taken at the vocational schools of France, where crippled soldiers are taught various means of making a livelihood.

These pictures are well photographed considering the difficulties attendant thereon, and present considerable information that has not been vouchsafed before concerning the war.

"Mixed Blood"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Tells Entertaining Story of Small Towns Along the Texas Border.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

FOUR reels of well-constructed border drama and then a final one which overshoots the mark and becomes unduly gruesome. This is the impression created by "Mixed Blood" upon the average observer. The fault is one that may be remedied in a measure by judicious cutting, and if this is done it will leave the production as a whole a meritorious one. But the close as it stands is too tragic.

Scene from "Mixed Blood" (Universal).

Willard Mack, author of numerous successful plays, wrote the story, which was adapted to the screen by J. Grubb Alexander and produced by Charles Swickard. It has its principal scene in a Texas town, close to the Mexican border. The heroine, as admirably portrayed by Claire McDowell, is a girl with a Mexican father and an Irish mother. She is beloved by three men, a Mexican bandit named Carlos, Joe Nagle, keeper of the gambling house, and "Big Jim," the sheriff. The latter parts are assumed by George Belanger, Wilbur Higby and Roy Stewart, respectively. All of the characterizations are true to type and well portrayed. Harry Archer is also good in the minor role of "Blotch," and Jessie Arnold as Lottie, who bears Joe Nagle's name "by courtesy."

The plot is one of outlawry and jealousy, and primal instincts are given full play. Carlos loses his good standing in the U. S. A. and carries the girl bodily to a plague-infected town in Mexico. The sheriff follows and brings back the girl, but Carlos dies of the plague. These latter scenes are prolonged too much considering their gruesome character.

"The Female of the Species"

Five-Reel Kay-Bee Character Contrast of Two Feminine Types Represented by Dorothy Dalton and Enid Markey.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison

IN WRITING "The Female of the Species," the author, Russell E. Smith, has gone deeper than a character contrast as shown by two women, one keeping safely within the bounds of social usage, the other daring to step over the line in obedience to the powerful natural dictates of her heart, but the play as it stands, admirably directed and interpreted, does not strongly convey the deeper meaning. Its interest depends largely upon a situation. Dorothy Dalton is superb as a woman of strong natural impulses, neither vain nor unmoral, but permitted a certain freedom of action as an artist of so-called "Bohemian" tendencies. She enjoys a masculine liberty of action and permits her love for a man of wealth and social standing to completely dominate her conduct.

Enid Markey is equally good in the difficult role of a girl who submits to social usage, who, on that very account, wins the same man in marriage. He prefers the woman he can trust to the one who shows that she can not trust herself, though she is capable of passionate affection and devoted loyalty. Though more intense, more deeply in love, she is discarded for the sake of a true-hearted girl who is less demonstrative because of the restraints of social custom. Through an accident, which causes temporary loss of memory and identity, the man is thrown completely into the hands of the "other woman," and proclaimed in another part of the world as her husband.

That a woman should continue to love a man under such circumstances, and that the wife should eventually find him and win him back, may be sufficient for the purposes of what is commonly believed to be a dramatic situation, but it is destructive of sympathetic interest. The man does nothing from the start that is made visible to the spectator to show why two fine women should love him, but that can be admitted with safety. It is difficult, however, for normal people to believe that these two fine women would continue to love this same man when he becomes abnormal, merely a silly and useless member of society. He would have been more human, and intensely so, if he had merely wobbled, shifted from one to the other and back again.

It is encouraging to see these original stories on the screen, for the time is not far away when they will be the only ones worth reviewing. It will be still more encouraging when Scene from "The Female of the Species" (Triangle).

Russell E. Smith and other capable authors are given more time—that means reward in proportion to effort—so that they may perfect their compositions. "The Female of the Species" goes to the edge of a tremendous and vital question, and I have no doubt that the author could have gone deeper, but, between the exactions of stars that one character shall have all the opportunity, and the exactions of directors that there shall be a "situation," the author is denied that freedom which is as necessary to the expansion of creative genius as air is to the expansion of our lungs.

"The Girl Who Doesn't Know"

B. S. Moss Presents Marie Empress in Five-part Drama of Good Moral Tone.

THE title of this picture gives no clue whatever to its quality, and is somewhat misleading, owing to the fact that other pictures with similar titles have been released, which were not altogether commendable, and leaned rather toward the commercializing of episodes which occur in certain undesirable walks of life, all of which does no good, and appeals only to morbid curiosity.

In the production in question the most objectionable scenes occur in a gambling house. These are in the minority, and any suggestion of immorality which they might contain, other than the gambling connections, are so skilfully covered as to be evident only to the discerning mind. The moral of the story is a forceful one, and there is no evidence of a purely commercial motive in the manner in which the picture is presented.

The picture opens with a word sermon in which parents are rebuked for allowing their daughters to combat the evil influences of the world without a knowledge which would enable them to take care of themselves. Following this three types of untaught girls are introduced. The first is the motherless daughter of a man who is cruelly intolerant of sin, who falls to the wiles of a degenerate from the city. Effective scenes in a village church characterize this portion of the story, revealing a common form of hypocrisy. This girl, deserted, drowns herself. The second type, played by Marie Empress, is a child of poverty, who lives with a hard-working mother, a crippled brother and a brutal stepfather. Longing for pretty things to wear, and driven by bitter domestic experience, she falls easily into the clutches of a man of the world and keeper of a gaming house, who supplies the pretty clothes, and employs her as a decoy for the victims whom he fleeces of their coin. Finally when one of the male frequenters of the place falls madly in love with her, steals from the bank, of which he is cashier, to give to her, and shoots himself dead upon discovery that the girl cares nothing for him, she suddenly awakens to the degradation of her position and leaves the gaming house with the determination to lead a better life. Falling in with a young clergyman, whose work is in the slums, she becomes the saviour of his guileless sister, when the gaming house keeper happens to enter the clergyman's family.

This picture contains nothing that could be pointed at as absolutely objectionable, and could be placed with impunity before any audience. Others appearing in the cast in addition to Marie Empress are R. Henry Grey, Zada Marlow, Henry Stanley, Ruth White, Geo. Theilan and Robyn Adair. An early January date will be set for the release of this production.

"The Enemy"

Seven-Reel Photoplay Made by Vitagraph from Story by George Randolph Chester Contains Much Temperance Propaganda.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE friends of Temperance will be eager to put the stamp of their approval upon "The Enemy," the seven-reel photoplay made by the Vitagraph Company from a story written by George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester. It assails the liquor question with the same vigor and uncompromising conviction as to its iniquity that is to be found in that celebrated old classic, "Ten Nights in a Barroom." In the main, the author has made his characters convincing and handled his theme with strict regard for truth. The scenario writer has not been equally successful with his part of the work. The drama needs condensing, and would be the gainer if reduced to five reels. The finish is logical and possesses great power.

but is not lead up to with skill. After giving every indication that the usual happy ending is to be employed, the utmost finesse should have been used in showing the man who had once been the slave of the liquor habit and who, apparently, had conquered his enemy and regained the love of his family and the respect of his fellows, again giving way to his appetite and sending a bullet into his brain when overwhelmed by despair. One of the irritating incidents is the pouring of the liquor into the bowl of punch by the young woman who is anxious to take the hero away from the heroine, and who does not hesitate to tempt the thirst which the young chap has promised shall never again get the better of him. The device is old and its use by the girl does not seem in keeping with her character. There is also a superabundance of embracing in the drama; filial affection is very beautiful, but may be taken for granted, even in a moving picture.

The staging and acting of "The Enemy" should be given high praise. The different settings and locations are well chosen, and the acting of the entire cast is equal to every demand. Charles Kent, Evert Overton, Peggy Hyland, Julia Swayne Gordon and Billie Billings have the leading roles.

THE author of "The Honor of Mary Blake," the five-reel Bluebird photoplay to be released December 18, understands his subject, and has depicted the every day experiences of a small repertoire company from inside information. John C. Brownell is the author's name. He has had nothing particularly novel to disclose, and has not neglected to surround his actress heroine with a number of narrow-minded country types, who are shocked at the girl's calling and at the depravity of a sturdy young farmer who falls in love with Mary and marries her. The girl is first shown leading the simple life, as it is experienced in a theatrical rooming house in New York. A blackguardly manager tries to entrap her into a false marriage and turns up later and almost succeeds in separating the farmer and his bride. The village gossips, also, have a hand in the affair. A harmless prank, in which the ex-leading lady puts on her Roselind costume and is discovered by her mother-in-law in tights, is likewise used against her.

The picture belongs to the class of plays that were once known as comedy-dramas and depended more upon their touches of comedy than any great amount of dramatic suspense. Edwin Stevens has followed the accepted formula used in transferring stories of this nature to the screen, and, from such a standard, has done his work conscientiously and

She impersonates a certain type of theatrical leading lady to the life, and makes her just the kind of fluffy-haired, bright-eyed little woman in a becoming frock that would appeal to a susceptible young chap—especially, after he has rescued her from the attack of a repulsive-looking tramp. Sidney Mason is a handsome and earnest young farmer, and Tina Marshall, Caroline Harris and James O'Neill have congenial roles.

This episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, is absorbing in story as well as furnishing several stunts performed by George Larkin. It shows Grant, the reporter, once more in the guise of a man who permeates deeper into apparent trivialities than do the police. This time he frustrates the plan of a band of anarchists to throw a bomb into the ranks of the parading police. His work leads him to the pursuit of a woman member of the band, whom he follows: He leaps from a window of an office building to a suspended rope, climbs to the roof, and then jumps to the roof of an adjoining building, many feet below. He grabs the woman just as she is about to throw a bomb. With Mr. Larkin in the cast are seen Ollie Kirkby, William McKey, Director Robert Ellis, Mary Taylor Ross and Harry Gordon.

ROLFE Photoplays, Inc., have produced for release by Metro "The Stolen Triumph," a five-reel photodrama in which Julius Steger is the featured player. The picture will make its strongest appeal to that class of picturegoers who enjoy sadness. A general atmosphere of gloom and heaviness pervades the picture, punctured by lightening touches but a scant few times during the screen-telling of the story by M.. Steger and Maxwell Karger. The effect of the whole is somewhat depressing, but will undoubtedly be liked by many. Everything possible has been done by the authors and the cast to enlist the spectator's sympathies for the struggling playwright whose play—a masterpiece—has been stolen by a successful producer.

Mr. Steger's portrayal of the role of the playwright is, on the whole, convincing, but the story is at times rather hard to swallow. So much woe and sorrow have been injected into the story that even the happiest possible ending under the circumstances fails to entirely alleviate the spectator's feeling that this is a hard world indeed. For instance, as a result of the theft of the play, the playwright's wife dies. He becomes insane and jumps into the river. He is thought to be a suicide and, to make reparation, the producer and his wife bring the playwright's boy into their house. But the playwright has not committed suicide. His memory has been lost. It is restored fifteen years later when he sees his name as the author of a successful play. His son is engaged to marry the producer's daughter.

The cast supporting Mr Steger work well. An especially creditable performance is given by Clara Whipple as the wife of the producer. Harry Burkhardt is seen to good advantage

"Oliver Twist"

Lasky Production of Dickens Story Marked by Splendid Characterization and Staging.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

LASKY'S production of "Oliver Twist" is an unusual picture. Its making has been accomplished with a care, a fidelity, in keeping with the fame of the Dickens masterpiece. As Oliver, the pathetic figure of childhood, there is Marie Doro. Even more, in the role of Bill Sikes there is Hobart Bosworth; in that of Fagin there is Tully Marshall. The picture well might have been built around either of these two men. The characterization of either of these was a show of and by itself. And there were a half dozen others selected with fine regard for their powers of convincing portrayal of the quaint Dickens types—some lovable, some brutal. Here we see the Artful Dodger, Mr. Brownlow, Nancy Sikes, Mr. Bumble and Monks in the garb and in the surroundings in which we have visualized them.

Of the picture there may be two complaints, and the first of these is a most unusual one. That is that the subject had not been made in a greater length—of seven or eight reels. The story and the players, and the producer, too, are the justification for this. There seems too great a mass of material to be comprehended to best advantage within the limits of five reels. As to the second growl, it lay in the fading from the close, where Oliver is at last pleasantly situated with his rags only a memory, into the picture of the bedraggled child on one side of the screen and on the other Marie Doro all fussed up in her best. It jerks the spectator out of the spell of the story into the realm of feminine vanity; it is unpleasant and it is inartistic.

Miss Doro in her impersonation of the name role deserves high praise for her portrayal of the boy Oliver. She imbues him with the spirit of the book, as well as that need be expected of one playing a role of opposite sex. Come now to Mr. Bosworth's Bill Sikes. Here is a figure to conjure with. Big, brutal, submerging self in the part of the worst of the denizens of London's unspeakable slums of the early nineteenth century, he goes his way through life. He shows us a man without a redeeming trait, unless it be the fact that he does not abuse his dog. His ending is as dramatic as his life has been low. One of the incidents of the story comes when Bill, with a rope around his body, starts to slide over the edge of the roof to his accidental death in midair, the rope caught about his neck. Quick as a flash the dog starts to follow him, sliding rapidly from the ridgepole to the edge and stopping short at the gutter.

And Tully Marshall's Fagin. The player quickens into life the thieving old miser, whose fiction name has been applied to all preceptors of young crooks for nearly a hundred years and in all likelihood will serve for all time. His performance furnishes a rare treat. Raymond Hatton is the Artful Dodger, James Neill is Mr. Brownlow, Elsie Jane Wilson is Nancy, Harry Rattenbury is Mr. Bumble, and Carl Stockdale is Monks. All of these finely supplement the work of the principals.

The staging brings us into the atmosphere of Old England. The Lasky company erected structures to fit the period and the locale. The whole production fully measures up to what we had been led to expect by advance notices. It should be one of the most popular Paramount pictures of the year

A large addition has been built to the Morosco-Pallas studio, which will house the head of the engagement bureau, the technical and stage directors and Donald Crisp, the latest addition to the directorial staff.

Fox Film Comedies

"Social Pirates" and Chased Into Love" the First Numbers of the Series of Two-Reel Comedies to be Produced by the Fox Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Social Pirates."

THE finish of "Social Pirates" sweeps everything before it. This two-reel comedy, which marks the entrance of the William Fox Corporation into a new field, is a crook play and follows along the lines laid down for such pictures until about halfway through. It then begins to strike out for itself, and ends with a flood that starts at the top of the building and sweeps crooks, male and female guests and the employees of a large hotel, down the stairs, through the streets, into a sewer and sets them adrift in a fair-sized river. The comedy has been given an ambitious production and is capitally played by a large cast headed by Charles Arling and directed by W. C. Reed. Leo Morris, Bill Hauber, Harry O'Connor, Martin Kinney, Frank Alexander, Annette De Foe, Olive Bruce and Amy Jerome have important roles.

"Chased Into Love."

A Marathon race is cleverly utilized in this two-reel comedy. The story hinges upon the efforts of the leading comedian to escape a distasteful marriage. While doing his best to get away from one bride, the unlucky chap loses his outer garments and finds himself one of the field in a fifty mile run which ends in the home town of the girl he really wants to marry. The race is won by him and he also secures the right bride. Excellent acting by Hank Mann, John Lancaster, Joe Lee, Charles Arling and Carmen Phillips adds to the merit of the comedy. Charles Parrott directed the production.

The Rink

Two-Reel Mutual-Chaplin With the Fun-Maker in a New Acrobatic Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CHAPLIN at the rink is amusing enough, but such a vast amount of material is needed to keep a swift farce constantly on the move that this one opens up with the almost outworn business of an awkward waiter who creates almost endless confusion in both restaurant and kitchen. It may not have seemed possible for the actor to get enough out of his rink exploits alone, but that was because he depended almost entirely upon action and ingenuity to get the laugh started and keep it going. Now a certain well-known French actor once used the same situation with far less ingenuity and movement, yet with an effect quite as comic. He played largely in the close foreground and depended upon a clever representation of his state of mind while attempting to do tricks on the rollers.

Chaplin missed this opporunity, though he could have made it excrutiatingly funny. With Charlie in the close foreground, wavering between self-confidence and self-consciousness, now starting to show them how easy it is, now puzzled by his inability to regulate and control the skates, there is enough to keep almost any audience in a roar for at least one reel. While Chaplin works hard and seems to stand the strain of being funny, an awful strain in its way, he is not given much new opportunity. A man of his resources could fit into hundreds of roles never before shown on the screen, be even more amusing than he is and provide a greater variety of program. In this way his native value would be greatly enhanced. It will pay for the producers to get him some bright new farce-comedies.

General Film Program

A Group of Twenty-Nine Screen Stars Released During the Week of Dec. 18.

THE Vitagraph Company announces through General Film Company that it will release hereafter every Friday one of "The Dangers of Doris" stories, featuring Mary Anderson. Jack Weatherbee plays the male lead. The series will deal with the amusing adventures of a country girl of enterprising disposition who is suddenly thrown into a city environment. The series, it is said, provide a vehicle admirably adapted to the sprightly temperament of little "Sunshine" Mary.

In General Film Service for week Dec. 18-23rd inclusive, twenty-nine distinguished stars are featured. Edith Johnson is the first to be seen as she appears in the initial release for that week, "The Five Franc Piece," a two reel Selig drama dealing with the attempted theft of a modern war secret. "A Lesson for Somebody," a one-act comedy from the Vitagraph studios precedes the always interesting Selig-Tribune, followed by a one-reel Biograph drama, "The Conscience of Hassan Bey," which is a story of the Orient featuring Lillian Gish as the daughter of a rug maker, supported by Robert Harron and Alfred Paget.

"The Little Brown Mole," a two reel drama, the third of the "Black Cat Features" by Essanay, is the first picture screened Tuesday. Lillian Drew and Sydney Ainsworth are starred in this picture, in which the little brown mole plays so important a part. "The Fatal Violin," a one-reel Kalem comedy, in which the fun is supplied by Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdock. Biograph offers "A Daughter of Earth," a two-reel Biograph drama in which Gretchen Hartman plays the lead, supported by Alan Hale and Jose Ruben.

Ben Turpin is the fun-maker in "Taking the Count," a one-reel Essanay Comedy, followed by "On the Brink of War," the 20th episode of Kalem's "The Girl From 'Frisco," in which Marin Sais and True Boardman have certainly scored a success. Vim supplies a one-reel comedy, "They Practice Economy," featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in a play dealing with this all important question.

The offerings for Thursday consist of the Selig-Tribune showing pictorially all the big events of the world and what is the very newest in the way of fashions, together with a one-reel Vim comedy.

"The Dawn of Wisdom," a three-reel Knickerbocker Star Feature drama, in which Frank Mayo is featured, supported by an all star cast, ushers in Friday's program. Kalem supplies "The Tiger's Claw," the tenth thrilling adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter," in which Ollie Kirkby and George Larkin have the titular roles. Vitagraph offers the first of "The Dangers of Doris" Series under the caption of "A Bit of Bent Wire," featuring Mary Anderson and a strong cast.

The second release of Essanay's series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" under the title, "Dancing With Folly," features Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold and Sydney Ainsworth, who form the triangle of a dramatic and appealing two-reel story. A daring adventure of the "Hazards of Helen" series features Helen Gibson in "The Vanishing Box Car." Robyn Adair has the stellar role in "The Man He Might Have Been," a Selig one-reel heart-touching drama of a wasted life.

STEVENSON TO HANDLE ARGOSY FEATURE.

H. S. Stevenson, of Cincinnati, has secured the rights to "Where D'ye Get That Stuff" for Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. The price paid for the territory is said to run up into the five figures. Mr. Stevenson, who is recognized as one of the shrewdest exchangemen in the Middle West, has been most successful in exploiting features and selected "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" from among a number of pictures offered him because he saw it filled a long-felt want in the field of motion picture comedy. This film burlesque, which was written by H. C. Witwer and H. H. Van Loan, and which has been called the "Craziest and Funniest Picture Ever Produced," is a distinct innovation in motion picture comedy.

It is planned to book this picture in the territory acquired by Mr. Stevenson along lines used by theatrical producers, and it will be shown in the leading theatres in the same manner as a big road show. "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" offers unusual opportunities for advertising, and will receive an enormous amount of publicity throughout the country because of its novelty, the title, and through the fame of its authors, both of whom are writers of note.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" is the first State Rights production to be released by the Argosy Films, Inc.

MIGNON COMPANY GETS "CIVILIZATION" TERRITORY.

Twelve million, approximately, is the population of the large slice of state right territory just sold by J. Parker Read, Jr., general manager of the Harper Film Corporation, for "Civilization." The territory consists of the states of Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri. Its importance is obvious from the fact that the population is about one-tenth that of the United States and its territories so the transaction is a big deal. The Mignon Feature Film Corporation are the buyers of the rights.

One of the best known men in the motion picture business, A. C. Langan, is manager of this new "Civilization" company. The production will have its first presentation in Kansas City, and will be followed by productions in other large cities of the territory.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company

AMBITIOUS ETHEL (Vim), Dec. 1—A fair number of the Pokes and Jabbs comedies. Ethel Burton is seen with Robert Burns and Walter Stull. The film embraces a quite funny burlesque to "Romeo and Juliet." When Ethel sees it she becomes fired with ambitions to become a movie actress, and it is in the course of her instruction that most of the laughs come.

MISTAKES WILL HAPPEN (Selig), Dec. 2.—Tom Mix is seen in some of his riding stunts in this one-reel drama. There are several touches of comedy. Tom is to be married, and on the way to the wedding his fresh horse is taken by an escaping outlaw. Tom is mistaken for the outlaw and jailed, but everything turns out satisfactorily when the girl and her father get busy. In the cast with Tom are Victoria Forde, Pat Chrisman and Sid Jordan.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 97, 1916 (Selig), Dec. 4.—Third and Fourth Texas Regiments reviewed, Corpus Christi, Tex.; W. J. Alexander erects granite monument to President Wilson, Chattanooga, Tenn.; young women's auto race marred by accident, Byberry, Pa.; children go to spring in Fairmount Park for water, Philadelphia; Old Guard Veterans' Batallion celebrate Evacuation Day, New York; Jack Cudahy's children collect newspapers for war orphans, Pasadena, Cal.; H. H. Brown, of Williams, wins ten-mile cross-country run, Boston; latest fashions in furs; Seventh Regiment, N. Y. N. G., returns to New York from border duty.

HUBBY'S CHICKEN (Vim), Dec. 6.—A fair number of the Vim Feature Comedies, with Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. Mr. Love, a poultry fancier, gets into a lot of trouble with Friend Wife over a chicken which the wife thinks is the wrong kind of a chicken. However, after she hires a detective and chases Hubby to the station, she finds that Mr. Love has been chasing a white leghorn, and everyone is happy.

A WAITING GAME (Essanay), Dec. 6.—Ben Turpin does most of the knockabout work in this comedy reel. It has few claims to originality, but, nevertheless, a few laughs are furnished. Ben, perforce, becomes a waiter in a swell cafe, and the usual things happen with dishes, guests, chefs, etc.

THE GUILTY ONE (Vim), Dec. 7.—Babe Hardy and Kate Price get over numerous laughs in this comedy. The portly pair are seen as exconvicts, but Kate reforms and becomes a reporter. Babe has a scheme whereby he expects to make a lot of money, and he induces Kate to work with him. The result of an ad to the effect that if a certain man doesn't pay blackmail there will be dire consequences is funny—almost every man in town has something to conceal.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 98, 1916 (Selig), Dec. 7.—American steamer Ausable arrives at Galveston with cargo of wheat; dreadnaughts leave New York after Army-Navy game; Secretary and Mrs. McAdoo visit Senator Phelan, Saratoga, Cal.; University of Pennsylvania defeats Cornell at football, Philadelphia; New Orleans motion picture theaters accept potatoes as admission—orphans to benefit; ten-mile roller skate race held in Chicago streets; annual military inspection at Carlisle Indian School, Carlisle, Pa.; officials of all countries attend mass for late Emperor Franz Joseph; children taught tooth sanitation, Chicago; Statue of Liberty illuminated, New York; Paul Thurston gives demonstration of new hula hula dance, Galveston, Tex.

THE TRUNK MYSTERY (Kalem), Dec. 8.—An episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series. George Larkin is seen in some daring stunts around a lumber-cutting mill. The story concerns a mysterious murder, brought to light by the finding of a skull in a trunk, and solved by the Chronicle reporter. A review was printed on page 1655 of last week's issue.

THE MIDNIGHT EXPRESS (Kalem), Dec. 16.—Helen Gibson performs one of the best stunts in her long career of daring feats in this number of the "Hazards of Helen," and it certainly gets over with a punch. In pursuit of a train on a motorcycle, she guides the cycle up a runway on to a flat car at a siding, leaps from the motorcycle, and makes a flying jump from the flat car to a moving freight train. This is an unusual thrill, and Miss Gibson deserves unlimited credit. The story is in keeping with the other factors With Miss Gibson are seen P. S. Pembroke, George Routh and G. A. Williams.

THE VANISHING BOX CAR (Kalem), Dec. 23.—A number of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Main interest in this reel centers in Helen Gibson's stunt of leaping from a speeding automobile to a moving freight train. There are several other minor thrills, too, and the story interests. In the cast with the fearless Miss Gibson are P. C. Pembroke, G. A. Williams, George Routh and Juanita Spencer. Directed by Walter Morton.

General Film Company Specials

OUR OTHER LIVES (Vitagraph), Dec. 2.—Although the story from which this three-reel drama was made is rather absurd, there is a certain amount of interest in the film. A young medical student finds the girl whom he believes he loved a thousand years ago, in another plane. Then, a king was his rival, and today the King is seen in the form of a rival. Grown to a specialist, the man operates on the brain of the girl he marries. The "King" tries to win her and tries to hide the fact that the husband has met with an accident, but is thwarted by the new brain power of the wife.

THE FINAL FRAUD (Esanay), Dec. 2.—Bryant Washburn and Gertrude Glover are the leading players in this meritorious three-reel drama. The visualized story interests. It tells of a rather mysterious young man who becomes engaged to the daughter of a wealthy man. The father is caught in the toils of a band of blackmailers, and apparently finds the youth to be one of the gang. However, the denouement shows that the youth is a secret service man. Others in the cast are Ernest Maupain and John Cossar.

THE BRAND OF CAIN (Selig), Dec. 4.—A strong two-reel offering with a good Western background. Kathlyn Williams, Harry Lonsdale and Wheeler Oakman are seen in the cast. The screened story tells of an Englishman out West, who is befriended by a fellow-countryman. They strike it rich, but drink breaks down the better impulses of one of the men. He plans to steal the fund, is interrupted by the return of his benefactor, and kills him. He goes to meet the dead man's wife, who is on her way from England. His qualms of conscience finally lead him to suicide.

THE EGG (Essanay), Dec. 5.—A pleasing two-reel "parlor" comedy. The picture runs along smoothly and is good light entertainment. The story concerns a wealthy young girl who, reading a book, attempts to reform a "bar fly." She finally invites him to dinner, at which his antics shock the other guests. She makes known to him her belief that she should have known better than to have tried to make a man of him. The surprise comes when she learns that he is the author of the book she so admired. Richard C. Travers and Marguerite Clayton play the leads.

THE POISONED DART (Kalem), Dec. 6.—Eighteenth two-reel episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco" series. Marin Sais, True Boardman and the usual cast are seen in a mystery story of India and California. Interest is keyed up throughout the running of the film, and the number is up to the standard set by former releases. Reviewed in last week's issue, page 1655.

MASTER OF HER SOUL (Knickerbocker Star Feature), Dec. 8.—A moderately strong three-reel offering. Robyn Adair, R. Henry Grey and Lillian West are seen in the leading parts. The story tells of two men in love with the same girl. She marries one and the other, a doctor, goes to a lepers' island. The husband neglects his wife. Their child dies. The husband takes up with an adventuress and the wife, learning this, goes away. A shipwreck lands her on the lepers' island. She is nursed by her former sweetheart. The husband reaches the island but dies despite the doctor's care. Thus the two real lovers are brought together.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE (Bluebird), Dec. 11.—A five-part production featuring Dorothy Phillips, with a supporting cast consisting of Lon Chaney, Jack Mulhall, Frank Whitson, Jay Belasco, Viola Smith and Evelyn Selbie. The production is an adaptation of a magazine story by W. Carey Wonderly, has an unpleasant flavor at times because of the nature of its theme. The picture is well made and will prove interesting to many, but is not well suited to exhibition before young people. A full review will be found elsewhere.

THE HONOR OF MARY BLAKE (Bluebird), Dec. 18.—Violet Mersereau is featured in this five-reel comedy-drama which has life with a small theatrical company for a theme. The heroine marries a farmer and settles down in a country town. A longer review of the picture is printed on another page of this issue.

Christie Film Corp.

HIST! AT SIX O'CLOCK (Christine), Dec. 18.—This is an eccentric comedy intended for a burlesque on the vampire style of picture play. It is acceptable principally on account of its eccentricity, and will no doubt be enjoyed by the average audience. Betty Compson plays the role of the vampire, Neal Burns that of Willie Loosem of the Loosem family, who have for centuries been pursued for the sake of a certain box of treasure in their possession by the family of Count de Strychnine. Billie Rhodes plays the role of Ima Peach, and Eddie Barry that of Count de Strychnine.

Fox Film Corporation

THE VIXEN (Fox, Dec. 4. -Theda Bara returns to her favorite role of a vampire in this five-reel photoplay, and does her best to make life interesting for the members of the family to which she is supposed to belong. The picture is a good example of its class. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE (Fox), Dec. 11.—This five-reel picture serves to introduce a new star to the screen in the person of Gladys Coburn. The story has a melodramatic setting and is full of sensational situations. The heroine is the daughter of a thief, who succeeds in reaching a place among honest people. The picture is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph V-L-S-E, Inc.

HIS CONSCIENTIOUS CONSCIENCE (Vitagraph), Nov. 27.—Hughey Mack, Patsey De Forrest and Ed Dunn are the leading fun-makers in this one-reel farce. Its humor partakes of the breadth of Hughey's back, the supply being equal to the demands.

CAPT. JINKS SHOULD WORRY (Vitagraph), Nov. 27.—Frank Daniels has the star role in this one-reel farce, written by Thomas Gray. The picture is based on a capital motive, but is a little slow in movement. The star gives it the benefit of his humorous personality.

CAPT. KIDD'S HIDDEN TREASURE (Vitagraph), Dec. 11.—Frank Daniels is the leading comedian in this one-reel farce which is fairly amusing. The hidden treasure in this case is a pocketbook full of stage money, and the hunt for it keeps the star moving at a rapid rate all through the reel.

THE SECRET KINGDOM (Vitagraph), December.—This new Vitagraph serial, written by Louis Joseph Vance, is in fifteen episodes, the first two episodes being in three reels each and the rest in two reels. It is a story of romantic adventure in this country and, also, in a mythical kingdom in Europe, and is well produced and excellently acted by a cast headed by Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly.

International Film Service, Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 97, 1916 (International), Dec. 5.—Guardsmen at border shoot wild game for Thanksgiving, San Benito, Tex.; group of school children eat, sleep and study in open air, New York; with the French Army on the Somme front; New York horse cars soon to be a thing of the past; fashions de luxe; Interned German sailors build village on waterfront, Philadelphia; Washington, D. C., Boy Scouts deliver 400 Thanksgiving dinners to poor; negroes celebrate freedom with demonstration, Fredericksted, St. Croix; President and Mrs. Wilson board Mayflower for illumination of Statue of Liberty, New York.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 98, 1916 (International), Dec. 8.—Fire destroys two Brooklyn warehouses; steamer Bay State fast on rocks, pounded to pieces by seas, Cape Elizabeth, Me.; Ambassador and Mrs. Gerard leave New York; W. H. Firke ships 50,000 geese to market, Mansfield, Ill.; fashions de luxe; Atlantic fleet goes out to sea, New York; pictures of window cleaners at work on skyscrapers, New York; National Guardsmen on review, Brownsville, Tex.; Police Commissioner Woods directs safety campaign, New York.

Metro Pictures Corporation

THE STOLEN TRIUMPH (Rolfe), Dec. 11.—This five-reel drama, in which Julius Steger is featured, will make its strongest appeal to those who enjoy sadness. It tells of a playwright whose whole life is ruined by the theft of his play. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

DUPLICITY (Metro-Drew), December.—Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew are seen in a farce whose humor keeps one chuckling throughout the reel. The film was made from a scenario by Epes Winthrop Sargent. Mr. Newlywed wants his wife to go to the seashore, but she is afraid to leave him alone. He overhears her planning with the cook to make up as the colored maid and watch him. Consequently, he does everything in his power to make his wife believe that he is just about dying with lonesomeness because of her absence. His duplicity is not discovered and happiness once more reigns.

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 100 (Nov. 29).—This issue of the Weekly contains a number of unusually interesting items, among them the arrival of Ruth Law after her cross country flight, animated pictures of the late Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, and also Austria's new ruler, Charles Francis Joseph and his bride, the rugby game between Leland Stanford University and the University of Santa Clara, with Santa Clara winning, and other things of unusual interest.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 101 (Gaumont), Dec. 6.—Interesting items of this issue are the New York police distributing window cards and booklets telling how to protect lives, property and money, Sir Sam Hughes presenting Canadian regiment with the colors, a war "tank" touring the streets of Montreal, Can., in a recruiting campaign, the aftermath of the grand race, showing where Lewis Jackson's car, "Marmon," hit a tree, pictures of the late Jack London in his study, and views of Bucharest.

SHOT IN THE FRACAS (Vogue), Dec. 10.—A moderately entertaining two-part comedy, in which the villain makes trouble by stealing a medal and placing the blame on the wrong party. The final revenge of the villain's victim finds an outlet in the replacing of one of the villain's bombs in the back of a target which is used in parlor archery. The close is amusing.

REEL LIFE, NO. 32 (Gaumont), Dec. 10.—An instructive number, beginning with views showing the abbey in which the Benedictine monks make their famous cordial. A dancing lesson follows, illustrating the new Two-Two fox trot and the jelly roll movement. New toys for children are demonstrated and the number closes with views showing the manufacture of radium from carnotite.

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 6 (Gaumont), Dec 12.—This opens with splendid views taken along the river Nile, from Cairo to Esna. Then come scenes taken in and about the famous feudal city of Carcassonne, with its protecting walls. Scenes from Lake Lucerne, Switzerland, and its surroundings close the interesting number.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 66 (Gaumont), Dec. 13.—This number contains some beautiful and instructive views taken on Mount Baker, Washington, also scenes on the Snoqualmie River. Of the latter one of the most beautiful is the Snoqualmie Falls. This reel closes with a comic cartoon entitled "Curfew Shall Not Ring," with a bottle of rum playing the principal role in a bad dream of his Satanic majesty's.

GERTIE'S LATEST LOVE AFFAIR (Mutual), Dec. 14.—A farce comedy with very little point. It concerns the love affairs of a middle-aged maiden and her nephew. Gertie is a pretty young woman with whom the nephew is in love. The young lady also lures the aunt's lover into her net, thereby winning her undying hatred. A funny mix-up occurs when the girl in order to be near her lover dresses in boy's clothes and enters the house where aunt and nephew live.

THE ELOPEMENT (Mutual), Dec. 24.—A comic number of about average interest. The characters begin with a number of flirtations and gradually become involved in quarrels of the knockabout type. There is not much humor in the action, though some of the latter scenes are rather funny.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

HIS UNCLE'S WARD (Mutual), Dec. 7.—A two-part comedy, which is somewhat old style, but clean and entertaining. A young man whose uncle picks for him what he calls a eugenic wife, makes her his heir and arranges a meeting, is so incensed that he becomes engaged to another girl before waiting to see his uncle's choice. The result is that he falls in love with his uncle's ward, and a complication of affairs takes place which are fairly amusing.

SEQUEL TO "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY," No 3 (American), Dec. 9.—This chapter is very nicely staged, and sustains the suspense well. Blair is in pursuit of little Arthur, after finding out where he is located, and also of the diamond. He is foiled in attempting to extract the diamond by force from Quabba, who has in the previous episode stolen it from Blair, by his wife, Vivian, whom he has deserted. The episode closes with Vivian falling over an embankment where she lies senseless.

THE FIGHT AT CAMP ONE (Signal), Dec. 11.—Chapter 8 of "A Lass of the Lumberlands." This opens with some amusing comedy scenes in and about the boarding house at the big lumber camp. The hero and Steven clash over the girl, who is a blood relation of the latter without being aware of it. There is a hand-to-hand struggle between them, which Helen brings to a stop with her rifle. The wife of "Dollar Holmes," supposed to be dead, turns up and he employs a man to kill her by felling a heavy tree over her cabin. This is a characteristic number and continues the interest well.

MISS JACKIE OF THE NAVY (Pollard-Mutual), Dec. 11.—A six-reel number written by Alfred Sloman and directed by Harry Pollard. Margarita Fisher plays the part of a madcap girl who, after numerous escapades, attires herself as a jackie and boards a war vessel to deliver a letter to the captain. She is carried away on a cruise, still posing as a member of the crew, and meets with some truly amusing experiences. The situation is a daring one, but skillfully handled and will do no more than mildly shock certain observers. Her efforts to sleep in a sailor's hammock and to black the captain's shoes are carried out in the best comedy fashion. The adventures on a native island, among the voodoo worshipers, are splendidly staged and prove exciting. The number is original and highly entertaining. Jack Mower and J. Gordon Russell also appear.

BUDDY'S CHRISTMAS (Mutual), Dec. 18.—A two-part production for the holiday season. The story treats of how a feud between two families of the Kentucky mountains was settled once for all on Christmas Day, when the daughter of one of the families who had been for some time the mark of a son of the other side, makes known her determination to marry the former enemy of her father's house. A little waif also figures in the story. The story is a particularly virile one, and with a few eliminations that were to be made, and the cutting down of fight scenes the picture will be found a pleasing Christmas offering.

THE VAMPIRES, NO. 5 (Gaumont), Dec. 24.—The fifth episode of this startling serial has to do with an attempt of the Vampires to rob a bank cashier who has stolen a large amount of money from an American bank. Moreno, the bandit, interrupts proceedings by kidnapping and hypnotizing Irma Vep. The box with the money has, however, been found by Guard and Normandin where it was hidden by the cashier. A thrilling number which will be found reviewed elsewhere.

THE VAMPIRES, NO. 6 (Gaumont), Dec. 28.—"Satanas," the sixth number of this serial, introduces the master of the Vampires, whose name is Satanas. This powerful personage forces Irma Vep to return to the fold of the vampires and Moreno to become one of them. The development of the serial continues to be interesting.

THE RINK (Mutual-Chaplin).—In this number of the Chaplin two-reelers the most entertaining part of the picture occurs, as would be expected from the title, in a roller skating rink, where the hero of the film astonishes us by his dexterity on skates. The scenes in the restaurant are not all that could be desired from a refined point of view, but several comic innovations are noticeable that cannot help but excite mirth.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

A CONEY ISLAND PRINCESS (Famous Players), Dec. 4. Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore have the leads in this story of the famous New York shore resort, of the polo field and of society. The picture is well played and finely staged and will interest, especially in the latter half. The subject was reviewed in the issue of December 16, on page 1655.

THE ROAD TO LOVE (Morosco), Dec. 7.—A splendidly staged story of the Algerian desert. Lenore Ulrich is featured, supported by Herschel Mayall, Colin Chase and a good cast. It is a picturesque, entertaining subject. A review will be found in the issue of December 16, on page 1657.

OLIVER TWIST (Lasky), Dec. 11.—As set forth in an extended review in another part of this paper, this production is an unusually fine one. Hobart Bosworth as Bill Sikes and Tully Marshall as Fagin are seen in support of Marie Doro as Oliver Twist.

THE VICTORIA CROSS (Lasky), Dec. 14.—A story of the Indian mutiny of 1857, featuring Lou-Tellegen, supported by Cleo Ridgley, Sessue Hayakawa, Mabel Van Buren, Frank Lanning and others. The picture is fast, interesting and should be popular. It is reviewed in another column.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE CHALLENGE (Astra-Pathe), Dec. 10.—A rattling good five-reel photoplay from the stage drama by Edward Childs Carpenter, "The Challenge" is excellently played by Montagu Love, Charles Gotthold and Helene Chadwick. Most of the scenes are laid in the West and the locations are particularly effective. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

KING LEAR (Thanhouser-Pathe), Dec. 17.—A well-executed five-reel screen version of Shakespeare's tragedy with Frederick Warde in the title role, this picture gives the story of the play in a clear and concise form. The acting is maintained at a gratifying level of excellence and the mountings are adequate. A longer review is printed on page 1812.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS, NO. 11 (Pathe), Dec. 24. "A Day of Sport" is the title of this fashion review. The different costumes will interest the ladies who ride, play golf or indulge in any other form of sport. On the same reel are a number of colored pictures taken in France, and showing the habits of young animals.

LUKE LOCATES THE LUTE (Rolin), Dec. 24.—Although lacking in novelty, the speedy work of the cast and the business put into this one-reel farce will insure the laughs. Luke turns detective and has an amusing encounter with a gang of crooks that get into a social gathering and relieve the guests of their valuables.

THE HIDDEN MENACE (Astra), Dec. 24.—The thirteenth episode of "The Shielding Shadow" serial keeps up the exciting pace set by the former numbers. Leontine goes to the laboratory in search of the scientist's diary and is found there by Sebastian, who locks her in a closet, sets fire to the place, and escapes with the diary. She is rescued by Ravengar.

THE ROMANTIC JOURNEY (Gold Rooster), Dec. 24.—Romance of a strenuous and absorbing nature runs through the five reels of this screen drama. William Courtenay and Alice Dovey are the featured players, although Macey Harlan does equally good work. The picture is reviewed at length on page 1653 of Dec. 16 issue.

Triangle Film Corporation

THE HEIRESS AT COFFEE DAN'S (Fine Arts), Dec. 23.—A dull story of the conventional Cinderella type. Bessie Love wears poor clothes at the beginning and fine ones at the end, the rest merely a readjustment of old material.

A GAMBLE IN SOULS (Kay-Bee), Dec. 23.—An interesting and sensational contrast of two directly opposed characters, a super clergyman and a concert hall singer, when thrown on a desert island together, the leading roles admirably interpreted by William Desmond and Dorothy Dalton.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 49 (Universal), Dec. 6.—English soldiers at play; New York welcoming back the Seventh; racing fatalities at Santa Monica; city house cleaning in Philadelphia; parades, drills and other features are included in this well-balanced issue.

SUCH IS LIFE IN ALASKA (Powers), Dec. 25.—This contains a series of entertaining views taken in Alaska, interspersed with humorous and explanatory animated drawings by Hy Mayer. Views of the Esquimos in their daily life, catching tomcods and raising reindeer are enjoyable.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

THE WOLF'S NEMESIS (Special Universal), Dec. 11.—Episode No. 18 of "Liberty." This instalment contains a number of exciting incidents. Rutledge and Winston arrive at the Leon hacienda and Pedro and Liberty are making their way thither. Pedro is captured and about to be hung when the girl cuts the rope in two with a shot. They flee on horses and jump from the animals to a moving train. A plot to dynamite the train is frustrated. At the close they are seen approaching the hacienda after a long separation from their friends.

MIXED BLOOD (Red Feather), Dec. 18.—A five-reel feature, adapted by J. Grubb Alexander from a story by Willard Mack, and produced by Charles Swickard. Claire McDowell, George Beranger, Roy Stewart, Wilbur Higby, Harry Archer and Jessie Arnold play the leading roles. The characterizations and general atmosphere are excellent throughout. The action of the first four reels pulls the observer along with a strong interest. There is too much of the horrible in the closing scenes, which picture the death of the bandit in a plague-stricken town. This can be cut to advantage, leaving a strong story of the rugged, border type.

World Pictures.

THE RISE OF SUSAN (Peerless), Dec. 18.—Clara Kimball Young is the star of this five-reel photoplay, in which a shop girl is persuaded to pass herself off as a Countess. The story is interesting and contains considerable vigorous melodrama in the last two reels.

Miscellaneous.

THE GIRL WHO DOESN'T KNOW (B. S. Moss).—This five-reel production proposes to draw attention to a serious fault prevalent among parents, that of allowing their daughters to go out into the world without a proper knowledge of how to take care of themselves. The production has been well made without the objectionable elements so common to this type of picture. There are no scenes to jar the finer sensibilities, and the picture as presented contains an important lesson. A full review of the production appears in our issue of December 23.

WAR AS IT REALLY IS (Hesser).—In this seven-part series of views from the French front line, will be found much to interest the general public. A good general idea of how the great war is being conducted on the Allies' side of the fence can be had from these excellent pictures which have been photographed by Captain Donald C. Thompson in conjunction with Leslie's Weekly. A full review of these pictures appears in our issue of December 23.

HOW LIFE BEGINS.—This is a remarkable three-part biological film, prepared by Geo. E. Stone, of Berekley University, and J. A. Long, Assistant Professor of Embryology of the University of California. The story of how life begins, illustrating by means of flower, a frog, a rat, a butterfly, and misroscopic organisms in pond water, is told with a clearness and delicacy that makes the production possible for exhibition before children as well as adults.

"THE ETERNAL SIN" WILL SURELY STICK.

For the second and last time, the name of Herbert Brenon's next production for Selznick Pictures has been changed. Originally it was announced as "The Queen Mother," for the reason that the drama was taken from a tragedy by Victor Hugo, no longer protected by copyright, and on account of numerous imitations of big productions in recent months, it was considered advisable to keep the plans secret. Later, it was announced that the drama is "Lucretia Borgia," which, although it was one of the most successful plays on the European and American stage not so many years ago, has thus far been overlooked by producers of photodramas, at least in this country. The title now finally selected, under which this production will be released, is "The Eternal Sin," adopted by Mr. Brenon for the reason that it gives a better key to the theme of the story than the mere name of the historical, central character, which is well known only to students of history.

MORE PICTURES OF BATTLE OF THE SOMME.

One of the surprises of the last month has been the eager interest displayed by spectators for pictures of the Battle of the Somme. This is being satisfied weekly by the Mutual Weekly, which has received some remarkable pictures from just behind the firing line. The Mutual Weekly is made by the Gaumont Company at its Flushing, N. Y., laboratories, and from the great Societe des Etablissement Gaumont, in Paris, France, is in receipt of battle negative by every ship from the sister republic in Europe. The Somme pictures in Mutual Weekly No. 103 include "Big Gun Fire Directed by Telephone from Observation Balloons," "Big 75s Being Rushed to More Advantageous Positions," "Air Squadron Ready to Leave," and "Cathedral Ruins." In the same issue is the picture of the French aviator who bombarded the Krupp works at Essen.

MARY MILES MINTER IN "THE INNOCENCE OF LIZETTE."

Mary Miles Minter, the charming young lead of Mutual Star Productions, is at work on "The Innocence of Lizette," her fifth screen drama filmed by the American Film Corporation. Those who delighted in "Youth's Endearing Charms," "Dulcie's Adventure," "Faith" and "A Dream or Two Ago" will delight still more in the photodrama founded on the naive misunderstandings of childhood such as the one at which Miss Minter now occupies her time from dawn to dark at Santa Barbara.

James Kirkwood, Miss Minter's director, can be counted on to get the very most there is to be gotten out of a photodrama. "The Innocence of Lizette," with James Kirkwood at the helm and Mary Miles Minter as the star, has every promise of being the most charming photoplay recently produced.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"DANCING WITH FOLLY" (Essanay).

Love is the foundation of the home. Without love, the home cannot last. In this production—a unit of Essanay's "Is Marriage Sacred?" series—the consequences of a loveless home are seen. The neglected wife seeks attentions outside her home. She does it innocently enough, but the result was inevitable. Having never known attention before, she is greatly influenced by that which is showered upon her by a man of evil designs—a social viper. She is lead unconsciously by him into a trap. Her husband detects her apparent perfidy. Then comes his great awakening. He realizes his neglect of his wife is responsible. They reorganize their home—this time with love as its foundation. Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew and Thomas Commerford appear in the leading roles, with E. H. Calvert as director.

TO ADVERTISE "THE GREAT SECRET."

When "The Great Secret"—Metro's new 15-episode adventure and mystery serial, in which Francis X. Bushman and Miss Beverly Bayne are starred—is released on Christmas day, it will have been launched with one of the largest and most thorough advertising campaigns that have thus far been used in exploiting motion pictures.

More than $70,000 will be spent by Metro to attract the attention of the American theater-going public to the early coming of "The Great Secret." Already upward of $65,000 worth of newspaper and billboard space has been contracted for. Of this sum, $30,000 is for billboards alone, with boards that start "somewhere in Maine" and continue to the Pacific.

Full pages, half pages and quarter pages in the great newspapers of the big cities, following one another in rapid succession, will call the public's notice to the debut of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne in a serial photoplay. In other communities the serial fiction story of "The Great Secret" will be used. No proper form of advertising—from 48-sheet stands down to the finest heralds for all fifteen episodes—has been overlooked.

MINUSA SCREENS INSTALLED IN PROMINENT HOUSES.

On pages 1327-8-9 of the December 2 issue there were published lengthy descriptions of the Savoy theater in Washington, D. C., and the Rialto in Baltimore, Md. Through an oversight on the part of the writers of these stories the fact that both of these theaters are using Minusa Gold Fibre screens was omitted. The Rialto is owned by the Linden Amusement Company, of Baltimore, which also operates the Royal theater in that city. This house, too, is equipped with a Minusa screen. Like the Savoy, which is a link in Crandall's chain of high class motion picture theaters in Washington, all of his other theaters have been fitted with the Minusa screen.

"PERCY THE MECHANICAL MAN" (Bray).

Herr Professor Doodlepoodle, N. U. T., famed in both hemispheres—and New Jersey, after many years of earnest effort and—short rations and long expectations, finally succeeds in completing the mechanical man, that is more than human. This contrivance he christened "Percy." I don't know why he named it Percy, nor does the Professor. He says that it looks as if it's name were Percy, and he'll leave it to anyone if it doesn't.

The sudden climax of his hopes and efforts was almost too much for the gentle Professor. He grasps the child of his skill in both arms, inadvertently pushing many buttons at once. Now Percy works by means of buttons. By pushing the "Walker Button" Percy is made to walk; by shoving the "Dish-washer Button" Percy is made to wash dishes. But the result of pressing a number of buttons, as did the Professor when he impulsively threw his arms about his invention, was unknown—for a second, or a small fraction thereof. Then there was a disturbance commonly known as a "rough house"—it is the only term properly descriptive. The Professor flies through the roof, interrupting an innocent cat who has had her eye on a sparrow luncheon. On landing he hits the roof, then Percy. As he gazes around the wreck of the shop, he realizes that he is ruined. But he has Percy! Percy shall recup the Professor's fortune! He will hire him out at a good salary, for Percy can do anything a man can do—and most of the things a woman can.

They pass down street and a sign in a dry goods emporium arrests the attention of the Professor: "Window Dresser Wanted." Percy is taken inside and introduced to the manager of the store. The manager wishes a demonstration and suggests that Percy dress a dummy to prove himself fitted for the job. Percy picks up the dummy, carries it behind the screen, and emerges with the fully and tastefully dressed figure. He is a success! He is hired on the spot and the Professor leaves—with the Dresser Button still working.

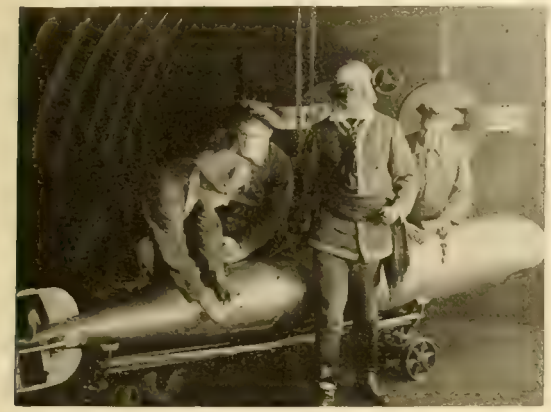
Percy gives a few spasmodic starts, and grabs the store manager, carrying him behind the screen! Soon articles of personal wear appear from back of the screen, then an enraged and outraged manager appears. That starts the fun—the rest is a riot. Lady customers are dressed in the latest styles for men, even the clergy is not exempt. When you see the Reverend Fiddle, D. D., beating it through the various departments dressed in—but we won't give it away, we've said more than we should now.

All this is done by J. R. Bray for the Paramount Program.

Submarine Feature at Broadway

"20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," Big Universal Subject, to Open December 24.

CARL LAEMMLE, President of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., has completed arrangements for taking over the active management of the Broadway Theater at Broadway and 41st street, on Dec. 24, in order to present "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," a film version of Jules Verne's wonderfully imaginative story of love and adventure beneath the depths of the sea. The picture has been completed after two years of constant effort.



Scene from "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" (Universal).

Verne's book, first published some fifty years ago, has been one of the most widely read of any piece of fiction ever printed, and his famous character, Captain Nemo, and all others of his fertile imagination employed in his story, has been faithfully reproduced in the Universal photoplay production. Devices invented by the Williamson Brothers, of Norfolk, Va., for undersea exploration and photography were utilized in the making of the picture, which is of eight reels, and some two thousand people were employed in the characters portrayed. The production is considered one of the most effective ever made by any photoplay concern and a long, successful run undoubtedly will be the result, as the great cost, unusual scientific value and mighty appeal of the picture places it at least on a par with any film productions that have heretofore been presented.

GAUMONTS FOR CHRISTMAS WEEK.
